Why I Show Paramount Pictures

By EDGAR F. KIRCHNER
Manager, Family Theatre,
Detroit, Mich.

SOME people have said to me that the Family Theatre, with its remarkable location, could have played to capacity business during those good old days with nothing but a music box as an attraction. Maybe they are right. The Family is situated right under the front windows of Detroit's city hall; it is the center of a fork of seven of the busiest streets in the nation and thousands of people are called past its door daily.

The Family Theatre during those good old times played just ordinary moving pictures. The people came and as long as they did, I didn't stop to analyze the picture market closely. It mattered little to me what brand of pictures we were showing, so long as the attendance figures held up—so we went merrily on our way, until——the business depression and hot weather slump hopped on us at the same time. Even our choice location was affected. People were hanging onto their money and bargaining closely for every purchase they made. It was then that I stopped to figure how to beat the hard times. I studied my booking sheets and talked with various exhibitors who were meeting with the same problem.

WAS there anything in the world that I could show that would stand an even chance of fighting the hard times? Someone asked: "Have you tried Paramount pictures?" and in reviewing the career of the Family Theatre I discovered that the house hadn't played a Paramount picture. I began to think the matter over. I realized that Paramount pictures were nationally advertised, that the people were familiar with them, and that they had a reputation for quality that certainly should bring an exhibitor a return on his investment if anything could.

I played my hunch and booked some Paramount pictures, and I firmly believe that it was one of the very best moves of my career. It was very noticeable in my receipts on the days I played Paramount, and I know for a fact that I have created a patronage at the Family that is a standing one through their use. My matinees are building up nicely and I have noticed a far different aspect in the class of people who come in.

Paramount pictures helped me beat the hard times bugaboo, and now that I have learned what they can do, I do not want to be caught without them again.

LARRY SEMON IN "THE SAWMILL"

This new Larry Semon Comedy is like other Larry Semon Comedies in just two particulars:

1. It was written and directed by Larry Semon.

2. It has hilarious comedy, thrills and production class.

In all other respects it is different.

It was filmed in the inaccessible Lake Hume region of California. Larry has a new leading woman. He introduces a new type of comedy role—he appears as a lumberjack. The lumberjack has been seen on stage and screen in dramatic action. But never before in a comedy.

Audiences are waiting for this comedy, for they have read about it in the newspapers. Thousands of front pages announced, several weeks ago, that Larry Semon and his company stopped work on their new comedy, "The Sawmill," to assist in fighting the biggest forest fire in California for twenty years.

"Mystery Melodrama teeming with suspense"

MYSTERY MELODRAMA TEEMING WITH SUSPENSE

Melodrama, the Irving V. Willat production "Fifty Candles," proves beyond a doubt, need not be "old timey" in order to contain the same thrills, excitement and intensity which marked the cheaper class of spoken drama twenty years ago. Especially when incorporated in a thoroughly modern constructed photoplay. "Fifty Candles" is melodrama, unadulterated, but equally rejuvenated, veneered with some extremely artistic touches, making as good photoplay of the kind as is usually seen. It embodies the same sort of mystery plot development as was identified with such old popular plays as "Across the Pacific," when melodrama bordered upon tragedy, but came out smiling with a "kick" at the finish. If they like substantial melodrama, enjoy being mystified, let "Fifty Candles" light your theatre entrance in incandescents; it is bound to ignite favorable comment.

Every One a Box-Office Drawing Card

Five of the best-known players of the screen pre-determine the box office success of "White Hands"—the mighty drama of white heat passion, and the greatest story C. Gardner Sullivan ever wrote.

Thrilling fight scenes that make you edge up in your chair; a helpless woman in a squalid settlement among a band of heartless men; a villainous dive keeper; a red-blooded hero, and a toddling bit of human drift-wood to bring happiness to all.

Such a picture! And such a title for sure-fire exploitation. Man—you never had a better chance to start off the New Year with a picture that will pack 'em in and make 'em yell for more.

See it today! It's a clean-up!

The De Havens Have Hit It!

That elusive quality of audience appeal which makes a good comedy drama a brilliant success in the theatres; that essential "something" which draws the enthusiasm of the people and sends them away talking about the show.

"Marry The Poor Girl"—the emphasis is on the Marry—has caught it. A bit of boudoir, perhaps; innocent but entangling situations, unexpected matrimonial mix-ups, clever comedy business, flashes of real drama, speed, class, surprises, complications, climaxes and a riotous finish

"Marry The Poor Girl" is bound to be a hit. It has the lure which puts lines in your lobby, it has a title worth exploiting, it has two stars famous on both stage and screen, it is lavish in its production, smart in its settings, satisfying in its entertainment.

It's as good a guarantee of big business as any comedy-drama can offer.

explanation as to the attitude which the managers of picture theatres in the three cities are inclined to take in viewing business conditions during 1922. And yet, back of it all, there is a spirit of optimism prevalent, many of the managers admitting in the one breath that while business is bad at the present time, that it is no worse than in other lines, and that nothing is to be gained by continual croaking, the future holding forth evidences of better times on their way.

Fred P. Elliott, Clinton Square Theatre, Albany, N. Y.: "While business will come back in 1922, it will be two or three years more before we reach anything like maximum. Business will pick up generally. We are now on the tail end of the panic. There will not be a tremendous increase in 1922, but there will be some, and every bit helps."

O. H. Stacy, Majestic Theatre, Albany: "Business can not get any worse. It is down to rock bottom now. The trouble is that if people can't find employment, you can't expect them to attend the picture theatre. However, I look for some betterment."

George Roberts, Colonial and Hudson, Albany: "The future doesn't look over favorable. The pictures we are showing are fully up to par, but one can not expect these to pack the houses when the people making up the audiences haven't got the money."

Samuel Suckno, Albany, Regent, Arbor and Delaware theatres, Albany: "I do not look for any business boom in 1922. In fact, the picture theatre will do well to hold its own. I find that people who used to come six times a week now come twice. This is due here to general business depression and the continued high cost of living. All exhibitors should endeavor to curtail overhead expenses as much as possible without lessening their attractions. The distributor and producer should work along the same line, as such will save many houses from closing."

William Berinstein, Colonial, Albany, as well as houses in Elmira: "To my way of thinking there will be no change until next fall, with from 10 to 30 per cent. in manufacturing establishments out of work, the story of poor attendance is easily accounted for."

John J. Walker, Barcli, Schenectady: "I am looking forward to 1922 as one of the worst years in the history of Schenectady, and I have been in business here for twenty years. My present Sunday business runs from $200 to $300 below normal. Producers and distributors should not continue to charge 1919 and 1920 prices for pictures in 1922. They should be willing to do their share."

J. E. Lincoln, Albany Theatre, Schenectady: "Economic conditions are bad. There is no money. Producers and distributors are asking too much for pictures."

William Shirley, Strand, Schenectady: "What does 1922 look like, you ask? Brutal! Business is in a chaotic state and while exhibitors are putting on the very best pictures obtainable, they are not drawing as they should. I do look for some improvement in the future, however."

C. W. Wheland, Proctor's Griswold, Troy: "I believe that things will pick up by the middle of next year and that we will eventually get back to the g times. Stores are not selling t and the slump in business an theatres is no greater than that being experienced in other lin street car strike, which ran eleve in Troy, certainly put a crimp business."

Big Pictures and Everlasting Plugging Reap Rewards, Say Buffalo Exhibit

THEATRES that can afford to put on big shows are doing big business, those that have to rely on a routine program of ordinary pictures are having a hard time of it. Briefly, that is the situation in Buffalo and surrounding territory at present.

Exhibitors have found that their patrons are shopping for their entertainment more than ever. They have also found that the only road to success is hard work. Successful showmanship today consists primarily of keeping everlastingly at it. Those who "plug" from morning to night are reaping the rewards at the box office. Those who book a picture and wait for the audience to assemble are figuring on how to keep out of the poorhouse.

An excellent example in Buffalo of how big shows will put a house over is seen in Shea's North Park. When this house opened its business was anything but encouraging; in fact, the company operating it really lost money, until Harold B. Franklin got the bright idea of putting on the same programs in the neighborhood house as shown in Shea's Hippodrome, running them day and date. From the inception of this policy the North Park, in spite of its location in the extreme northern end of the city, is attracting motor patrons from all parts of the city and several of the suburban towns. It is Buffalo's only first run neighborhood theatre. Of course few neighborhood houses can afford to put on big productions first run, but it is certainly easy picking for those that can.

Business has been picking up right along in most of the bigger theatres in Western New York and most exhibitors are optimistic of the future. Producers can aid greatly in bringing this era of prosperity nearer by satisfyng the public cry for originality. Patrons are tired of cut and dried stuff.

"An Optimistic Bunch"

Harold B. Franklin, managing director of Shea's Hippodrome and one of the most successful exhibitors in the country, in commenting on the present day situation said:

"If there ever was an optimistic bunch, it is the exhibitors of this country. It is this optimism and faith that will win through a very trying period. There is no question about it, picture patrons are becoming hard boiled! Audiences are not satisfied with the picture of yesterday. They expect the industry to keep pace with progress and give them newer and better productions.

"Too many pictures are inspired by the success of a particular type of story. A producer finds that his picture, in which a mother is the central theme, is a huge success. Immediately we have an avalanche of 'Mother' pictures. 'The Three Musketeers' is brought forth. Presto! We have twenty-six instead of three musketeers in one guise or another! Perhaps the locale is moved to Mexico or some other place than la belle France—but it is still 'The Three Musketeers.'

"It is surprising that producers do not realize that what the public wants n something which they have not r received; that the biggest successe those which give something new, a twist, a novel method of treatment. other words, what the public want originality.

"With good pictures exhibitors will be able to pull through the business depression which has hit every industry and which has rested rather lightly on the motion picture business. Three hundred and sixty-five days from now should see unbounded prosperity of which, without doubt, our industry will get its full share."

Skinner's Views

"Business conditions in the vicinity of the Victoria Theatre are not up to standard, basing my figures on the receipts of 1920," said Arthur L. Skinner, manager of the big Mark neighborhood house. "This is due mostly to the business depression which is universal and our immediate vicinity is no exception," continued Mr. Skinner.

"The outlook for an immediate revival is not bright and I do not look for any material increase within the next twelve months. The reason for this is that people who have been hit hardest by the present slump are in such financial difficulties with no prospect of immediate relief that it will take considerable time for them to get back to normal.

"Under present conditions the cost of operation is much too high, owing to the high cost of film. Until the producers can see the necessity of reducing prices to exhibitors, I cannot see any relief for us."

"A financial publication that came to my desk a few weeks ago seems to have hit the nail on the head with the following headline: 'It isn't hard times coming, just soft times passing,'" said Bruce Fowler, manager of the Elmwood Theatre, one of the big West Side neighborhood theatres.

"Business is what you make it—the individual exhibitor must rely upon his own judgment in the many angles of this business to show a successful business year or a losing one. All the beautiful hand-colored postal cards sent us by good friends conveying their sincere wish for a prosperous New Year won't amount to much unless we realize that 'It is not hard [illegible] coming, just soft times passing,' and [illegible] down to brass tacks.

[illegible] outlook for 1922 is work! The [illegible] who works the hardest and uses [illegible] unces of intelligence in connec- [illegible] his work will have a happy, [illegible] us New Year."

[illegible]eckerich, manager of the new [illegible]tate Theatre, can see no hard times [illegible] He declares that with consistent [illegible]sing and policy and the backing up [illegible] publicity with the "goods," always [illegible] home the well known bacon. Al- [illegible] keep faith with the public is Mr. [illegible]rich's motto.

[illegible]ou can't splash one week with a big [illegible]e and 'cheat' the following week," [illegible]id. "Business at our house has been [illegible]ng short of phenomenal. Much of [illegible], of course, we attribute to the new- [illegible]s of the house, its elaborate furnish- [illegible]ngs and polite employes. Service is a most important thing in attracting and holding patrons. We drill all our employes until they dream about service. Our programs have been consistent. We have been maintaining the same high standard every week since opening. I see no hard times ahead for the hard worker. I feel that the day of the picture with a star and no story is gone. The people want stories, not stars."

No Early Relief—Smith

Howard J. Smith, manager of the Palace Theatre and president of the Western New York unit of the M.P.T.O.A., declares that nothing is more certain than a return to prosperity, but thinks it is quite a long way off. He said:

"The business in our territory since last March has been not over 70 per cent. of normal. This loss of 30 per cent. has been due to general business conditions which still continue. Every week or two some pen driver in Washington gets publicity on the statement that three more men out of 3,000,000 have found jobs, but the real condition has not yet changed.

"It is not possible to predict the future of the picture business without, at the same time, predicting the course of general business. That is a large order. Nothing is more certain than the return of prosperity, sometime, but the when is what interests us all right now.

"I fail to see any signs sufficiently clear to indicate real prosperity. The winter season or the months of January and February are the heart of the best season and with those ahead of us we should look forward to a slight temporary improvement, to be succeeded by the usual declines during Lent and the summer. It looks to me as if the best we can expect is an improvement by next fall. In the meantime lower film prices are the only possible salvation of the business."

Kansas City

Conditions Bad Now But Early Improvement Expected

BUSINESS conditions in general have been very unsatisfactory the past year, and in particular the moving picture trade, at least here, has felt a decided change from the previous years. The first six months of 1921, were very good, exhibitors say, and indications were that the trade would experience one of the best years since its opening year; but the past six months, exhibitors agree, have been extremely dull.

Kansas City has had several conditions that other cities have not felt, one of these being the mild weather during the entire winter. Only a few days have been regular winter days and this is certain to retard trade in this line, as in others. People seem to be rather hesitant about spending money for anything, and in the way of amusements, it is said that people who are not economizing in other lines have foregone their usual number of shows, which, in itself, has hurt business.

Also, this winter, Kansas City has had an incipent smallpox epidemic, which handicapped practically every business, and the theatres were among the first to feel this. This, however, is now entirely over and people are again resuming their habits, so that exhibitors think that the harm this has done in the past will not be a factor in business after the first of the year. There was no quarantine.

Another reason for the present serious conditions is that Kansas City has an oversupply of seats and cannot supply business for the number of theatres now doing business here. In regard to this, Milton Field, general manager of the Newman, remarked:

Added 5,600 Seats in Year

"During the past three months Kansas City has had an addition of 5,600 seats, without a corresponding increase in the population. This has been very detrimental to our business, and has, in fact, proved to be one of the biggest factors in making present conditions as serious as they are. We are very hopeful of the new year, and are expecting a definite improvement in business after January 1. Conditions are at this time very bad, and without a change for the better with the New Year, it is evident that they will become even more serious. The first six months of 1921 were good, and though the past six months have not been so good as the early part of 1921, or 1920, we are hoping for business after the first to improve, so that the first months of 1922 can be compared favorably with other and better years."

This seems to be a feature of business that has affected all the exhibitors, as other opinions expressed were to the same effect.

The general opinion among exhibitors seems to be that business conditions cannot continue as during the last few months. With the new year it is believed that a change will be noticed by the different houses, and optimistic managers believe it will be for the better, as several of the detrimental factors of 1921 are past, and at least as seen from now, the New Year appears to be free of any features harmful to business interests.

Philadelphia

Stanley Company Finds Business "Looking Up"

AMONG the many exhibitors interviewed regarding the prospects for a prosperous New Year during 1922, there seems to be the prevailing spirit of optimism everywhere in Philadelphia.

It was difficult however to secure an analytical forecast concerning the motion picture business, excepting from two men, Jules E. Mastbaum and George Kline. However, there seems to be an underlying current of opinion that there are better times in store for exhibitors. One thing is certain and it is that the improvement being looked for will certainly be here during the spring.

Indications which seem to point this way are the fact that the textile mills are nearly all working full time while the metal trade shows signs of a general activity. Another encouraging fact was the announcement made in one of Philadelphia's leading newspapers that department store managers claim that this year they sold more merchandise than any other time during the holidays.

Jules E. Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Company of America, predicts a much brighter outlook. He said:

"I am convinced that the amusement loving public has been falsely imbued with the idea that motion picture and amusement enterprises as a whole are struggling in a morass of difficulties. True, as in all business conducted on a large scale, the industry has been beset with hardships from time to time. The war made no exception in its dire effects on this national enterprise, nor again has it been free from the even more serious inroads of the unsettled conditions and general unemployment subsequent to the armistice. And yet the producers and theatre managers have survived, and in their daily battle not once have they submitted to unkind fate, but have gritted their teeth and held on through it all. As a result there is not on record a single notable managerial collapse.

His Company Prosperous

"Taking courage from this meritorious example, the public has responded nobly and business is rapidly approaching the normal. I am happy to admit that the Stanley Company of America is flourishing and enjoying an unprecedented prosperity; that there is a constantly growing clientele for the photoplay whose demands for the best films are increasingly exacting. This fine discrimination is the hope of the industry, and it will act alike as a stimulus to the producer and the men and women devoting themselves to the picture creation of the best type. The picture theatre can only flourish by its attractiveness and its satisfying the requirements of the public, as is true in all fields of public entertainment."

Mr. Mastbaum keeps in close touch with the business conditions generally and he feels that the picture theatre is a barometer of general conditions. Such being the case, he feels that there is a most encouraging improvement in the business through the country, for attendance at the picture theatres has been improving greatly since the summer slump, he says, and it is to be anticipated that the new year will see a great boom in the industry.

Kline Confident

George Kline, representative for George Bennethum, who operates a chain of theatres throughout the state, has the utmost confidence for an unusually prosperous New Year during 1922.

At a meeting of prominent bankers and financiers held in Philadelphia recently, where the discussions were about the future of the business conditions for the United States, it was said that there is a larger reserve of gold in this country than anywhere else in the world. It was at this conference that Mr. Kline became convinced that the future for the exhibitor is brighter than ever before. Therefore, under the present stated conditions, this country becomes the most powerful factor in restoring the equilibrium of the world. Furthermore, money will be available to every foreign country for loans, providing that it shall be used to purchase American manufactured goods. Under this plan Mr. Kline foresees the reopening of idle mills in this country and the reinstatement of thousands of unemployed.

"Motion pictures, being the leading entertainment and recreation for millions of Americans, will certainly benefit during the course of events just as sure as the sun rises and sets," said Mr. Kline.

Michigan Awaits Return of Prosperity in 1922 with the Fullest Confidence

WHEN Old Father Time writes his summary of conditions in Michigan he will have to say: "The year of 1921 was undoubtedly the poorest for the exhibitors in the history of the motion picture industry." However, he will also state that the year of 1922 is certain to show great improvement.

During the previous years, Michigan enjoyed great prosperity due to the fact that this is the center of the world for motor car manufacturing. Practically every one of the larger cities has "motor manufacturing" for its leading industry. This is true of Detroit, Pontiac, Lansing, Saginaw, Flint, Jackson and Kalamazoo. In Grand Rapids, the second largest city in Michigan, we have the furniture industry as the main employer of labor; in Battle Creek, Bay City and Port Huron, the leading industry is not motors.

Previous Prosperity

During the years 1919 and 1920, following the Armistice, the demand for motor cars was so great that the motor factories were paying unheard prices for labor, skilled and unskilled. This naturally brought to Michigan a great many single men and they spent their money "like water." Almost any kind of amusement proved highly profitable, and exhibitors themselves became careless in their manner of presentation, neither were they very particular about the class of pictures they booked. The slogan in Michigan seemed to be "easy come—easy go" and the exhibitors "coined" money.

But the motor industry hit a terrible slump the latter part of 1920 which was really not seriously felt until January of 1921. The slump continued until the early part of the summer; then conditions improved and they have been improving steadily. While at the present time none of the factories are busy, the outlook for the New Year is exceedingly good. Manufacturers are planning on almost normal production and men who are authorities in the industry predict that 1922 will be one of the best years the motor industry has ever had, and they are preparing accordingly. In fact, already there is great activity at many of the accessory manufacturing plants, which is indeed a healthy sign.

Prices Stable

Admission prices in Michigan seem to be about where they were for the past few years. In a few instances, there have been reductions, but on the whole, prices are about where they have been right along. Exhibitors contend that it is almost impossible to lower their admission prices with the present high film rentals on good productions, the high wages to musicians, operators and high overhead costs. They do not believe that a few cents off the admission price is going to stimulate new business. In fact, they believe that if conditions were normal the present scale of prices would not be considered out of reason. The public expects more today when they go into a picture house and the exhibitors seem to be "giving the public what it demands."

We believe that we would be "hitting the tack on the head" if we were to say that business the past year has been fully 50 per cent. off as a general average. Some say it is only one-third off, while others say it is sixty per cent. off, all depending upon the city, the class of industries there and the location of the house.

In Detroit and other large cities in the state, competition is much keener than it was formerly. With increased seating capacity and less people employed, it could hardly be expected that theatres would be doing their normal business, and when conditions do improve the industry will have to face keen competition. And it's the old story that every time a new theatre goes up in a city "somebody must get hurt." This applies particularly to Detroit, Flint and a number of other large cities where new theatres have been erected the past year.

When all is said and done, one feature of the present situation stands out forcibly—the public is waiting for the big special productions and they are spending the money to see them. The proof of the pudding is the success of the big pictures released this year and the fact that exhibitors are booking them readily and for longer runs than usual.

Kunsky Optimistic

John H. Kunsky, who operates a chain of ten theatres in Detroit and who is just completing the New Capitol, seating 4,250, which is to be an exclusive picture house in the downtown section, says: "We have suffered like everybody else, although we have tried in every way to keep up the quality of our shows week in and week out. We believe that the picture business will show great improvement just as soon as things in general open up, which is bound to be the early part of 1922. We had good times before 1921 and if we just have patience we will have them again."

Phil Gleickman, managing director of the Broadway-Strand Theatre, Detroit, said: "Business has been off since the early part of the year and the summer was the worst in the history of the house, owing to the long period of hot weather. However, business has shown great improvement since September and we have had some mighty big weeks on our big specials. I look for much better business starting with the New Year."

W. S. Butterfield, of the Butterfield Circuit, operating some twenty houses in the larger cities of Michigan, declared: "We have been hit very hard in most of our towns owing to the slump in the motor car industry. We have found it necessary to even close some of our theatres. However, I am still optimistic enough to believe that the coming year will show a great improvement. We find there is a demand for good pictures, and while it is not possible to gross as much money as we did in former years, we do find that the better pictures draw greater box-office receipts than the ordinary pictures, showing that the public knows what it wants—and it wants good pictures."

Expect Normalcy in the Fall of 1922

THAT the depression in towns both large and small for the past year and a half has reached "rock bottom," and that the dawning of 1922 will witness a slow-but-sure return to normal conditions, is the consensus of opinion among the exhibitors of the state. At a time when the average exhibitor in this territory is losing money faster than he made it during the boom-days during the war, it is an inspiring sound to hear the cheering note of optimism sounded by the real showmen of this territory almost to a man. The indomitable spirit of the fighter who cannot be beaten, evident even now when handicapped on every hand, is one of the healthiest signs to indicate that the "come-back" of the exhibitors will be sure.

When business was at its peak, thousands of unnecessary expenses were allowed to creep into the daily operation of the theatres, because the steady flow of shekels through the box office was sufficient to take care of even the inflated overhead and then leave a greater profit than the average showman had ever before seen. For the past twelve months with their backs against the wall, exhibitors have been weeding out these "luxuries" in operating expense and will go into the new year with a daily overhead at least 25 per cent. less than that of eighteen months ago.

"The year 1922 will see a gradual resumption of normal conditions in the exhibiting field," is the opinion of Percy W. Wells of Wilmington, president of the North Carolina M.P.T.O. "We are just one year nearer normal conditions than we were at the beginning of 1921, and have won many of our victories of readjustment during the closing months of this year.

"However, I do not look for the exhibitors of this territory to make any money before the early fall of 1922, and the average theatre owner will be satisfied if he can win back his losings of the past year and be able to start with a balanced ledger by September, 1922. The exhibitors, as a whole, are now operating at a minimum expense and are in a position to declare a profit on a much smaller day's gross business than during the inflated period of the past several years. Taxes are gradually being reduced, and the producers as a group are nearer than ever before to making pictures that have a box office value instead of trying to force mediocre attractions upon the public. I do not look for an immediate recovery and do not believe the average exhibitor will break even much before next fall."

Henry B. Varner of Lexington, executive committee of the M.P.T.O.A. and secretary of the state body is one of the keenest analysts of conditions in the country. His opinion varies only very slightly with that of Mr. Wells.

"It is my opinion," states Mr. Varner, "that the depression in the picture business has hit rock bottom. I believe we will see a gradual increase, beginning with the new year, but not back to normal before the fall of 1922. Congress must reduce taxes, the railroads must reduce rates, and the farmer, who is the backbone and support of the country, must harvest and market a profitable crop before prosperity returns to the average citizen. In the meantime, we must cut overhead expenses, work harder and more intelligently, and give to our patrons better and cleaner pictures—pictures that will educate, elevate and amuse the people."

California

Business Has Held Up and Outlook Is Promising

BUSINESS conditions in California, particularly in the northern and central parts of the state served by San Francisco film exchanges, vary widely since the prosperity of this territory depends upon greatly diversified pursuits. In general, the business depression that has been felt throughout the country has been less acute here than elsewhere, largely because of satisfactory crops and good prices for most farm products. Exhibitors in some cities have done a better business during 1921 than in 1920, while in other sections there has been a falling off amounting to as much as one-third.

M. L. Markowitz of the Strand Theatre, San Francisco, who also operates houses at Fresno, Modesto, Oakland and Gilroy, states that business has been a little quiet in some of these outside places, but that the outlook seems quite bright.

"It is true," he says, "that farmers have harvested large crops and that prices have been good, but returns have been slow in coming in. They are just getting paid for their 1920 crops, in many instances, and have not been spending money freely. They have big sums due them and payments on 1921 crops promise to be made soon, so that business in the country districts should be more active during 1922.

"The Strand Theatre in San Francisco did a better business during 1921 than during the previous year. We paid more for films, made a more careful selection and made more profits. We also made a gain at one of our Oakland houses after spending some money in making it more attractive. The other house in that city on which no improvements were made is showing a falling off in business. I do not think that a reduction in prices will help business and do not propose to start anything along this line. When film rentals come down then admission prices can be reduced, but not sooner. I see no reason why 1922 should not be at least as good as 1921 and will be satisfied with the same showing."

James Beatty of the Liberty Theatre, San Jose, said:

"Considering business conditions in general, I would say that the picture business is in good shape. The outlook looks good and to show our confidence in the future of the business we are going ahead with plans for building a fine new house and for remodeling and enlarging the present one. I feel that it is a time to be careful and pick shows with discriminating judgment, showing the best the market affords. Theatre costs are high and until these come down there can be no reduction in admission prices."

C. C. Griffin of the Piedmont Theatre, Oakland, expresses the opinion that the bottom of the amusement slump has been reached. He is encouraged to believe that from now on there will be a improvement, but does not look for a rapid gain as business in all lines is feeling its way. The outlook for 1922 is considered quite promising, particularly in contrast with the showing made during the last half of 1921.

H. J. Gosliner, manager of the Edison Theatre on Powell street, San Francisco, refuses to class business as being quiet. He has a house of 400 seats and is doing about as usual.

"I feel that the outlook is quite encouraging," he said, "but do dislike to see some of the smaller houses advertise that they are back on the old price basis. It gives the public the wrong impression and will not increase patronage. Lower prices will not bring in enough more people to make up the difference and I am only sorry that I did not go to 25 cents, instead of 20 cents, when I named the new schedule."

Eugene H. Roth of the California, Imperial, Portola and Granada theatres, said:

"The present slump I do not regard seriously. The nations of the world are endeavoring to straighten out their differences which will reflect good throughout the world. Gradually and patiently we must abide the time until these conditions readjust themselves.

"Speaking for our industry, the exhibitors that have honestly striven to give their patrons consistent and wholesome entertainment and give untiring effort and energy to their programs, are suffering less than those who get down to their places of business at noon and seek other entertainment evenings that take them away from their business. As a result they have found themselves slipping.

"The pictures for most part have been no worse this year than in any of the other years that pictures were produced. The sincere producers are giving the same strict attention to their productions and have realized that the matter of rentals has been geared to such a degree that they were prohibitive, and they have seen the wisdom of encouraging the exhibitors by meeting the conditions as they present themselves at this time. There are a few, however, that are still striving to get the last drop of blood, but if we watch their career they will be in the past tense list.

"I believe all communities are overseated and as a result weeding out will necessarily follow. And perhaps, after all, this depression has served a good moral lesson. It has had a tendency to cleanse the industry, to readjust its affairs in a more substantial manner. And I think that very shortly we will find the theatrical interests in a much happier frame of mind.

"The energetic manager must of necessity preview all of the feature pictures offered and thereby exercise the keenest judgment in selecting photoplays that will meet with the demands of the public and with the environment of his surroundings, also the selection of the lesser film offerings such as educationals, scenics, slow motion pictures, topics, and carefully assemble the weekly current events of world's news. The film part of the program is thereby set and he is only responsible for its selection. But he is responsible to his patrons for all the other embellishments that go to round out a good entertainment such as stage effects, prologues and, perhaps most important, the musical treatment, which is the backbone of all entertainment.

"This is no time to get panicky, but the proper time to take your coat off and work harder than ever before to let the masses feel that the sun always shines on the theatrical industry. Therefore, let us not cry 'wolf.'"

Florida

IN discussing the outlook for 1922, C. D. Cooley, manager of the Victory, Strand, Grand and Monita theatres, Tampa, Fla., said: "Tampa is one of the soundest and solidest cities in the entire south. Judging from the unprecedented building activities and the way new residents are reported to be arriving, the summer of 1922 undoubtedly will be the best ever enjoyed by the theatres of this city.

"Right at the present time (December 23) business in all local houses is from 25 to 30 per cent. off. This is only a temporary condition and is the result of several factors. Among them is the fact that the business depression, which previously has been felt in other sections, is being felt in Tampa for the first time. Another is that cigar factories, the city's principal industry, were tied up for ten months by a strike. There is also some reason to believe that interruptions caused by the holiday season has had an effect.

"Immediately after Christmas we look forward to improved business, especially as the tide of tourists which visits Tampa annually is due to arrive about the first of the year. The spring months probably will be a little off, but by summer conditions ought to be way above normal, and we expect business to be ahead of anything yet experienced in this city."

No Gloom Afflicting Chicago Showmen But a Real, Cheery, New Year Optimism

CHICAGO, the great Midwest metropolis, the hub of many big industries, once a significant center of moving picture production, has, within a short space of time, made an about-face and the close of the year 1921 sees it a potential city of picture theatres. In point of number it runs a close second to New York. In point of class it leads the world. A quick survey of building activities during 1921 reveals the fact that approximately $10,000,000 have been invested in picture theatres by three of the biggest operators among exhibitors in the world, Balaban & Katz, Ascher Brothers and Lubliner & Trinz, who have contributed to the theatre world such magnificent examples as the Tivoli, Senate, Roosevelt and Chicago theatres, aggregating a seating capacity of 15,000. Beyond these there have been built a number of smaller theatres in various sections of this city.

The year of 1922, like 1921, in the consensus of opinion of not alone exhibitors but exchangemen in Chicago, is going to reward fighters!

"Notwithstanding an indication of overproduction and subnormalcy of present business conditions, the exchange in this territory manned with fighters in their sales force are going to reap profits next year, just like every other year," says W. C. Brimerly, Chicago manager for Vitagraph. "We will not tolerate the type of man who says it can't be done. We believe there is a greater demand for good pictures now than ever before, and providing the right kind of sales methods are used, good pictures can make good anywhere."

From Nathan Ascher, head of Ascher Brothers circuit, comes the following: "Our cheerful outlook, which we certainly have for 1922, is based on our faith that business conditions in general will be better. People will have more money, for there is no doubt that business everywhere will be much better after the New Year, and it will be found that there will be a general increase in theatre patronage. By this we mean that people nowadays may have the money for theatre going, but they are just not in the mood for it; the psychological effect of the stories of the great amount of unemployment, business depression and hard times tales, giving them the feeling that they should hang onto the dollar even though they could well afford to invest it in theatre tickets.

Nate Ascher Cheerful

"After the first of the year, every branch of the business will be in better condition, and the theatre—which was the last to feel the effect of the business depression and general after-the-war reconstruction period—will be the first to feel the effect of the 'better times.' Our business at present is down between 30 and 35 per cent. of normal, and while we do not expect to ever again enjoy the affluent 'war days,' we surely expect to get back to pre-war basis. However, we shall make a small saving on the repeal of the 5 per cent. tax, and with the anticipated increase in admissions, the exhibitor will find himself well on the road to normalcy after the first of the year."

Aaron Jones, of the firm of Jones, Linick & Schaeffer, predicts there will be a general getting together of the producers, who will realize that it is impossible to arrive at normalcy until after some sort of working agreement is introduced.

Sees Better Co-operation

"The present high salaries of stars," he stated, "and high cost of producing has kept the rentals very high, which in turn has forced the theatre manager to maintain his old scale of high-priced admission, but I predict that the get-together movement of the producers will cut the cost, which, in its turn, will cut the rentals, and by this time next year we shall have arrived at a more reasonable state of admission prices and cost operation.

"Another thing—there will be very few theatres built in 1922, because most of the larger cities, and even the smaller towns are greatly overseated. By this, I do not mean that an old theatre should not be replaced with a new one, (Mr. Jones is building a new theatre to replace McVicker's Theatre) but when an old theatre is torn down it is an improvement without increasing the seating capacity. Another great improvement that I foresee in the year 1922 will be better relations between the employer and employe. This will offset the greedy tactics of unscrupulous business agents of the union."

All Optimistic

Sam Katz, of Balaban & Katz, also predicts fewer building operations, and stated that theatre business will be better "because every other business will be in better condition next year. The theatrical world will feel the first return on all business reconstruction now under way."

George E. Braddock, manager of the Ardmore, a 685-seat house located at Argyle and Kenmore avenues, has an optimistic attitude for 1922. "The smaller neighborhood houses are looking forward to an era of greater prosperity," he says. "We base this assertion on two facts, the first, that there will be a general betterment in general conditions, which of course will be reflected in theatre attendance. Our second reason is that the bigger neighborhood theatres are putting on a combination musical concert and vaudeville show, as well as a motion picture program. We believe there are still some people in the world who go to theatres to see motion pictures, and that is the class we will cater to. We expect to play new pictures, allowing the bigger neighborhood theatre perhaps seven to fourteen days' protection, and then bringing the picture directly to our theatre. We believe that the lower prices will be an attraction."

Toledo

Better Labor Conditions Inspire Confidence

THAT the picture business in Toledo and territory tributary thereto has seen its worst days, and that from now, with labor conditions bettering, the industry will rapidly come into its own, is the consensus of opinion of the leading picture owners of this district.

While Toledo and this territory was very hard hit, many factories being shut down here the past four months, yet this city was far better off than many cities of a larger population surrounding it. It was expected that the Overland, Toledo's largest factory, would close down in October, but instead Willys cut the price on the Overland and Willys Knight cars. This brought in so many orders that the factory has been kept going on half force right up to December 21. From December 21 to January 3 the factory is closed for inventory. On January 3, however, the Overland will open with renewed vigor and Willys states that by March 1 the factory will again be running above normal and will at least employ 12,000 workers.

The keeping open of the Overland greatly aided the picture houses in Toledo. The Rivoli, which runs high class pictures and seven acts of vaudeville, for instance, have only had two losing weeks since last August. The other houses, however, outside of Loew's Valentine, have been lucky to break even.

The exhibitors, however, are not in the least bit discouraged, but with the Overland going at capacity predict that they will more than easily make up their losses in the first three months of the coming year, and that with business resuming its normal trend, 1922 should be a record-breaking year for them. With this end in view the local owners are fighting among themselves to secure the big films they believe will prove box office winners with the public.

Harvey C. Horator, managing director of the Alhambra and the Pantheon, is very enthusiastic over the 1922 outlook. He has booked for immediate showing such attractions as "Connecticut Yankee," "Theodora," "Hail the Woman," "Molly O" and "Turn to the Right."

Mr. Horator says: "The less we say about 1921 the better. I don't believe any of us made any money. It was not the fault of the pictures but the public simply was not working and did not have the money. In short, that is the story for 1921. I look, however, for 1922 to be a winner. Financial conditions in this city are improving daily. The banks are now willing to loan money at six per cent. to manufacturers so that they may go on with their business, something they refused to do in 1921. The big Overland factory has more orders for cars for 1922 delivery than any in their history. This means but one thing: the men of Toledo will again be at work. They must have amusement. They will attend our shows and so I am booking the best attractions I can secure for both my theatres."

Mr. Gertsle, manager director of Loew's Valetine, says: "I can't complain of our business since September 1. "Way Down East" played two weeks, breaking all records, and "The Sheik" did a wonderful business. "The Affairs of Anatol" and "The Three Musketeers" did well the first week, but I must confess they fell down the second due to financial conditions here. On the other hand I had Norma Talmadge in "The Branded Woman" the week before Christmas, which is one of the worst weeks of the year for our business, and this picture did exceptionally good business. I expect Mary Pickford in "Little Lord Fauntleroy" for the two holiday weeks to break all records. I understand that the financial condition of Toledo is rapidly improving and I can see nothing in front of us but better business."

Pete Sun, manager of the Rivoli Theatre, combination house, which seats 3,000, says: "We have only had two losing weeks since last August and I look for no more. Things look bright despite the fact Toledo has been very hard hit. The reason for our business, which I believe has been better than most houses in this section of the country, being so good, is because we have not cut the quality or quantity of our shows in the face of impending panicky times. Several factories are looking for sites in Toledo and as soon as building resumes a normal state, I believe the business in the theatres will be back to normal. I can see nothing ahead of us but one of the most prosperous years in the theatrical business."

Pittsburgh

Early Return to Prosperity Is Expected

AT the present time the amusement business, as well as other industries in the Pittsburgh section, is suffering the worst of the business depression. In normal times the Pittsburgh district is the greatest manufacturing center in the country. Industries here are always the first to feel a boom and the last to suffer depression. Business in film theatres here was still normal long after other sections were complaining of a let-down in receipts. And it is an assured fact that this section will be the first to see the coming of better days.

The many mills and factories here that were the last in the country to close, according to indications, will be the first to open in the near future. Already, some of these plants are working as high as 75 per cent.

The city of Pittsburgh proper has not suffered so much as the surrounding towns, which are entirely dependent upon coal miners and mill workers. Then, too, a suburb of Pittsburgh, East Liberty, has not suffered as much as the city proper. East Liberty is a fashionable residence center and business has been fairly close to normal here.

Although many of the theatre managers are not inclined to much optimism, the assurance that the factories are beginning to work makes it a reasonable certainty that Pittsburgh will lead the way to normalcy.

What Exhibitors Say

When asked about business conditions and prospects for a prosperous New Year, several prominent exhibitors of this section had the following to say:

Hear Jack Donovan, manager of the Regent Theatre, East Liberty: "The weather has helped us a lot. The days have been pleasant, and had we suffered much cold weather, business would have fallen off considerably. In my estimation, admission prices at film theatres should be lowered, in order to bring about a very prosperous 1922. This, of course, cannot be done without the co-operation of the exchanges. As long as their prices stay where they are now, we cannot lower our admission prices and make money. So here's hoping the weather remains as fine as it has during the past fall, and the exchanges cut their rental prices."

Encouragement comes from Earle M. Forsthye, of the Star Theatre, Canonsburg, Pa., who says: "Of course business is not what it should be, but we have not had a week yet wherein we have lost money. It looks to me, with the mills opening now, that business will increase each month and get back to normal by next fall. I even have faith to say that I expect a return to the good times of 1920, by the end of the year 1922."

To Turn in May

Mark Browar, head of the theatre enterprise which bears his name, controlling the Kenyon Theatre on the North Side and the Victoria and Centre Square in the uptown section, says he can see no improvements until next May, and with that belief expects to begin the erection of a 2,000-seat house on the North Side at that time.

Nathan Friedberg, head of the Associated Theatres, controlling the Garden Theatre on the North Side, the American on the South Side and the Triangle and Alhambra in East Liberty, has the following to say:

"I have been in the picture game for ten years, all of which time I have been resident manager of the Alhambra Theatre, and I have never seen a year like the one we have just gone through, not only in our business but in every other line of work as well. I can remember other years, in the days just preceding the Christmas season, how crowded the streets were, and look at them now! The streets are empty and the house almost as bad. In other years, the house was still packed for the last show after the stores closed. I blame the storekeepers partly for this. Their stores were closed until just a few days before the holidays, their window displays were nothing extraordinary and as a result other interests suffered."

When asked if he thought the lowering of admission prices would tend to increase profits, Mr. Friedberg said:

"Emphatically no! You must have the best picture, and the best advertising. Then you'll get the crowds. Give them a poor picture and you won't fill the house if you let them in gratis."

Boston

Good Exploitation Needed to Increase Business

OLD MAN GLOOM continues to retain his strangle-hold on the mental attitude of the local theatre owners and exchange men as the year wanes, and none cares to be quoted on present conditions or is willing to hazard a prognostication as to what the future may hold in store. They see a tiny ray of sunshine slowly breaking through the dark clouds of adversity, but their optimism has received an awful jolt during the past few months and it is difficult for them to believe that even this ray is real. They think that possibly it may turn out to be a mirage.

The past few months have been tough for all. There is no gainsaying that. And this applies to the great majority of the show-houses. Of course there have been some exceptions, where the name of some particular star or the advertising and exploitation has directed unusual attention to some film, and exceptional business has resulted.

This was notably so in the case of "Over the Hill," which had a long run at the Tremont Temple and later played to popular prices at a number of the second-run houses; "The Three Musketeers," where Doug and Mary came down to the opening, and which broke all records for attendance and box-office receipts at the Selwyn Theatre; "The Affairs of Anatol," where the police had to be called several times to keep the crowd in line before the box-office; "The Old Nest," "Little Lord Fauntleroy," and, perhaps, a few others that might be mentioned, including the "Queen of Sheba,' which is now on its final week of a successful run.

By and large, however, it has been the exceptional films, with the exceptional exploitation, that have been drawing the big audiences, and exploitation has been by no means the least factor in this success.

Some day the theatre owners in this section, and the exchange men as well, are going to realize they are behind the procession in this very essential exploitation feature. They are going to learn, as many another wise business man has long since learned, that it takes money to make money. In other words they have got to develop some sort of an unusual appeal if they are to attract the attention of the money-spending public, or learn how to make the appeal sufficiently strong to coax the money from those who are loath to part with it.

It does one a world of good, after a talk with some of the Boston pessimists in the business, to drop in at the shop of Louis Leftin, who does the greater part of the scenic exploitation for the Boston theatres. For Louis is an optimist. He radiates sunshine. His enthusiasm is contagious. And he has been doing his best to impart some of this radiant optimism to the world in general and to the Boston theatrical men in particular. His success in this line has not been exactly phenomenal, up to this time, but he has not lost heart. He is still at it.

"Of course I realize that it is difficult to convince a man that he ought to get out and spend money when it is not coming in, but, to my mind, that is the very time to do it," says Louie. "If you want the business, you've got to go after it. And if your business depends upon the interest of the public, you've got to attract that interest.

"In the picture game you must have something more than the mere picture if you want to hold the interest of your audience and send them away with the desire to come again. I believe the time is coming when the wise manager will exploit his house from the stage to the front, and will make it so attractive that the people cannot keep away.

"I don't mean that outlandish methods should prevail, or that weird features or great splashes of color should be utilized to produce startling effects and thus attract temporary attention.

"People as a whole are artistic. Of course this is true in degree. Some are more artistic than others. But way down deep in the sensibilities of almost every person there is a hankering for that which is beautiful, that which appeals to the best that is in them, an almost reverent feeling that finds its answer when the eye or the ear sees or hears something that touches it deeply.

"That is what I mean. For instance you may go into the very finest theatre to see what you have given to understand is a picture of extraordinary worth. The critics have said it is and it probably is. While you are waiting for that picture to be shown the organ, or the orchestra if there is one, wails out some melody that may be fine and well rendered. But it has nothing to do with the picture. You might just as well be in a church. And when the picture is flashed on the screen your interest has waned. It does not touch you as it should.

"But that is not the only thing. Too little care is taken in the exploitation of the theatre's offerings, on the outside of the house. Some managers appear to think that if they have a few signs painted, with plenty of color, reds, blues yellows and greens, they have achieved the object of attracting the public's attention.

"Few managers, however, have any idea of color values or how they may be made to appeal to the public. The element of expense also cuts a figure—too much of a figure to my mind, when results are what is wanted—and it is difficult to convince the ordinary manager that the inherent artistic sense of the public, to which I referred, must be reached if its attention is to be properly focussed upon any given thing."

Indiana

M. P. T. O. Head Not Enthusiastic

BOX office receipts at practically all of the picture theatres in Indianapolis and other Hoosier cities have suffered a decided slump during the last few months, as compared with those of the same period of 1920, and prospects for 1922 are none too rosy, according to reports from various Indiana exhibitors to Gustave G. Schmidt, president of the Indiana Exhibitors' Association.

Part of the slump in attendance is believed by the exhibitors to be due to the unemployment situation and general business depression, and a part of it to the effect of testimony at the recent trial in San Francisco of a well-known picture star.

Mr. Schmidt is of the opinion that it will be at least a year or two until the business of exhibitors recovers from the effects of the damage done by the trial in San Francisco, and he says that the trial resulting in a revival of all kinds of censorship agitation, "blue law" enforcement and other things harmful to the moving picture business.

"We exhibitors out in Indiana were working along nicely with our Parent-Teachers' Associations, Boards of Endorsers, etc.," said Mr. Schmidt, "and then along comes this San Francisco episode and knocks about all the good faith the industry, that we had been able to build up, into a cocked hat."

Another thing which has had a serious effect on business conditions in theatre circles, and other lines as well, has been the alleged failure of Congress to do anything constructional in the way of making it possible for European countries to have credit. Until such credit is established, there is really no us for American producers to produce much, Mr. Schmidt says, and as a result business in all lines is bound to suffer.

There are some exhibitors who believe that within the next three or four months the entire country will awake to an era of prosperity and that their business will profit accordingly. The disarmament conference in Washington, the settlement of the Irish question and other world matters of a like nature, it is believed, will have a tendency to loosen up money in the United States as soon as the business balance for the year of 1921 is reached.

Los Angeles

Silver Lining Very Much in Evidence

SURVEY of conditions in the Los Angeles' territory reveals an improvement during the last few weeks and brighter prospects for the coming year. The opinion of exchange and theatre managers is that the bottom of the slump was struck a few weeks ago and that from now on conditions will be better in all branches of the business. Exchanges report good feeling and optimism among exhibitors throughout the territory, and say there is no talk of a reduction in admission prices except in isolated instances.

Col Lesser, vice-president of West Coast Theatres, controlling fifty houses, including the Kinema and Alhambra, first run houses in this city, and large theatres in Venice, Bakersfield and other important California towns, says reports coming in from his chain tell of an above normal pre-Christmas business and increased attendance all over the southern part of the state. This is in spite of the heaviest rainfall for this season for the past ten years. Lesser says he feels sure 1922 will be a big year. He declares this prediction is backed up by unusually good box office returns starting some time ago. Roy Miller of the California and Miller's theatres, first run houses, says business has been picking up recently and attendance was much better than expected just before Christmas, in face of adverse weather conditions.

Manager Grauman's million dollar theatre and Grauman's Rialto predict that 1922 will show an improvement over the past year, which was satisfactory in all respects.

Production is not brisk but all big studios are filling the schedule and entering the new year with plans that will result in better money making films for exhibitors, according to statements. Los Angeles is a hard town to gauge because its large transient population makes the amusement business good all the year around, but conservative opinion based on the general outlook, makes the statement that the new year will be a big improvement over last year.

St. Louis

Defeat for Drones, Success for Workers

1922! What does it mean? A survey of conditions in the St. Louis territory forcefully indicates that 1922 will be about what producers and exhibitors make it. Everything points to a year for fighters; defeat for drones and complete failure for those who do not know the moving picture business.

The process of re-adjustment has not as yet been completed. There is still much reconstruction to be accomplished. But the final results should be gratifying. If the industry proves steadfast in this emergency, there will be born a golden era that will surpass the miraculous period of the war. It will be greater because the picture men are wiser for what they are now experiencing. They say so themselves.

Unemployment has not lessened in this territory during the last thirty days. Many of the mines of Southern Illinois put on more workers, but this was offset by the men out of work through seasonable occupations. Some of the big steel mills of the St. Louis district have shown increased activity the past few weeks and shortly after the holidays should greatly increase their forces.

Going into the New Year the outlook would not be very bright based on present conditions. But men who have been through the fires of the depressions of 1907 and 1913 know the signs of the times. They confidently predict that better days are not far ahead. The New Year will start in darkness but should end its career in a blaze of glory. During the next few months theatres will get on a firmer basis. Better pictures will be shown, and unnecessary incidentals that have attached themselves to the industry through the war period will be discarded. The live picture men will make money during the first three months of 1922.

Exhibitors' Views

Here is how well informed exhibitors and distributors view the situation:

John Karzin, owner of Majestic, Casino, Marquette, Olympia and Star Theatres, who started exhibiting pictures in St. Louis in 1905 and is the dean of the local colony: "I am expecting to make money in 1922. The industry will be etter for the readjustment that is now taking place. Better pictures will be shown. Exhibitors will give more attention to exhibition and the keen competition that has developed will mark the passing of much of the clap-trap that grew up during the war. I passed through the dark days of 1907 and 1913 and am still here. I feel that better times are just around the corner."

Tom Leonard, St. Louis manager for Pioneer: "1922 will be a year of fighters. The trying times we are now having will eliminate some who are detrimental to the industry. During the war days anyone could make money with pictures. In the future only real show men will be successful. Much depends on industrial conditions. I feel there will be a marked improvement next spring."

Fred Wehrenberg, Melba and Cherokee Theatres, St. Louis: "Herbert Hoover, Secretary of Commerce, said construction was the key to the unemployment problem. I hold unemployment is the key to the picture situation. Unless industrial conditions improve moving pictures will not make money. The movies are the amusement of the masses. When people are not working they have no money for amusement. I feel that the producers must lower their rentals to relieve the situation. Some have already done so, but not enough. I hope for better times in the spring."

E. H. Brient, Robertson-Cole manager: "Conditions are improving. Good pictures are drawing crowds. On a recent trip I was in Peoria when 'Conflict,' the Universal release, played to a new record. In Keokuk, Goldwyn's 'Old Nest' made a six days' run to big crowds, the first time in history. 1922 will be a year for winners. We have planned accordingly."

"Consistent Improvement"

Samuel Harris, Pathe manager: "I anticipate a consistent improvement after the holidays, a real revival by spring. General conditions are more optimistic. Moving pictures were the last to feel depression; I feel they should be the first to benefit through improved conditions. When the better times come people will want to relax, to amuse themselves. The movies will be in their reach first."

Harry Greenman, William Fox Liberty Theatre, St. Louis: "The future holds success for real pictures. People are more critical. They are selecting their amusement with care."

William Goldman, Missouri Theatre, St. Louis: "We have laid our plans for the biggest year in history. Bigger and better pictures spell success. Industrial conditions are sourse to improve."

Jack Weil, Goldwyn manager: "Conditions in Northern Arkansas and Southern Illinois are rapidly becoming normal. In Eastern Missouri there has been improvement. The outlook for 1922 is very bright. The results attained at the disarmament conference will have a wonderfully stabilizing effect on industry. There will be released money for new enterprises. The mechanics skilled in war work may suffer, but generally conditions will benefit. Theatres are in the midst of a slump due to the holidays and industrial conditions. It takes greater effort to get orders, but our business is almost normal. The theatre man of the future will be a better business man because of the experiences of the present times."

Charles T. Sears, Grand Theatre, Brookfield, Mo., president Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri: "The new year will see many exhibitors benefit. The exhibitors will no longer be burdened with the 5 per cent. film rental tax which was passed on by the producers, and those exhibitors who have 10-cent admissions will be relieved of the war tax. Our organization has been most successful in defeating attempts to inflict censorship and the blue laws on the exhibitors. I feel 1922 will be a big year for the industry in general."

Pacific Northwest

Conditions Generally Bad But Improving

GENERALLY speaking, business conditions in the Pacific Northwest are bad. In some parts of the territory, however, they are better than in others. Seattle and Tacoma, robbed of their shipbuilding payrolls, are dead. Portland, with some shipbuilding still going on and with preparations already under way for the World's Fair in 1925, is looking up, but this does not apply to the surrounding territory.

Wenatchee and the Okanogan country, on account of good fruit crops, is fairly prosperous. There is room for improvement, however, which higher fruit prices might bring. Yakima is another center favorably affected by the fruit industry. Aberdeen and the Grays Harbor country has been slow up to the last few weeks, when the lumber mills began to operate on full time and to full capacity. Now the picture theatres are feeling the increase in business very noticeably. Spokane, which draws on a large agricultural community, is better than the coast cities.

On the other hand, Montana, which for two years after the armistice was cited by film salesmen as the best part of the territory, is now worse than the rest, as is shown by the frequency of the closings of theatres through the state. Idaho is not quite so bad.

Closings are rather frequent through the entire territory, although the closing of two or three small theatres in a community has often been counterbalanced by the building of a larger, more modern house, and this is proof of a decided tendency towards optimism for the future. Such optimism was voiced by several representative exhibitors.

Exhibitor Statements

J. G. Von Herberg of the firm of Jensen & Von Herberg, said:

"Business in general has turned the corner of depression and has begun a very gradual rise. The picture business, since it does not accompany but follows general business conditions, has hardly had time to feel the improvement, but it is coming just as certainly. It will be a long time, I fear, before we can count on the usual program picture bringing in S.R.O. business. But the new prosperity will be founded on sound economics and so will last."

John Hamrick, manager of the Blue Mouse Theatres in Seattle and Portland, said:

"The people will come in paying numbers to see only the biggest, best productions, so it's up to the producers to give us fewer, bigger and better pictures all the time. I think the day is permanently past when the public will pay to see mediocre films indifferently presented, but I expect a gradual improvement during the coming year."

Donald Geddes, manager of three theatres in residential districts, said:

"The raising of the street car fares in Seattle helped the neighborhood theatres to weather a depression that otherwise might have been dangerous for even the strongest of us. We hope that before they are lowered next July business will have improved sufficiently to enable us to get by. We expect the improvement to begin soon after the New Year or by spring at the latest."

L. H. Walton, manager of the American Theatre, Bellingham, said:

"Bellingham has been hard hit lately, but business men think that with the weeding out of the weaker firms trade will settle down to a firm foundation soon after the New Year. As soon as general business is operating on a sound basis the picture business will begin to improve. We hardly expect anything like satisfactory business before next fall, but once it comes it will continue to improve steadily."

Fred Mercy of Yakima, owner of a string of houses in that city, said:

"Business is not what it has been, but we have little to complain about. We are making money, which is more than can be said in some communities, and every indication is for a steady improvement after the New Year and next fall."

Canada

Prospects Are Reported as Highly Encouraging

THE general status of the picture theatre in Canada during the past year has been materially raised through various developments along the line of general improvement in theatre structures as a whole, advancement in the art of moving picture and musical presentation, standardization of theatre operation and knowledge gained through general experience. The actual number of theatres in the Dominion has been little changed, but there is scarcely a city or town of any importance in the whole country that does not boast a handsome picture playhouse which has displaced at least one dingy and outgrown theatre.

Many Long Runs

One of the outstanding developments in Canada during the past year has been the tendency toward prolonged special engagements for film successes. First runs of from three to nine weeks in many of the key cities of the Dominion have been seen with frequency during the past twelve months. "The Four Horsemen" played nine weeks in Toronto without a break for its first run; "Way Down East" had four weeks in Toronto, as did the "Three Musketeers," "Over the Hill," "The Better 'Ole" and others. A considerable number of pictures have played two weeks at one house in Toronto and in various other cities, unusual attractions have enjoyed extended runs up to three and four weeks.

Another sign of the recent times has been the move on the part of a number of exhibitors in scattered sections of the Dominion to standardize admission prices. In numerous houses, a former scale of prices, representing a spread of perhaps 15 or 25 cents has been concentrated into a straight fee for any part of the theatre for either afternoons or evenings. Thus, there hase become a flat price for any seat in the house.

Building Ceasing

The "building age" in the picture theatre field in Canada apparently came to an end during the fall of 1921. For about two years previous to this last autumn, prominent picture theatre interests were literally chasing around the country to open great houses. The building program of the large corporations has evidently come to a close, however, and the companies now seem to be satisfied to operate present chains of houses.

With particularly hot weather last July and because of general transitional market conditions, along with a desire on the part of exhibitors to modernize their houses, more than the average number of theatres in Canada closed for varying periods last summer. Since that time, wages have been revised, admission prices have been slightly reduced and patronage soon climbed back to normal. Therefore, prospects are highly encouraging.

Gibbons Renews Contract

Goldwyn announces that its art director at the Culver City studios, Cedric Gibbons, has renewed his contract and will remain with the corporation as head of the art department for a term of years. Mr. Gibbons has constructed for the firm many unusual and artistic settings, such as those for "Bunty Pulls the Strings."

His Methods of Public Appeal Put Gable at Head of Achievement Films

INTERESTING and rather unusual facts have cropped out regarding the inception and organization of Achievement Films, Inc., whose first feature picture, "The Power Within," is announced by Pathe for current release. The executive offices of the company are in Philadelphia, but the activities which placed Gilbert E. Gable at its head have been more than national in their scope and widespread influence. It is one of the few times in the history of producing organizations that the office of president has sought and obtained a man whose strength rested mainly on his proved ability to gain and hold public interest in whatever his own convictions inspired him to advocate.

He is barely 35 years old, with a combination of Yankee, Quaker and Dutch antecedents. Since leaving high school he has specialized strenuously, first in traveling salesmanship and then in publicizing things he believed in. The things he believed in had to have unmistakable qualities of "human interest." For instance, he believed in the Philadelphia Record newspaper. Becoming its promotion manager in 1917, very soon a good many thousands of new subscribers also were believing in it. The year before he had directed a night marine pageant on the Schuylkill River with 2,500 people in the cast and 500,000 in the audience. In 1918 he was requisitioned by the Federal Reserve Bank to become director of publicity. In that year he planned the Statue of Liberty and the Victory Statue in Broad street, Philadelphia, and directed patriotic parades and publicity.

For the Victory Loan Mr. Gable produced a series of advertisements which were submitted to a National Copy Jury sitting in Washington. There were 700 suggestions submitted by publicity offices throughout the country. Out of the 115 pieces of copy selected by the jury, 104 were written by Mr. Gable. Published throughout the United States and its possessions, the newspaper space occupied by this copy gave it the commercial value of about $1,500 a word, which is said to be the highest amount ever paid for the publication of anything written in the English language.

Much Interest in Results "Clean-Up Week" to Show

When the old year passes out the exhibitors and exchangemen in the New York State and Northern New Jersey territory will know the results of the first "Clean-Up Week" in the industry. It has been urged that every exhibitor and exchangeman settle all pending grievances during the week December 23-31 so that the newly appointed official "Joint Grievance Committee" can operate efficiently under the new standardized rules, without any old adjustments to handicap it.

President Charles L. O'Reilly of the M. P. T. O. of New York State, has completed arrangements with the F. I. L. M. Clubs of both Albany and Buffalo for a "Joint Grievance Committee" in both zones, with equal representation of theatre owners and exchangemen. President William Brandt of the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce has already seen his committee in action jointly with an equal number of representatives from the F. I. L. M. Club of New York City, in settling all trade grievances affecting Greater New York, Long Island and Northern New Jersey.

U. S. Film Exports to United Kingdom Show Big Decrease

The Washington bureau of the N.A.M.P.I. has obtained from the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the United States Department of Commerce the following figures showing motion picture film imports by the United Kingdom:

During the first nine months of 1921 the linear footage of films imported by the United Kingdom was 69,387,210 feet. During the similar period in 1920 they were 58,034,581 feet.

GILBERT E. GABLE
President of Achievement Films, Inc., which produced "The Power Within" for Pathe

Of the 1921 film imports by the United Kingdom, during the nine months period, France supplied 37,984,849 feet while the United States supplied 26,929,857 feet. In the corresponding period of 1920, France supplied 10,816,723 feet and the United States supplied 41,915,758 feet.

The total value of films imported by the United Kingdom in the first nine months of 1921 was £729,621 as against £754,269 in 1920.

Fisher Buys Features and "Shorts" for Singapore, Where Men are Favorite Stars

INDICATIONS that the demand for ever better pictures is world-wide were evident in the remarks which Joe Fisher, whose headquarters as general manager of the Middle East Films, Ltd., are in Singapore, made while in New York this week, where he purchased 500 five-reel features in addition to many short subjects.

"Censorship is much stricter in our territory over there than it is here, and it is far more sincere," Mr. Fisher said. "There is no graft nor bribery in connection with it, and it would be unheard of to attempt to offer one of the officials any inducement. They are under the most careful governmental supervision and the protection of the morale of the natives is regarded as supremely important.

"The education of our public, via the screen, is a slow, patient undertaking. After several years' experience—twelve to be exact—I can say that this year I am selecting a little finer class of films than ever before, which shows that there is some improvement in their tastes. The preference for the picture with plenty of action still prevails as it is most easily understood. Expensive productions, society dramas, situation comedies are not appreciated.

"Business is slowly coming back. The economic conditions following the failure of the rubber and rice crops were responsible largely for the slump. Our admission prices were cut in half this year, which brings them to a point considerably lower than yours in this country, our cheapest being the equivalent of 7½ cents in your money."

In discussing the popularity of American stars, Mr. Fisher said that the big, strong man of the screen was the favorite type. The feminine star, he asserted, does not begin to have the following there that she does here.

Tax on Passes Off

Exhibitors should note that, after January 1, the tax on passes is entirely removed under the new revenue law. The repeal of this tax, together with the exemption from the admission tax of admissions costing 10 cents or less, to picture theatres only, was the sole change made in the admission-tax provision of the law.

Elaborate Preparations Augur Well for Success of New York State Convention

WHEN 900 or more members of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State get their "close up" of Albany on February 14, the opening day of the annual state convention, they will find everything in readiness, first, for a business session that will be spelled with a capital "Busy Bee," and next, for entertainment that will surpass anything ever attempted at previous similar gatherings. Members of the Albany Managers' Association are leaving no stone unturned these days in arranging the details of the convention. They are not taking anything for granted. Neither are they waiting until the eleventh hour to arrange this or that feature of the program. The association is meeting once each week while sub-committees are meeting at frequent intervals.

The Albany Chamber of Commerce is working tooth and nail in doing its share toward making the convention one huge success. A booklet setting forth Albany's advantages from every angle is being printed especially for distribution prior to the convention, among all exhibitors, exchanges and producers in New York State. It is expected also that, while not members of the state association, exhibitors from Vermont and Massachusetts will attend some of the sessions. Special committees have already been named by the Albany Chamber of Commerce to co-operate with the Albany Managers' Association.

Booths Well Placed

Arrangements were perfected the past week to the end that the booths of all exchanges will be placed in a large room on the main floor of the Hotel Ten Eyck, immediately off the lobby itself. No better arrangement could possibly be made for the exchanges, the room being easily accessible, large, well lighted and most attractive.

The business sessions will be held in the grand ballroom on the top floor of the Hotel Ten Eyck. This room will easily accommodate 1,000 persons. President Roberts has placed an order for 100,000 stickers, calling attention to the convention dates and the place, in a way that can not be overlooked. These will shortly be sent to every exchange in New York State with a request that they be used on every bit of mail matter sent from these exchanges.

Special invitations to the Grand Motion Picture Ball at the State Armory on February 15, will be mailed to all New York State officials. Boxes will be built at the State Armory for the stars who have already promised to attend and who include the Gish sisters, Mae Murray, Clara Kimball Young and Eugene O'Brien. President Roberts has also communicated with Ziegfeld in the hope that Will Rogers may be included in the number.

While the ball is still over a month distant, letters of inquiry have already reached Samuel Suckno, chairman of the ball committee, from Schenectady, Troy, Glens Falls and elsewhere, asking the price of admission tickets. These tickets have been placed at $2 each and it is expected that the ball will attract over 4,000 couples.

State officials attending the ball will be presented to the stars. A special reception committee will also be named to meet stars on their arrival at the Albany station, and escort them to the Hotel Ten Eyck. Mayor William S. Hackett will personally welcome these stars to the city.

In connection with the banquet which will be held on the roof garden of the Hotel Ten Eyck on the concluding night of the convention, motion pictures showing activities of the two previous days and featuring many of the members of the association, will be shown. As soon as these pictures are taken, they will be rushed by special messenger to the laboratory of the General Electric company in Schenectady, developed and printed.

An Active Seven

While the Albany Managers' Association consists of only seven members, these seven are an extremely active committee these days. Associated with Mr. Roberts are Samuel Suckno, Fred. P. Elliott, William Berinstein, O. H. Stacy, Harry Lazarus and Harry Hellman. Samuel Berman, secretary of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of the state, will make a trip to Albany in the near future to confer with these men in working out further details of the big gathering.

President Roberts and Samuel Suckno, the latter acting as chairman of reservations, issue a word to which every exhibitor planning to attend the coming convention should pay heed. It is this—don't wait to the last minute before making hotel reservations. Albany is an extremely busy city during the legislative session. There will be plenty of room, however, for everyone, but exhibitors should at once write Mr. Suckno, care of the Albany Theatre, Albany, N. Y., telling him just what they desire in the way of hotel reservations. Mr. Suckno will make these reservations and acknowledge all such communications on the day they reach him.

SCENES FROM "THE BEAUTIFUL LIAR," STARRING KATHERINE MACDONALD, A FIRST NATIONAL ATTRACTION

4,000 Theatres and Two More Stars Promise to Aid Screen Artists' Guild

INDORSEMENTS of the program of the Independent Screen Artists' Guild, organized last week in Los Angeles by forty-five leading independent producers and stars to establish direct relations between the studios and the theatres of the nation, thereby eliminating the middle man to the benefit of the public and the producer, continue to pour into the Guild headquarters, according to advices received from Los Angeles.

The number of theatres backing the new movement is now in excess of 4,000, each of which has pledged itself to set aside the week of February 18 for the simultaneous presentation throughout the United States of notable productions of the Guild members as a striking indorsement of the plans of the independent stars and producers.

Two big eastern stars and the producing companies with which they are affiliated have wired their enthusiastic approval to the Guild of the plans adopted by the western actors and producers, headed by Charles Chaplin and the Talmadges and including many other screen celebrities. Congratulations and expressions of co-operation were telegraphed by Hope Hampton and Richard Barthelmess, who are starring in their own productions in the East, and by C. H. Duell, president of Inspiration Pictures, Inc., of New York.

"Although I am in the East," wired Richard Barthelmess, "I am in hearty sympathy with the movement which has so auspiciously begun and which will have a far-reaching effect on the industry. You can count upon my support and hearty co-operation."

"The formation of the Independent Screen Artists' Guild," telegraphed Hope Hampton, "marks another gigantic step forward in our industry, and I want to add my heartiest congratulations to the originators of the project and the stars and producers enrolled under its banner. Aims and purposes as outlined in proclamation need no further commentary. Independent producers and stars and independent theatre owners and public will all benefit through creation of the Guild, which is positive assurance of its success."

"Count on my organization as being with you, although we are in the East," wired Mr. Duell.

Capitalization for Week in New York Is $1,635,000

With two companies located in western and central New York, and with an aggregate capitalization of $1,635,000, this week's list of motion picture corporations numbered twelve companies. The Niagara Pictures Corporation, capitalized at $100,000, was incorporated by David Levy, M. T. Doyle and George Williams, all residents of Buffalo. The Dawn Film Corporation, incorporated at $300,000, with Francis Brereton, Thomas W. Dooley and E. B. Meitzler, of Syracuse. Other companies incorporating are located in New York City as Williamson's Undersea Wonders, $25,000, John E. Williamson, George A. O'Keefe, Elsa M. Umla; Drucker & Baltes Co., $30,000, Robert M. Baltes, Charles D. Kaufman, Herman Fabry; Clifford Brooke, Inc., $300,000, Clifford Brooks, Charles Mussett, Alexander Hunter; Melody Pictures, $5,000, Isadore and Edythe W. Faggen, Sydney L. Cohen; Gene Buck, Inc., $5,000, Gene Buck, George A. McCormick, Stella Burke; Monra Productions, $5,000, George A. McCormick, Charles E. Heath, William Hechheimer; Wm. P. S. Earle Pictures, $500,000, Wm. P. S. Earle, Victor M. Earle, Yonkers, Guyon L. C. Earle, Forest Hills; Harry Delf Productions, $50,000, Joseph A. Physioc, Harry Delf, B. A. Leerburger; Broadway Attractions, Rockville Centre, $15,000, Michael Hoffman, Rockville Centre, Gus Harris, Jane Morgan, New York City.

Schade Gives 10 Per Cent of Receipts to the Poor

Charles Ray, in "Nineteen and Phyllis" and "Not Guilty," with Sylvia Breamer, Molly Malone and Richard Dix, distributed by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., were among four offerings advertised in the churches of Sandusky, O., during the week of Dec. 19-24 and they were the only two that were identified, bearing the title. "It's a First National."

The Associated Charities of Sandusky, with the aid of a Sandusky newspaper were trying to raise a fund out of which to help the poor during the winter, and George J. Schade, of theSchade Theatre, promised 10 per cent. of the gross receipts of his theatre.

A newspaper played Schade's proposition on its first page every day for a week, starting with a special article by a popular feature writer in its Sunday edition. This paper furthermore, gave Schade twenty inches of display advertising space a day, gratis. It also printed five thousand cards which were scattered everywhere throughout the city and surroundings, by the Sunshine Girls, who devote several hours a week to charitable work. It was through them that the pictures were advertised in the churches of Sandusky and vicinity.

A few pastors refused to display the cards, but the number was few indeed.

Schade's proposition has further popularized him—and that's saying a great deal, as he was recently elected to a Sandusky commissionership by a big majority.

A. S. Kane on Vacation

Arthur S. Kane will spend a brief vacation in Pinehurst, North Carolina, before returning to New York City from the southern trip which he made with Charles Ray and Party. Mr. Kane's young sons, Arthur S. Kane, Jr., and Lawrence Kane are already established at the southern resort awaiting the arrival of their father.

Goldwyn Sells Product in Many Parts of World

Goldwyn has sold its fourth year product in widely separated parts of the foreign sales field, according to an announcement made by J. H. Hoffberg of the firm's foreign sales department. In some cases new sales affiliations have been made and in a few isolated instances virgin territory has been added to the field served by the Goldwyn product, the Goldwyn organization says.

The fourth year product has been sold for Australia and New Zealand to Australaisian Films, Limited, which serves all of the most important motion picture theatres in those two islands.

Both the third and the fourth year Goldwyn pictures have been sold for distribution throughout the Dutch East Indies, the Federated Malay States and the Straits Settlements to the Middle East Films, Limited, a subsidiary of the South African Film Trust.

Previous Goldwyn productions distributed in these sections of the foreign field have been very popular, it is said, and the trade mark of the firm has come to be recognized as a symbol of merit. Goldwyn expects its more recent productions to make an even stronger impression. Mr. Hoffberg also stated that the Goldwyn fourth year product had been sold for distribution throughout Mexico.

Albany Exhibitors and Exchangemen Form Body

A joint board of arbitration, to settle differences between exchanges and exhibitors in the Capital district has just been formed in Albany, N. Y. This board will meet each Tuesday at the Pathe exchange. There is also said to be a prospect that the New York and Buffalo exchanges will shortly get together to the end that all disputes between exchanges and exhibitors in the entire zone west to Buffalo may be handled by the Albany board.

There was a meeting at the Pathe exchange in Albany last Monday, at which all eight exchanges in that city were represented. The following were named as exchange representatives on the board of arbitration: Bert Moran, Pathe, chairman; R. C. Halligan, Universal; B. F. Gibbons, Vitagraph; E. W. Cramer, Select.

Film Manufacturers' New Brief Requests Still Higher Import Duty on Raw Stock

A SPECIFIC rate of not less than ¾ of a cent a foot on positive film and of not less than 1¼ cents a foot on negative film was advocated before the Senate Finance Committee December 23 by Charles H. Cole, treasurer of the Bay State Film Company of Sharon, Mass. General Cole was spokesman for the Eastman Kodak Company and Powers Film Products, Inc., both of Rochester, N. Y., and the Ansco Company, of Binghamton, N. Y., all manufacturers of motion picture film, sensitized but not exposed nor developed.

General Cole asked that in the event it is not desired by the committee to impose this specific duty, an ad valorem rate of 35 per cent., on the American Valuation Plan, or 50 per cent. on the foreign value of the product be provided. The witness told of conditions existing in the industry and presented figures showing how the foreign merchandise competes with that of domestic production. His statement before the committee was substantially as follows:

"Moving picture film sensitized but not exposed nor developed is now on the free list under the present tariff act. Under H. R. Bill 7456, paragraph 1451, a duty of twenty per cent. ad valorem (American valuation) is imposed on moving picture film. We urge that this duty is not high enough even to cover the difference between the price at which foreign film is sold in this country and the actual cost of making American film, and of course the cost of making foreign film is necessarily lower than its selling price.

Additional Protection

"At the time when the arguments in favor of a duty on moving picture film were presented before the House in the early part of the year, a less amount of protection was requested. Since that time the rate of exchange and further evidence of lowering foreign cost of production, have made it necessary for us to ask for the additional protection that we now do.

"We would therefore urge the committee to impose a specific duty of not less than ¾ of a cent a foot on positive film and not less than 1¼ cents a foot on negative film. If this specific duty is not imposed we request and urge an ad valorem duty of 35 per cent. (American valuation). If the bill is passed upon the basis of foreign valuation we would ask an ad valorem duty of 50 per cent. If a specific duty is imposed, all uncertainty as regards cost will be removed and both the importer and the American manufacturer will know exactly where they stand.

"Moving picture film is produced by coating celuloid (pyroxylin) with photographic emulsion. To manufacture a satisfactory product of uniform standard and quality requires special plants and machinery of expensive construction as well as long experience and technical skill of the highest order. Approximately 90 per cent of all film sold is positive and 10 per cent. is negative.

$50,000,000 Invested Here

"This industry is essentially American, created by the genius of Americans, and its supremacy here should be maintained, but to do this, the basic patents now having expired, will require the duty we advocate.

"On January 1, 1921, there were five manufacturers of moving picture film in the United States, namely: Ansco Company, Binghamton, New York: Bay State Film Company, Sharon, Mass.; Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, New York; Eagle Rock Film Company, Eagle Rock, N. J.; and Powers Film Products, Inc., Rochester, New York. The two last mentioned plants have been closed for some months because of foreign competition.

"The total investment by American film manufacturers for plant and equipment not suitable for other purposes represents an aggregate of approximately $50,000,000. We believe that it is absolutely necessary that the duty we ask be imposed as evidenced by the following facts:

"The cost of production to the American manufacturer is $1.92 a hundred feet. This is based upon the actual figures for the first eleven months of 1921 as taken from the books of the Bay State Film Company of Massachusetts, as follows:

Celluloid (film base)	$1.00
Silver nitrate, gelatine and other chemicals	.312
Labor and manufacturing expense	.51
Overhead	.10

Sells for $2.25

"This total does not include any allowance for depreciation or return on invested capital. These figures include average wages to employes of $4.80 a day. The present selling price of American positive film is $2.25 a hundred feet.

"As against this American cost of $1.92 a hundred feet the selling price of Agfa (German film) in Germany is from 92 cents to $1 a hundred feet. This includes the manufacturer's profit, therefore the cost of production must be less than the selling price."

The document here refers to letters submitted to show that the price of German film given above is correct.

"Furthermore, the American manufacturer is at a tremendous disadvantage with the foreign manufacturer, because he now has to pay a duty of 40 per cent on the celluloid base, which comprises 75 per cent. of the total cost of the materials that enter into the manufacture of the film. This amounts to 40 cents a hundred feet of film under the present tariff act, and under House Bill 7456 the duty would amount to 50 cents a hundred feet of film (American valuation). As roll celluloid it is subject to this duty, but by coating it with a photographic emulsion it is allowed to come in free, a great injustice to us, if we are not given an equivalent duty on film."

The document then quotes government statistics to show that imports of raw film are increasing, summarizing the figures as follows:

"The rate of importation for these first four months show a gain of more than 63 per cent. over 1920-21, of more than 500 per cent. over 1919-20 and more than 1,000 per cent. over 1918-1919.

Sees German Domination

"The great danger confronting the American film manufacturer today is that the great German chemical trust, which owns the Agfa Company, will virtually acquire the entire American market for unexposed film and dominate the motion picture industry, the fourth largest industry in the United States today, unless the industry is protected by the duty we request.

"The amount of protection which we ask is barely enough to bring the selling price, not the cost price, of the German-made product up to our own cost of manufacture. If a duty of ¾ of a cent a foot on positive stock is imposed, the German made film can still be sold in this country with a profit, at a price no higher than the present American cost of production.

"I submit copies of invoices sworn to by American Consuls, showing prices at which foreign made film is sold in other countries. American manufacturers cannot compete with these prices and American-made film has already been driven out of the countries above referred to. I would emphasize the fact that these prices are not the cost prices, but the selling prices which include both export and import duties, selling and transportation costs, in addition to profits. The profits must be very large in France and Italy, as the prices there are 30 to 40 cents a hundred feet higher than in England, which is a further testimony to the fact that German costs are so low they can meet any price that may be made by their competitors.

"In urging this specific duty of ¾ of a cent per foot on positive film and 1¼ cents on negative film, we are not asking for a duty that will exclude the foreign made product. Even free trade Great Britain imposes a specific duty of 2/3 of a cent a foot on all positive film at the normal rate of exchange."

First National Policies and Officials Indorsed at Eastern Canada Meeting

UNEQUIVOCAL indorsement of the policies, officers and executive committee of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., was voted by the delegates to the regional get together for Eastern Canada, comprising the Ontario, Quebec and Maritime provinces, which was held in the Windsor Hotel, Montreal, December 12 to 14.

Twenty-nine delegates were in attendance, representing 50 franchise holders. William J. Drummond was chairman of the sessions. The advisory boards elected were as follows: Ontario: Frederick Guest, Hamilton, chairman; Jule Allen, Toronto, W. D. Ferguson, Toronto; Hy Meehan, Lindsay; H. Brouse, Ottawa. Quebec: George Nicholas, Montreal, chairman; Maurice West, St. John; J. E. LeBrecque, Montreal; I. Singerman, Sherbrooke; Maritime Provinces: W. W. O. Fenety, Fredericton, N. B., chairman; Mr. E. H. Davidson, Moncton, N. B.; John Connor, Glace Bay, N. S.; Colin Danson, Springhill, N. B.; Messrs. Brouse and Stapleton, Ottawa, Ont.

Spirit of Harmony Prevailed

All of the sessions were marked by a spirit of harmony and co-operation, the social events of the meeting being especially friendly. The delegates returned to their home towns imbued with loyalty for the company and determination to "pull together" in all measures.

The final business of the meeting consisted of passing motions indorsing all the policies which have guided and are guiding First National and voting confidence in the officers and the executive committee.

George Rotsky, of Montreal, representing the Allen Theatres, paid a tribute to the home office advertising department and its manager, C. L. Yearsley. After praising the benefit and assistance it has been to the exhibitors, he said:

"In my opinion it is the best advertising and publicity department in the business. All other companies could take lessons from the First National publicity department, and make it extremely profitable for themselves."

Guests Given Luncheon

On Tuesday the delegates were guests of Mr. La Brecque at luncheon in Le Club Canadian, and at his insistence the afternoon sessions were held in the club parlors. Monday evening they were the dinner guests of Mr. Rotsky at the Press Club. The get-together wound up Wednesday night with a banquet.

During his formal address, Chairman Drummond paid a high tribute to President Robert Lieber, J. D. Williams, H. O. Schwalbe, William J. Morgan, Mr. Yearsley and others of the home office executive staff.

List of Delegates

The delegates were: George Rotsky, Montreal, representing 23 Allen franchises; George Nicholas, Montreal, representing seven United theatres; Harry Brouse, Imperial, Ottawa; B. F. Stapleton, Center, Ottawa; Frederick Guest, Queens and Empire Theatres, Hamilton, Ont.; I. Goldwater, Empress, Lachine, Que.; George Gladianos, Midway, Montreal; J. E. La Brecque, Passe Temps, Montreal; E. A. Lazanis, Alhambra, Napoleon and Lord Nelson Theatres, Montreal; J. Sperdakos, Fairyland, Montreal; I. Singerman, Premier, Sherbrooke, Que.; A. J. B. Robert, Gayety, Three Rivers, Que.; Z. Goldberg, Sun, Montreal; Maurice West, Imperial, St. John, Que.; H. Heller, Perron Hall, Montreal; D. Wolff, Verdun Palace, Montreal; W. W. O. Fenety, St. John, N. B.; W. L. Charlebois, Northern Star, Iroquois Falls, Ont.; D. W. Ferguson, York, Toronto; R. Stevens, Regent, Sudbury, Ont, and E. S. Meehan, Academy, Lindsay, Ont.; C. Pownall, Gem, Orangeville, Ont.; A. Gorman, Montreal; W. J. Drummond, Toronto; J. James, Montreal; S. Brint, Toronto; and Colin Danson, Springhill, N. B.

Community Bureau Sues to Stop Murphy's Suit

Claim and counterclaim is disclosed in an action just filed in the New York Supreme Court by the Community Motion Picture Bureau against Dudley Murphy of 156 Waverly Place, in which the plaintiff seeks to recover $3,000, demands an accounting by Murphy and asks the court to appoint a receiver for a venture both were interested in.

The Community people say that in September they entered into an agreement with Murphy for certain motion picture production work, which was embarked on September 27 and was carried on until January 3 last, when it is claimed it was abandoned by both parties "due to acts and omissions on the part of the defendent, who neglected and failed to carry out the directions of plaintiff."

The complaint also says that Murphy, without the knowledge of the plaintiff, took possession of the negative films, "Aphrodite," "Anywhere Out of the World," "The Soul of the Cypress" and the "Way of Love." The sum of $3,000 asked for by the Community people, they say represents money advanced to Murphy and expenses incurred by the plaintiff. They say Murphy has brought several suits against them over the broken agreement that are without merit, and that these "multiplicity of actions are vexatious and unnecessary, and to the great detriment of plaintiff."

Consular Reports on Film Industry Abroad Show Increase in Raw Stock Importations and a Decrease in Negatives Brought Here

A COMPLETE survey of the film industry abroad has just been received by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry through its Washington bureau. The survey is embodied in a report to the United States Senate by Secretary of Commerce Hoover. It is the result of a resolution introduced by Senator Wadsworth of New York calling upon the Department of Commerce to furnish the Senate with a survey of the motion picture industry in foreign countries and the extent of film importation into the United States. The information was gathered by United States consular agents abroad and computed by the Department in Washington.

The report shows that film imports by the United States have increased from 11,725,000 feet, valued at $685,000 in 1911, to nearly 150,000,000 feet, valued at more than $4,000,000, in 1921. The greatest period of expansion was between 1911 and 1914. In 1914 our imports were 64,774,000 feet of film valued at $2,302,000. The bulk of these imports, however, have been raw stock. In 1914, for instance, 44,717,000 feet of raw stock was imported and, according to the government report, the 1921 figures, available in September, indicate that the raw stock imports for 1921 will be in excess of 130,000,000 feet or about three times the 1914 figures.

Imports Show Decrease

"Our imports of exposed film, however, have shown a decrease," says the report, "and for 1921 they will apparently be about half as large as in 1914. During the war imports fell from 20,057,000 feet in 1914 to the low mark of 2,267,975 feet in 1918. Recovery since 1918 has been rapid, imports increasing in 1920 to 6,233,000 feet, and for 1921 will probably be approximately 10,000,000 feet. The total value of this exposed film is likely to be about the same as in 1914, the price of film, like prices of other commodities, having changed.

"During the war, the development and expansion of the American motion picture industry proceeded with great rapidity. Imports of exposed film declined and the effect of foreign competition in the domestic field became less important. Exports of exposed film increased from 32,192,000 feet in 1913 to over 150,000,000 feet in 1919.

Exports Jumped

"In 1920 our exports of exposed film were 175,233,000 feet, which is more than five times the highest pre-war figure. For 1921 the total export will probably be somewhat less than in 1920.

"There are no official figures on the domestic production of motion pictures with which import figures can be compared. But as compared with our domestic exports of exposed film imports are of relatively small importance. Even for the current year, in which imports have increased and exports decreased, the import will probably be only 10,000,000 feet, while exports will be at least 140,000,000 feet.

"Since many of the pictures sent to this country by foreign producers are not saleable and are never shown before American audiences, the figures for the import of exposed film are slightly of less significance than they first appear. Further, in gaging the importance of imports, the rapid development and expansion of the domestic industry must be taken into account. An import of 1,000,000 feet of film into the United States today means much less to the industry than the importation of a similar amount meant in 1914. The domestic market has so developed that 20,000,000 feet (the import of 1914) would be more easily absorbed today than a much smaller amount in 1914. Except for four German and one Italian film, pictures of foreign make, imported since the war, have not been especially successful.

Millions of Feet from Belgium

"More than four-fifths of the raw film and two-thirds of the exposed film imported into the United States come from five European countries: Belgium, France, Germany, Italy, and the United Kingdom."

The report says further that of our 1920 importation of raw stock, 30,833,000 feet came from Belgium and that in 1921 the same country has supplied the United States with approximately 40,000,000 feet. Belgium, however, is not an important exporter of exposed film. American films are holding their own in Belgium in the face of severe European competition.

In 1920 the United States imported more than 62,500,000 feet of raw stock from France and returns for 1921 indicate that such imports from France will reach 75,000,000 feet. Our imports of exposed film from France in 1921 were approximately 2,200,000 feet, a slight increase over 1920.

"The industry (in France) is unable to produce the elaborate feature pictures which require special and expensive equipment," says the report.

In 1921 the United States imported from Germany about 2,000,000 feet of exposed film, or about 26 per cent. of our total importation of exposed film. In the first nine months of 1921 we imported over 29,000,000 feet of raw stock from Germany, over 20 per cent. of the total unexposed film which entered the United States from foreign countries.

Before the war about one-sixth of our exposed film imports came from Italy. During the war, however, these fell away to practically nothing. In 1921 imports from Italy were about 600,000 feet, which is far below the import level of 1914.

"It is doubtful if the import of exposed film from Italy will regain its pre-war importance," says the report. "American producers have become firmly established and can produce film enough to satisfy the American demand. The gap which Italian film filled in pre-war days no longer seems to exist."

In 1920 there were 82 producing companies in Italy, capitalized at 100,000,000 lire and employing 300,000,000 lire working capital. The total production of new film in Italy that year was 5,250,000 feet.

In South America, the report describes brisk competition between American, German and Italian films.

"The cheapness of European films seems to be a determining factor, and they are used in increasing amounts, although inferior in quality," says the report.

From the United Kingdom before the war, we imported over 25 per cent. of our exposed film. For the year 1921, however, imports from the United Kingdom will not exceed 2,000,000 feet. No imports of raw stock from there were reported during the first nine months of 1921. The report estimates that 50 per cent. of the pictures used in the United Kingdom are American made.

Detroit Exhibitors and Exchangemen to Hold Dinner

Arrangements have been completed for holding a joint dinner dance of the Michigan exhibitors and the Detroit exchange managers at the Hotel Statler, January 10, Tuesday evening. Starting with a banquet, there will be addresses by many prominent picture men and vaudeville entertainment, followed by three hours of dancing. It will be the first time in the history of the industry that both branches of the business have co-operated in holding a joint social affair. The committees appointed to work out the details comprise: J. C. Ritter, Detroit; Phil Gleichman, Broadway Strand; W. S. McLarence, Jackson and H. R. Richey, Detroit, representing the Michigan exhibitors association. J. E. Flynn, Goldwyn; Joe Friedman, Universal, and W. E. Wilkinson, secretary, represent the exchange managers committee.

Fox Plans Operation on Big Scale of Educational and Industrial Divisions

WILLIAM FOX, as president of Fox Film Corporation, announces for the new year another important addition to his screen enterprises. He has organized educational and industrial divisions, planned on a broad scale. This new enterprise is inspired by what Mr. Fox regards as a crying need for educational films that really educate, and for films dealing with business that not only tell the manufacturer's story instructively but create lively interest while doing so.

The educational and industrial divisions, in their operation, will be wholly independent of the amusement enterprises of Fox Film Corporation. They have their separate and distinct staffs—directors, scenario writers, librarians, technical men, artists, animaters and clerical forces. The two divisions are under one head—Herbert E. Hancock, formerly director of Fox News. Supervisory direction, however, will be exercised by Mr. Fox and Winfield R. Sheehan, vice-president and general manager of Fox Film Corporation.

The Fox plan, thus suggested, obviously means that the work of the educational division will be laborious, far-reaching and costly. For a year or more, it is announced, the expectation is that expenditures will exceed receipts; but that the division will ultimately be a financial as well as a popular success, Mr. Fox entertains no doubt.

The educational division possesses an immense advantage in its access to the library of Fox News, containing more than 1,000,000 feet of negative film from which may be assembled hundreds of educational subjects. In this labor are engaged many experts in film assembly, who have already selected an assortment of subjects of inestimable value as the basis of visual instruction for the first months of this Fox enterprise.

The industrial division, it is felt, has an irresistible appeal, inasmuch as it presents a method of advertising the tremendous pulling power of which is universally conceded. Director Hancock, having perfected his organization, announces that he is prepared, at a moment's notice, to undertake an industrial production of any size or scope.

Another Lid Off

Rome, N. Y., is the latest city to adopt Sunday picture shows. Mayor G. Arthur Mickle has just signed an ordinance which will enable the theatres to operate on Sunday between 2 and 11 p. m. The agitation was started over a year ago.

It was planned to submit the matter to the citizens in a referendum vote on November 8, but this was found unlawful from the fact that informal referendums are not authorized by the law in New York State. A resolution favoring Sunday shows was adopted on December 5 in Rome, by a vote of 4 to 2. Petitions from over 3,000 persons asking for Sunday shows were presented to the council. The Strand and Star theatres took immediate advantage of Mayor Mickle's action and drew capacity crowds last Sunday.

Albany Managers Hold Meeting and Name Chairmen

The Albany Managers' Association held a meeting Tuesday afternoon, December 27, at which time Richard C. Fox, manager of the Famous Players exchange in Albany, and Joseph Klein, of the Robertson-Cole Company, New York, were named as chairmen of committees which will co-operate in cooperate 100 per cent with the managers in giving Albany the biggest and best convention which it has seen in recent years. The Chamber of Commerce proposes to give a luncheon on some one of the convention days.

Moss Opens Another Motion Picture House

Still another handsomely appointed moving picture theatre was opened to the New York public December 25. It is the Cameo, on Forty-second street, just east of Broadway, adjoining the Bush Terminal Building, and until a smaller house is opened may be called "the Little Theatre of the Screen," as one of the daily papers stated. The auditorium, which has no balcony floor, seats a few less than 600 persons.

The Cameo is under the direction of B. S. Moss, who plans to devote it to moving pictures with such supplementary musical and dancing numbers as are customary in the other Broadway film theatres.

New York's newest moving picture house, which, it is said, was designed after conferences between Mr. Moss and Irving T. Bush, has been decorated and furnished to give the impression of intimacy suggested by its size. The auditorium is done chiefly in old rose, cafe-au-lait and gold, the whole being softly lighted from a chandelier in the dome of the ceiling. The walls are paneled and the ceiling is elaborately but not loudly ornamented.

The theatre is equipped with a four-manual organ and will also accommodate an orchestra. All the lights used in the house, as well as the curtains, are controlled from the projection booth, which is on a mezzanine floor at the rear of the auditorium, so there is no back-stage work to be done.

"Peacock Alley," with Mae Murray in the leading role, directed by Robert Z. Leonard, was the featured photoplay of the first week's program, and on the bill with it are the usual topical pictures, Jimmy Aubrey's Vitagraph comedy, "The Messenger," and several musical selections.

Wid Gunning Company Announces Appointments

Wid Gunning announces the appointment of George Slater and Frank Heyfron as special representatives, in charge of the Wid Gunning, Inc., Los Angeles branch. Mr. Slater is well known in the Los Angeles territory, having been, until recently, connected with the Realart office while Frank Heyfron has a wide acquaintance among exhibitors through his association with Paramount and Realart in that territory and in Seattle.

Troy M. Rodlun, formerly assistant circulation advertising manager for the Hearst magazines, has joined the Gunning organization to handle direct mail exploitation. James Englander, formerly with Vitagraph and Federated Films, and a newspaperman of wide experience in New York City, is now a member of the publicity department, doing general publicity work. Irvin C. Davis, direct from a long experience in the advertising and sales' promotion field, and M. R. Edwards, are others who have entered the Wid Gunning publicity and advertising departments.

Passes Resolution Thanking Officers

The following resolution was adopted at the mid-winter convention of the Wisconsin Exhibitors Association, held at Milwaukee on December 15 and 16: Be it resolved that we the Wisconsin Exhibitors Association in convention assembled extend a vote of thanks to our national officers for the efforts set forth in our behalf and which they have so ably handled, especially the repeal of the 5 per cent. film rental tax.

Be it further resolved that a copy of this resolution be sent to our national officers.

The funny little brown derby, the "fit me snug" coat and the stranger pants, topped off with the big feet underneath, and all guided about by a pair of well-known crossed eyes, have again appeared on the Mack Sennett lot to report for work. Ben Turpin and Phyllis Haver have finally started in real earnest. Bill Watson has been chosen to direct the comedy pair in their first two reeler of a series of eight, for distribution as a First National picture.

Ernst Lubitsch Describes Novel Method of Preparing a Picture for Production

By SUMNER SMITH

ON Tuesday, December 27, Ernst Lubitsch, Germany's greatest motion picture director, underwent the ordeal of answering rapid-fire questions shot at him, through an interpreter, by trade paper writers eager to make the most of the limited time allowed them. This alert, physically striking man, who had been represented as so painfully retiring that he had to issue his orders through a subordinate, met the test with rapid-fire replies, delivered without hesitation and with authority. Occasionally he ran his fingers through his jet black hair and left his chair to pace restlessly like Douglas Fairbanks, but never did he hesitate in replying.

Passing over, for the time, Lubitsch's views on American pictures, and his impressions of this country, let us listen first to his novel and highly interesting views on preparing for the production of a feature.

"After the author submits his manuscript we two go off together to the mountains or any place where we will not be annoyed by interruptions," he says. "Once arrived, we go over every word in the manuscript together and compare our ideas and arrive on a scenario. I make the decisions, of course, but I am always open to suggestions.

"As soon as the scenario is completed and the casting has been done, I supply each artist with a general idea of the picture—just a very general idea, nothing detailed about the plot. I don't ask them to study how to play the part assigned them; I just want them to visualize the whole. Then, when we get together on the lot, I give the players detailed instructions.

"The titles are all written before the 'shooting' begins. As I shoot I plan how I'll cut the picture and carefully keep a record of intended cuts, so that it usually takes me only ten days for the editing work. For instance, though I spent a year on my latest picture, 'The Wife of Pharaoh,' and shot 90,000 feet, I readily cut it down to between 9,000 and 10,000 feet."

Those are Lubitsch's methods on handling actors. Truly they are new to this country, where the actor studies his script before appearing in the studio or on location. But, then, Lubitsch stages only big spectacles that take a lot of time—it was said that it usually takes him a year to make a feature—some times he completes one in ten or eleven months—and those of us who see the finished result begrudge him the time.

The writer visited Lubitsch with the firm intention of learning something firsthand about economic conditions in Germany and the picture industry in particular. He planned questions about EFA and UFA and the other big organizations. But Lubitsch was diplomatically noncommittal.

"I am a director and the making of a picture occupies all of my time," he said. "I cannot answer your questions—you must ask some official of the Hamilton Theatrical Corporation, which brought me here on this visit."

So, with the clock aggravatingly ticking off the precious minutes, the interviewer sought the director's opinion on American films.

"I have not had the opportunity to see most of your great pictures," he said in answer to a request to name the picture he likes best, "but I consider that, among those I have seen, 'Broken Blossoms' is uncomparable, and I doubt if you have any to equal it. The German people went wild over it. Griffith is a great director. This is the picture which decided me to visit your country and study your methods. Another great American picture I have seen is 'Forbidden Fruit.'

"As for the artists, I have seen and admired Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin and Douglas Fairbanks. Chaplin has no equal for popularity in Germany, and neither is there an actor among us who can do Fairbanks' great stunts and delight the people with the virility that is his."

"How are American pictures regarded in Germany?" he was asked.

"They have such great popular appeal," Lubitsch replied, "that some of our directors are imitating them, especially your westerns. They go over strong. German audiences are immensely interested to see how your directors work out the themes assigned them—from the American viewpoint—and to learn your customs and see what the United States looks like."

ERNST LUBITSCH

"What are your plans for the future?"

"I can only say this: that, like some of your American directors, I began costume plays whenever everybody said they weren't wanted, and we found they were wanted. I shall continue making costume plays until it is evident to me that the trend has turned toward modernity.

"Don't ask me about my latest picture. I don't want to talk about it now. I'd much rather have you see it and judge for yourself. I'll only say it introduces Dagny Servaes, a beautiful and extraordinarily emotional Austrian actress, in the leading role, and includes Harry Liedtke, known as the best lover in Germany.

"And that reminds me of a joke on myself. Of all comedy parts that Germans like to play that of a young lover comes first. I wrote a scenario about a young lover and played the part myself. That was during the war, when there was a shortage of mirrors, and the picture was most unsuccessful. It cured me. You cannot be both a director and a player. In "One Arabian Night" I played the hunchback because we couldn't get the right man."

It was annoying the way the clock kept methodically ticking away. The interpreter was restless—poor man, his had been the hardest task, and he had been at it nearly all day.

"Do pretty faces count for much in German films?"

"Oh yes, we like pretty faces and youth but we will readily desert beauty and youth if there is no character and talent—by 'we' I mean the German audience."

Then the conversation turned to historic backgrounds. Lubitsch said they were much easier to stage abroad than here, and they were, "natürlich," much more likely to be faithful reproductions. In this connection Paul Davidson, who is Lubitsch's guide while here, read in a German daily paper, just received, a story of how, since the picture was completed, 250,000 German school children have made pilgrimages to the sets for "The Wife of Pharaoh" to study Egyptian architecture. These pilgrimages were arranged by the educational authorities.

The clock struck 4 o'clock; the interpreter cleared his throat and bestowed a lingering glance on it. So—"Auf wiedersehn."

Ernst Lubitsch arrived on December 24. He will stay about ten days more in New York and vicinity and then visit Los Angeles. His visit in this country will consume about six weeks. In that time he expects to gather a wealth of detail about American production methods.

Herman Robbins Now General Manager of Sales of National Screen Service

HERMAN ROBBINS, who resigned as general sales manager of Fox Film Corporation to go into business for himself, announces he has affiliated himself with National Screen Service as general manager of its sales in the United States.

"I have carefully analyzed National Screen Service in the past few months, its steady growth, and the unqualified praise it meets with wherever shown; and I am keenly aware that it is only a question of time when the National Screen Service method, enabling the exhibitor to show in attractive film form instead of by slides his coming attractions with interesting, box office drawing extracts from those attractions, will be a requisite necessity in every theatre just as feature films, good music, comedies and news reels are now an integral part of his weekly and daily program," Mr. Robbins said.

"Every phase of theatre presentation has shown marked progress in recent years except that of the exhibitor showing his future merchandise to his buying public.

"I am highly gratified to be associated with Messrs. Pollak, Weinberg and Gruen, who are to be complimented for the high esteem in which National Screen Service is held by the thousand exhibitors who now subscribe to the service. I plan to create sales organizations for National Screen Service in the principal exchange centers throughout the country for direct personal contact with all exhibitors as to the value of this service to his patrons and to his box office."

No Albany Censors; Cobb Admits Films Are Generally Good

There will be no reviewing of pictures at Albany by the New York State Motion Picture Commission, according to George H. Cobb, chairman. Mr. Cobb believes that producers and exchanges throughout the entire state can best be served by the present arrangement of reviewing all pictures at the New York office.

Neither will there be any immediate additions to the road force, which consists of only one man, Ansel W. Brown. Later on, however, one or two more may be added.

Mr. Cobb declared that the majority of the pictures submitted to the commission these days are so constructed that no eliminations are necessary. In fact, he said there are no wilful violations of the law these days on the part of either exchanges or producers.

Additional furniture has just been added to the Albany office and from now on duplicates of all violations will be kept at the Albany bureau. This, said Mr. Cobb, will enable the attorney general to prosecute all violations from Albany and the reports covering these violations will be accessible at a moment's notice.

Miners Aided By the Use of Pictures

The use of motion pictures is an important feature of the educational work of the United States Bureau of Mines in promoting safety and health among miners, according to information received from that governmental department. The motion picture films in the possession of the Bureau of Mines are also lent to individuals or organizations which intend to show them for educational purposes, especially for the promotion of safety, health, welfare, and efficiency in the mining industry. They are not permitted to be shown where an admission fee is charged. Transportation charges are borne by the borrower. This service has proved so popular that requests for the loan of some films can be filled only in the order in which they are received.

Most of the bureau's films have been donated by co-operating agencies that are desirous of promoting educational work in the mining industry. During the past year a number of new films have been obtained, four of the most important being "The Story of Asbestos," "The Story of Steel," "The Story of Rock Drilling," "The Story of Sulphur."

Mr. Leopold, of the Washington office of the bureau, conducts the co-operative work with mining and other companies for the making of films of educational character bearing on the mining industry, and renders technical assistance in the planning of the work of making the pictures. He has also made arrangements with motion picture companies so that the bureau receives copies of motion pictures of events of special interest to the mining public.

The educational work of the Bureau of Mines is further promoted by the preparation of exhibits showing various phases of its work. During the past year exhibits of this character were shown at a number of state fairs, and in connection with the meeting of the American Mining Congress at Chicago. The bureau also maintains an exhibit of educational character at its Pittsburgh station. These exhibits have been valuable in promoting a wider knowledge of the mining industry, not only by the general public but by those interested in the industry as well.

Changes Itinerary

Cecil B. De Mille has altered the itinerary of his vacation trip, according to a cablegram received by his representative at the Lasky studio. The producer stated that he had delayed his departure from Rome until December 21 and expected to spend Christmas in Nice instead of Tunis as originally planned.

Whether this change in dates means the abandonment of the producer's trip to Northern Africa or merely its postponement cannot be determined. The cablegram carried the news of the change of dates without additional comment.

German Director Here

Born in Poland, Ernst Lubitsch was originally a tailor's apprentice. He then became a super for Professor Max Reinhardt, and gradually worked himself up to a speaking part under Reinhardt's direction. It was from the great director that he received his production instruction. Lubitsch became well known as a character artist in Jewish roles, similar to characters played by Alexander Carr, Barney Bernard, etc. He later came under the management of Paul Davidson, and created on the screen the roles he had made well known on the stage. His first great picture was "Gypsy Blood." He and Pola Negri grew simultaneously. It was a great combination. He developed into a master director, and she, a great actress.

He is a hard worker and makes it a point never to show anybody any scene of his production during the entire period of producing. It was he who produced "Gypsy Blood," "Passion," "One Arabian Night" and "Deception."

In February of this year he entered into a long term contract with the Hamilton Theatrical Corporation of New York and started the producing of his first picture under that contract. The picture is entitled "The Wife of Pharaoh" and was completed, after ten months of hard work, just one week before he sailed. It required an aggregate of 126,000 extras in the course of filming.

Lubitsch is unbelievably young, 29, and yet he has attained in the German film world the same position that Reinhardt has in the dramatic world.

Mrs. Hamlin Dies

Mrs. Saloma Hamlin, the mother of Thomas J. Hamlin, managing editor of Motion Picture Journal and managing editor of Associated Film Press, died in Minneapolis Tuesday, December 27, at the age of seventy-five. Mr. Hamlin immediately left for Minneapolis.

Public Resents High Salaries and Big Expenditures, Says Charles Christie in Talk to Western Advertisers Body

THE motion picture public resents the tremendous expenditures in motion pictures in the way of salaries and production costs which we know are highly exaggerated," said Charles Christie, the comedy producer, before the members of the Western Motion Picture Advertisers at their last meeting in Hollywood.

"Even if a fortune is actually spent on a certain scene or a star does receive a hundred dollars a minute, I do not think it is good business to make capital of this fact," said Mr. Christie. "This talk about great amounts spent by motion picture people has to a great degree been responsible for a feeling on the part of the public toward the motion pictures that does not work out favorably at the box office."

The producer urged publicity men to eliminate from their copy all references to large sums of money spent in this business and suggested they concentrate their effort on ideas that will create and establish sales points for the product they are boosting and for the industry in general. He also attacked the prologue idea which he said proved detrimental to the importance of the motion picture as a medum of entertainment.

Another speaker was Ed Schallert, dramatic and motion picture editor of the Los Angeles Times, who gave a heart-to-heart talk on what the editor wants from the publicity man. Mr. Schallert made several valuable suggestions which met with the hearty approval of the members.

Wen Milligan, advertising manager of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD and "Rubberneck" Giebler, west coast manager of that publication, were other guests of the evening. Mr. Milligan gave a very helpful address which threw new light upon the importance of the trade paper in the motion picture business.

Other speakers among the members were Roy Miller, chairman of the evening, Harry Brand, who gave some startling facts concerning the recent San Francisco tragedy which strengthened the stand of the defense in the minds of the members; Harry Wilson, who just returned from New York and Larry Weingarten, who also just arrived from a tour of the country. A. McArthur, former advertising manager of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD and now publicity director for Mack Sennett, was introduced as the newest member of the "Wampas."

Nathan Robbins Opens New Watertown Theatre

The Olympic Theatre in Watertown, N. Y., was opened under the management of Nathan Robbins on Christmas Day, and capacity audiences witnessed the shows on the opening day as well as Monday, when the city officials were present at the first evening performance as guests of Mr. Robbins. On this occasion, Dr. J. Victor Wilson, who is general presentation director for all the Robbins' houses, addressed the audience and introduced the Mayor of the city, Robert E. Cahill, who made a speech welcoming Mr. Robbins and his associates to Watertown.

The policy of the Olympic Theatre will be the presentation of the latest and best pictures in conjunction with a program of music rendered by the Olympic Concert Orchestra, under the direction of Patrick Conway and instrumental and vocal soloists who will appear in stage presentations under the direction of Dr. Wilson.

The feature picture at the opening was "The Little Minister" with Betty Compson as the star. Harold Lloyd in "Never Weaken," scenic and educational studies and Pathe News pictures completed the film end of the entertainment. The last half of the week the picture changes were Thomas Meighan in "A Prince There Was" and Ham Hamilton in "Robinson Crusoe, Ltd." Sol Manheimer is general manager for Mr. Robbins' Watertown theatres, the Olympic, Palace and Antique.

Missouri Health Board Lifts Ban on All Travelers

With the lifting of the Missouri State Board of Health's drastic order requiring all travelers to show vaccination certificates motion picture men of the state feel that danger of a general quarantine to prevent the spread of smallpox has passed. The order was to have gone into effect on December 22, but was recalled on December 21.

Smallpox has been prevalent in Kansas City, Jackson County, Jefferson City, Calloway County, Fulton and other sections of the state outside St. Louis. For a time it was feared it might be necessary to prevent all public gatherings to checkmate the disease, but during the past week the number of new cases have decreased greatly and apparently all need of drastic regulatory measures has passed.

During the week Dr. H. F. Owen, city officer for Fulton, lifted the ban prohibiting children under 16 years of age from attending motion picture shows in that city because of the prevalence of smallpox of a very virulent type. The order had been in effect for several days.

Due to the efficiency of the St. Louis Health Department, not a case of smallpox has developed in that city during the past two months. This was a remarkable record in view of the fact that other sections of the state were in the throes of a real epidemic which caused many deaths. During the past three years there has not been a death from smallpox in St. Louis. The city claims the distinction of being the best protected metropolitan district in the country so far as smallpox and other contagious diseases are concerned.

The motion picture men of St. Louis are proud that they have always loaned their screens to further the educational campaigns of the St. Louis Health Department. There is real wisdom in this as healthy people are the ones who attend the movies.

Washington Hearing

"We will point out specifically some of the methods that could be adopted by the Eastman Company to stifle and eliminate competition. Controlling the supply the Eastman Company could:

"Either refuse to sell raw film to one or more of the independent laboratories; or

"Continue to supply the independent laboratories with film at the present prices, and, at the same time, offer to manufacture printed film at a price considerably under the present market rate; or

"Increase the price of raw film to the independent laboratories and at the same time offer to the consumers printed film at the present market price; or

"By failing to make prompt deliveries to independent laboratories, by harassing the said laboratories in any one of a dozen different ways, cause the service rendered by such independent laboratories to fall below the present standard, with the result that patrons would take their business elsewhere."

Patrick A. Powers, of Powers Film Products, Inc., Rochester, N. Y., stated that he had been forced to close down his plant and resort to an importing business on account of the inroads made into his business by the foreign film. He said that he was able to buy at 90 cents a hundred feet film that would cost him over $2 to make in the United States. He wanted the 20 per cent. duty in order to be able to re-engage in the manufacture of film stock.

Sigfried F. Hartman, of the Universal Film Company, denied that his company was proposing to enter foreign countries for the purpose of producing. He pointed out that his company has $6,000,000 invested here in plant and equipment, now being utilized at pretty near full capacity.

"We are not afraid of foreign competition," he said. "We do not want any tariff on the finished negatives simply because we do not care to face the retaliatory action we feel sure will be taken by foreign countries."

Instructions More Easily Absorbed When Given Combined with Motion Pictures

STUDENTS taught by a combination of motion pictures and oral instruction pass examinations which average 22 per cent. higher than those instructed orally only, an experiment conducted on about 500 New York school children by a graduate student at Columbia University shows. The results of the experiment have just been made public at the university in an announcement stating that the course in motion picture making would be continued as part of the university curriculum.

The experiment was conducted by Joseph J. Weber, of Hague, North Dakota, a graduate student in education at the university. More than five hundred students were placed in different groups, it was explained at the university. All at one time were in Group A, and received instruction by oral means only. At another time all were in Group B and had twelve minutes of motion pictures, followed by oral instruction. At another time all were in Group C and had oral instruction, followed by twelve minutes of motion pictures.

Better Than Orally Instructed

"The surprising fact developed that the same students when in Group B or when instructed by motion pictures followed by oral instruction, passed examinations which averaged 22 per cent. higher than when they were instructed orally only," Rowland Rogers, instructor of motion picture making at Columbia, said: "When the students were in Group C which had the oral instruction followed by the motion pictures, they were still 15 per cent. higher than when in Group A, or instructed by oral means only."

The Columbia course in motion picture making, in connection with which the experiment was made, is planned to give a working knowledge of the principles and technique of motion picture production. The students actually produce a motion picture, learning how to plan the picture, how to photograph it, the mechanism of the camera, and learn the methods of producing natural color, cartoon, trick and technical drawing pictures.

Mantzke Joins Hodkinson

Frank Mantzke, formerly manager of the Robertson-Cole exchange in Minneapolis, and at one time manager of the publicity department of the General Film Company in Minneapolis, has been added, to the sales force of the Hodkinson exchange in Minneapolis.

Mr. Mantzke was manager of the Mutual exchange in Kansas City from 1914 to 1919, and was later transferred to Minneapolis.

British Producer Praises R-C Stars and Tells of Handicaps in England

AMERICA, with its censorship problem, by no means has a corner on difficulties in the production of moving pictures. This was the gist of information furnished at the R-C Studios in Hollywood recently by Walter Tennyson d'Encourt, representative of the International Artists Film Co., Ltd., of London, who was visiting Southern California to get information on the production of films in America.

There is a dearth of technical experts in Europe, said Mr. d'Encourt, and this is a handicap that is keenly felt and only time can overcome.

Mr. d'Encourt visited many studios, but spent an entire day on the R-C lot. He was particularly interested in meeting Pauline Frederick and Sessue Hayakawa, because, he declares they are two of the greatest favorites in England, and he was glad to have their views on picture production. He stated both Miss Frederick and Mr. Hayakawa are "The Actors' actors" in England, that is, their histrionic technique, and ability to "put over" things in a subtle way are studied by those anxious to improve their own work upon the screen, also that these two R-C stars are also great box office attractions with the masses.

Mr. d'Encourt gave an illustration of what producers have to contend with in England. His organization recently sent a company to Spain. They took their own supplies, but on returning, had to pay the regular customs charges on this film, whether it had been exposed or not. It is in matters of this kind that British producers are still seeking cooperation from their government.

There is a great need in England now for art directors, electrical experts, and others well versed in off-stage technique, he said. Those trained in the technical side of production in America would be welcomed.

On account of climatic handicap most of their work has to be done indoors. It will not be long, however, Mr. d'Encourt thinks, before British producers are furnishing British exhibitors with a large number of pictures.

While at the R-C Studios Mr. d'Encourt, watched the making of scenes in Doris May's latest R-C production, "Boy Crazy," and also met Mr. Hayakawa and Bessie Love while they were working on Hayakawa's latest production, "The Vermilion Pencil." Mr. d'Encourt was the guest of honor at a studio luncheon attended by Miss May, Miss Frederick, Miss Love, Mr. Hayakawa and a number of R-C Studios executives.

SCENES FROM "QUO VADIS." RELEASED BY WID GUNNING

Chief Bar to Production in India Is Wanton Waste; Films Lack Broad Appeal

(From Our Correspondent)
Calcutta, Nov. 17.

IN my previous article I attempted to make out a strong case in favor of film production in India under expert American direction and with local acting talent, and I feel more convinced than ever to-day that there is a large field for production in this country under these conditions. One feels so sorry that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's enterprise in India could not be engineered to a successful issue owing to causes over which that company had no control, and this is another plea for utilizing the services of local actors and actresses. The climate of India does not agree with every foreigner, and it is a notorious fact that none of the centres of production possess ideal climate.

Personally, I think Calcutta has the best climate of all the cities where film production is possible, and possesses advantages and facilities which few cities in the East enjoy. The place where the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation had its studio in Bombay is a notoriously malarious spot, and I, for one, would not care to spend even the week-end over there. If any producing company from abroad would open a studio in India, I would strongly advise them to have their headquarters in Calcutta. The suburbs of the ex-capital of India offer scenery that any artist would delight to immortalize on canvas, and what little production has already taken place in this city has been done in these suburbs.

Unfortunately, owing to lack of organization, all the companies that have so far tried their hands at the game have met with practically no success whatever. There are about four companies at work in Calcutta at the moment, of which only one is worth any consideration, because it has the necessary capital behind it. Wanton waste has, however, characterised the efforts of this company in every direction. If it has produced an 8,000-foot picture, which, in itself, is much too ambitious a venture for a start, it has wasted 80,000 feet of film. Actors and actresses who do not even have a rudimentary knowledge of acting, are being paid salaries out of all proportion to their capabilities. So-called "expert" cameramen, whose work is mostly "out of focus" and who have no idea as to the value of light, artificial or natural, and who cannot give definition or depth to a scene, are drawing princely incomes by playing a game of bluff with their employers, who, although aware of the worthless nature of their productions are still bent on wasting some more millions until evidently they arrive at the stage when they will have no more money to waste.

I am certain if I proffered any advice to these people, asked them to be more mindful of their money, they would at once jump to the conclusion that I was a foreign spy! So let experience, in their case, be their teacher, however severe that teacher might be, and I only hope that others will profit by their example and not repeat the very same mistakes. Do you know very few go about with their eyes open in this country, and I need not tell you what it is to go about with one's eyes closed in any business and in the producing line, in particular. Economy should be the watchword, even if one has billions behind one's back.

When I mention economy, I mean the opposite of waste, for there is such a thing as false economy, which we call by the more popular expression "penny wise and pound foolish" policy. If it is necessary that under a particular head you must spend a hundred dollars, because you know that ninety dollars would not give you the desired result, by all means spend the hundred, but where ten would be enough, it would be suicidal to think of spending a hundred.

Organization Lacking

This is what is actually happening in this country. Organization, as I stated in my previous article, is the one great thing lacking, and from what I can see. production in India cannot be a success, cannot possibly compete with the crudest foreign output until the organizer has appeared. So far, he has not. The organizer, the man with brains, who comprehends every aspect of the industry, the man who will not tolerate waste in any direction, the man who will save so much money by preventing waste, has yet to make a welcome appearance in the Indian film production field.

In the Bombay Presidency, also, quite a number of companies are engaged on production and I feel sorry that so much of their energy should be misapplied. There are more companies at work on that side of India than in Bengal, where production is confined to Calcutta alone. Dotted all along the Bombay Presidency sea-coast are companies which are daily turning out what you would call nothing but "junk." They delight in trying to adapt mythological stories for the screen, unaware of the great fact that representations of such stories are far more difficult and far more costly than stories that concern ordinary mortals. India has a rich mythological lore, but it requires more than the "skill" of the Bombay producers to transfer it to the screen.

No Sense of Proportion

An organization like the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation might, with the help of a few highly educated Indians thoroughly conversant with Indian mythology, succeed in producing films of this class. But producers in Bombay are determined to run before they have learned to walk! If I am not mistaken, the Indian enterprise of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation did begin the difficult task of producing the great Hindu epics, "The Ramayana" and "The Mahabharata," with two-reel episodes, which any exhibitor could have found room for in his program. That was a sensible move, for the non-Hindu section of the audience at any cinema would get bored in no time were they given nine and ten-reelers at a time! It is a great pity the production activities of that sound concern have had to cease, as otherwise India would have seen something worth looking at in the Indian mythological line.

Cannot these self-conceited Indian producers be brought to their senses and made to understand that there is such a thing as "sense of proportion" in every human undertaking? They have certainly no business head to lead them, as they are evidently quite content to produce for the benefit of only a section of the teeming millions of this country. For film production in India to be a paying proposition, every company bent on "producing" must bear the all-important fact in mind that they must aim at producing pictures that will interest, firstly, the various races and creeds and communities in India itself, and secondly, those living outside India.

Nothing Universal

This is only another way of saying that there cannot be any film industry in India unless the pictures produced are fit for universal consumption—which means that the subjects selected must be understood by the civilized section of the human race, that the manner of presentation must be acceptable to everybody, that direction, acting, photography, settings and mounting must come up to a certain recognized standard, and that production, as a whole, must be such as to create a a demand in markets outside India.

None of these essentials of film production has yet been grasped by any company in this country and from what I have seen, no attempts are being made either to grasp these. The man with the business brains in film production has not risen yet, or the only company that deserves any consideration in Calcutta would not keep on wasting its capital on pictures that it is ashamed to exhibit anywhere but what might rightly be called the backyards of the Indian quarter. Why this should be so with the best American pictures shown daily at the principal cities in India passes comprehension.

Perhaps you are not aware that in this country, the pick of American pictures

Film Distributing Companies with National Systems of Exchanges Have Adopted the Hoy Reporting Service

AS a result of a series of conferences between the New York home office executives of most of the film distributing companies which have a national system of exchanges, the Hoy Reporting Service, that has worked out so successfully in New York, Boston and several other exchange centers, has been adopted throughout the country.

F.I.L.M. Boards of Trade will be organized at once in all the exchange centers east of Denver and north of Atlanta and the Hoy system put into immediate effect for the handling of all complaints and claims which arise between exchanges and theatres.

To carry out the provisions of the plan, the country has been divided into four zones. Zone 1 includes the following territories: New York City, Albany, Buffalo, New Haven, Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and Washington, D. C. The headquarters of the Hoy Reporting Service in this zone are 719 Seventh avenue, New York City. All complaints between exhibitors and exchanges in the exchange centers of this zone will be handled through the New York headquarters of the Hoy Service.

Zone 2 includes the following territories: Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Detroit, Omaha, Kansas City, St. Louis, Indianapolis, Cleveland Cincinnati, and Des Moines. The headquarters of the Hoy Service in this zone will be opened immediately in Chicago.

This will mean an immediate reorganization of exchange managers' associations in all the exchange centers of these two zones that are not at present using the Hoy Service.

In addition to New York City and Boston, the Hoy Service is already being used in Buffalo, Albany and New Haven. In all other exchange centers of Zones 1 and 2, F.I.L.M. Boards of Trade will be organized at once with a uniform set of rules and regulations. In these regulations, an arbitration board is provided for to hear and determine disputes between exchange members and theatres. Theatre owners will be invited to serve on these arbitration boards.

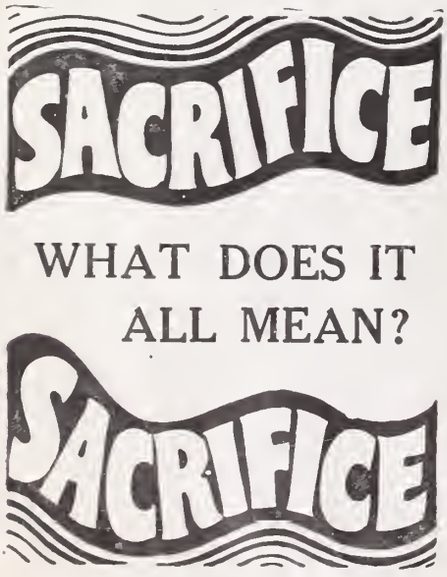
On or before March 1, 1922, the Hoy Service will be adopted in the territory west of Omaha and the territory south of Washington, D. C.

The west will be known as Zone 3. This zone will include: San Francisco, Los Angeles, Denver, Spokane, Butte, Seattle and Salt Lake City. The headquarters of this zone will be in San Francisco and all claims arising in any of the above exchange centers will be handled through a San Francisco branch of the Hoy Reporting Service to be opened prior to March 1.

The south will be known as Zone 4 and will include the following exchange centers: Dallas, Oklahoma, Atlanta, New Orleans, Charlotte, and Memphis. The headquarters of this zone will be in Atlanta and all disputes arising between exchanges and theatres in the branches located in Zone 4 will be cleared through the Hoy Reporting Service at a headquarters to be opened in Atlanta prior to March 1.

The distributing companies whose representatives have attended the series of conferences which resulted in the nationalizing of the Hoy Service are: Goldwyn, Universal, Pathe, Fox, Wid Gunning, R-C, Educational, Metro, Selznick, Vitagraph, Famous Players-Lasky, Pioneer, and W. W. Hodkinson.

The membership of the various F.I.L.M. Boards of Trade, however, will not be confined to the above companies. All exchanges in the various centers will be invited to become members of the newly organized F.I.L.M. Boards of Trade.



U. S. Commissioner of Education Sees a Big Field for Educational Movies

THE educational field of the movies has been practically unexplored, according to John J. Tigert, United States Commissioner of Education. In his annual report, an advance copy of which has been received by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, Commissioner Tigert says:

"Although there are now more motion picture machines in schools, churches, and clubs than in commercial theatres, conditions are such that the industry is organized almost exclusively to serve the interests of the commercial theatres.

Potential Strength

"The demand from educational institutions may never equal in bulk or in steady continuity the commercial demand, and yet its potential strength is sufficient to attract attention if only it can be organized and given expression. Representatives of the larger producers have declared their willingness to produce the films, provided they can be assisted in determining what is needed and can be used in the schools, and they have appealed to the bureau repeatedly to take the initiative in organizing some plan of investigation. No producer or organization of producers can afford to make the necessary analysis of school needs and educational possibilities, and they all lack the motive, the personnel, and the school contacts which are essential to the success of such a study."

The bureau should be permitted to organize at once a division of Americanization and education of illiterates, says Mr. Tigert, because this feature is obviously a function of the Federal Government and should not be left to the different methods of the States.

are seen much earlier than in, say, England. I could mention at least a dozen titles of films that have not yet been "trade shown" in England but have had repeat runs in India. If producers cannot profit by looking at those pictures, cannot improve on their technique—if such a term could be associated with their work—they are not fit to carry on and the sooner they close down the better for all concerned and, especially, for the good name of India. People will not try and find out for themselves the whys and wherefores in the pictures they are seeing daily at the leading cinemas, and until this spirit of inquiry is awakened, India must either give up producng altogether or seek the assistance of men from abroad to guide them—men who have directed and organized and made successes of their undertakings.

Whoever thought a few years ago that the American film industry would occupy the position it enjoys today? Rome was not built in a day, and who can tell when the day may come when a California will spring up in each of the Indian presidencies and the producing industry may class among the country's best assets? But all this must remain a dream until the industry has been organized from A to Z and producing units have realized that they must cater to the world at large.—"INDIO."

"School Days," Backed By McCormick's Sagacious Showmanship, Breaks Records

By ROGER FERRI

"I AM your house the opening show and if your show is good you'll jam them in for the rest of the week." That's the advice that an old boss gave us some five years ago when we started out ahead of a musical troupe headed for the "sticks" of the K. and E. Southern time.

As the years passed we have often thought of that counsel and we have tried our utmost to "jam 'em in." And in that advice we find the foundation so essential in the making of a box office success whether it is a legitimate attraction or motion picture.

And it was on the theory that satisfaction at the opening show—satisfaction resultant from worthwhile and value-received entertainment—that S. Barret McCormick, managing director of the Allen Theatre, Cleveland, O., must have worked when he introduced that wonderful box office attraction, "School Days," to the fastidious theatregoers of that municipality. But while it is the business of the exploiteer, advance man, publicity agent or whatever you want to call him, to "pack" the house, after all, it is the attraction that either encourages or discourages patronage. Presentation and exploitation, however, are necessary factors that must be properly utilized. Poor presentation of a good attraction discourages business; poor exploitation depreciates the box office value of an attraction.

How McCormick Did It

But given a picture like "School Days," which inspires showmen to achieve wonders that show their results in dollars and cents at the box office, the public cannot help but take notice. And no one is better acquainted with this fact today than Mr. McCormick. He "sold" himself first—and then came the task of "selling" the public. And he did it.

"School Days" made history in Cleveland this week and it will repeat it in hundreds of other American cities. Of that we are certain, for immediately after the Cleveland openings the picture was booked into eight first run Ohio theatres for day and date showings—the greatest tribute ever accorded any picture in that wonderful state. But it was the picture, backed up by a demonstration of as fine an example of keen showmanship as has come before the attention of the writer this year, that won out. Mr. McCormick had something to work with. He had more than a picture. He had a magnet. He had nothing to hide and whatever he said about the picture in print or by word of mouth was substantiated by the production itself.

And that is why after jamming them in on Christmas night—an evening when folks usually observe get-together gatherings in their homes—Clevelanders continued to pour into the theatre. There was a reason for this attraction. McCormick had heralded the coming of "School Days" with an advertising campaign that reached out into every home, every shop, every office, every school room, in fact, it reached everyone. As one rode home from work the trolleys announced the engagement, for attractive posters were prominently displayed. The newspaper advertising was characteristic of the campaign itself in that in all reading matter the combination of black and white colors was effectively used. The handsome as well as novel posters with a black background and white letters, outlining a slate, were plastered everywhere. The town was circused so thoroughly that wherever one turned he could not help but seeing the words: Gus Edwards' "School Days." The paper stood out like a bottle of milk in a quart of ink. It was a tribute to the publicity department of Warner Brothers, who are state righting the production.

But "Mac" didn't stop there. He knew he had a picture that every school boy and girl should see. And he wanted every girl and boy in that city to see it. He made it his business that they did. How? On the Thursday previous to the show opening, Mr. McCormick staged a special showing for every school principal and teacher in Cleveland. They taxed the capacity of the house that morning and so well satisfied and entertained were they that the engagement was on the next day announced to every scholar in the city. Result: more children attended the Allen Theatre this week than ever before were crowded into any Cleveland house.

And that was not all. Warner Brothers had issued unique heralds and cutouts of black and white with a very artistic pose of Wesley Barry, the star. These cutouts enabled tieups with every shop in the city. These, together with the attractive posters, were displayed in well-dressed windows in the city centre. Another unusual advertising stunt was the introduction of the "Advertise with Music" campaign conceived by Eddie Bonns, the live-wire exploitation and publicity director of Warner Brothers. With the city circused with attractive paper and the windows handsomely dressed to draw the eye of the passerby, ths stunt was used with splendid results for it aroused no end of talk in the town.

Music Played Up

The musical feature is based on the fact that the Gus Edwards' melodies, universally known, play a big part in the picture. The stunt consisted of a phonograph, the horn of which protruded out of one of the big windows of the down-

Rothacker's New Year's Resolution to Tell 365 Persons Truth About Industry

WATTERSON R. ROTHACKER has made one New Year resolution—that one every one of the 365 days of 1922, he will give some one person a better understanding of the motion picture industry. This daily person may be a street car conductor, an ex-bartender, a preacher or an banker—he merely is determined that there shall be one on every day.

It will be his aim to give this one-per-day individual a true comprehension of the true facts in the case. He will tell this person that all screen stars do not lead multiple lives. That stars and directors do not make a million a year which they squander lavishly. That business-like methods are not unknown in the industry of photoplay manufacture. That enormous producers' profits do not prevail. That the industry is not really out to wreck the morals of our fair land—that censors are as a matter of fact not needed.

Mr. Rothacker would count his efforts well spent if only a small percentage of the 365 became converts. Many of these in turn will tell others. There are thousands of persons identified with the motion picture industry. What if only 100,000 of these would make a resolution like Mr. Rothacker's. It would be like a snow ball which would increase in size with the months and years until——.

The dawning 1922 is seen by Mr. Rothacker as the "most healthful year in the industry's history."

Learning Co-operation

"We have done a house cleaning by means of which a number of evils have been eliminated," said the head of the Rothacker enterprises. "This will prove a good thing from the exhibitor's viewpoint, because elimination of production extravagances will mean better pictures for the same money and consequently better satisfied and larger audiences.

"The fact that all branches of the industry have gone through a critical time augers much for the common welfare. People who pull through a dangerous period together get a respect for the qualities never before recognized in one another. If in the future we disagree with one another in policies or program, let's attempt by personal contact to straighten things out. I realize that it is impossible to attain an altruistic state in the industry, but for selfish reasons we should attempt to achieve the nearest possible approach to that state.

"While the coming year may not be the biggest with respect to gross receipts, I believe it will be the most healthful year yet. We have arrived at normalcy perhaps for the first time in our short career. Exhibitors may now build their future business on a substantial and dependable foundation."

Mr. Rothacker looks for 1922 to bring a closer co-ordination of efforts and ambitions of producers, cameramen, laboratories and projectionists toward better screen values, which naturally will be reflected in the exhibitors' box office receipts. Universally better screen values can be obtained only by the standardization of colors, timing and, finally, projection. While in Los Angeles recently Mr. Rothacker spoke before the American Society of Cinematographers and this organization went on record as solidly behind the suggestion of standardization, promising that co-operation between cameramen and laboratory which is so essential to final screen values.

"School Days" Breaks Record

town store, playing "School Days," Edwards' greatest popular song success. On the roofs of various buildings throughout the city was installed a sound amplifier, which was connected by wire with the music stores and commercial shops, playing the song so that every passerby heard it. This novelty intensified interest in the picture.

Mr. McCormick announced the opening with a quarter-page black and white ad in all the Cleveland papers. He followed this up with similar ads, emphasizing the splendid opening. But the trick had been done. McCormick jammed them in at the opening show. The picture did the rest. They left the Allen Theatre raving over the picture. They agreed that it was an unusual production. They were entertained. They got their money's worth. And they went home and told their folks and friends about it. That was the system Mr. McCormick used. He knew his picture and believed in it. And now all Cleveland is talking about "School Days" just as we expect every other city where it is to be shown to talk. For it is a remarkable picture that not only every child, but also every grownup should see. It refreshes fond memories. But, more than that, it's crackerjack entertainment.

Despite Stiff Opposition

And McCormick crowded his house in spite of the stiffest opposition he has yet experienced. Other showmen in Cleveland appreciated the enormous drawing power of "School Days" and realized that it would please and consequently set the town a-talking. They prepared for this and consequently booked the best attractions they could get. Loew's State featured "The Little Minister," the Park played Richard Barthelmess in "Tol'able David," Stillman headlined "Little Lord Fauntleroy" with Mary Pickford, the Alhambra used considerable newspaper space advertising "The Sheik," while the Rialto played up Mabel Normand in "Molly O."

Record Week

And in spite of the presence of these widely advertised productions, the Allen Theatre with "School Days" played to a record week. This is indeed a fact of which the Warner Brothers, McCormick, Harry Repf, Bill Nigh and the others who in any way had anything to do with the picture, can justly boast. Harry Rapf and Harry Warner both attended the opening, which was the world premier for "School Days."

Trust Controls 350 Japanese Theatres; Industry Shows Remarkable Development

A FULL report of the motion picture industry in Japan has been received at the Department of Commerce from Trade Commissioner Scott, who has just completed an investigation of the industry from Tokyo. The industry has had a remarkable development in the past few years, it is declared in the report. As far back as 1914 or 1915, foreign films, chiefly American, were growing in favor in Japan and they have continued to increase in popularity steadily.

Following is a part of Mr. Scott's report to the department:

"There are in Japan about 600 theatres giving regular performances and about 2,000 more giving occasional performances. From the standpoint of imported films, however, only the 600 need be considered. Of these Tokyo has about fifty houses, Osaka thirty, Kobe fifteen and Kyoto ten, the remainder being scattered throughout the country. These theatres seat between 500 and 1,800. The term seating capacity is a misnomer, as in many houses the lower price of admission entitles one to standing room only. The majority give one performance a day, although some, such as the large houses in Akusaka Park (the Coney Island of Tokyo) give continuous performances and appear to be always crowded.

Trust Controls Many

"Of the 600 theatres, the so-called trust, the Nippon Katsudoshashin Kabushiki Kaisha, owns or controls about 350. The trust is by far the largest picture company in Japan. It owns or controls a majority of the theatres, in many cases owning the buildings. It rents the theatres, supplies films and machines, usually on a percentage basis, and sometimes exercises a supervision over the show. Its percentage of the profits varies with the theatre. The trust has at present two studios, one in Kyoto and one near Tokyo, with a force of 100 actors and fifty cameramen, directors, etc.

"In addition to the theatres, films are in demand for Y. M. C. A. performances, private entertainments, etc., though it is hard to estimate the total volume of this business.

"As an index of the popularity of the motion picture, Tokyo's fifty film theatres play annually to over 10 million people, while the twenty legitimate theatres, with much larger seating capacities, play to somewhat less than 5,000,000. These twenty legitimate theatres give almost exclusively Japanese plays. Two however, the Imperial Theatre and the Yurakazu, occasionally give foreign plays and at times show motion pictures. These two theatres have seats arranged in foreign style. There seems to be no question but that the moving picture has hurt the regular theatre business in Japan to a considerable extent, but there has been no such desertion by actors of the stage for the film as in America, probably on account of the intense pride which the Japanese actor takes in his profession.

"For the better-class theatres the admission charge runs from 0.50 to 1.50 yen (25 to 75 cents) though for some performances as high as 3 yen (1.50) will be charged. The smaller ones charge from 30 to 50 sen (15 to 25 cents) though some prices are as low as 10 sen (5 cents). The average price for all will probably be in the neighborhood of 50 sen (25 cents). Children under 15 (where admitted at all) and soldiers are usually admitted at half rates.

Market for Accessories

"Practically all the cameras used in the picture business are imported, as the Japanese have so far been unable to turn out a satisfactory article. American cameras seem to be very popular, although the trust uses French cameras exclusively. Some German makes are also in use. The duty on cameras is 50 per cent., but as there is no domestic competition, the market for American cameras should increase with the growth of the business.

"With regard to machines, the situation is different. The majority of those in use are of Japanese make, the reason being the difference in price between the imported and the domestic product. The Japanese machine is cheap in quality, but also in price, and as most of the theatres are running on close margins, they state they can not afford American makes, although readily admitting their superiority. Besides, the majority of theatres rent their machines, usually from one of the large companies. The trust manufactures its own machines, furnishing them to its chain of theatres, but it is stated that unless the quality is improved it may have to import machines in the future. A good Japanese machine sells for about $150. One large company handling American machines sold but eight in the last two years.

Methods of Releasing

"Imported machines and accessories are subject to a duty of 50 per cent., and it is complained that the customs have a habit of placing their own valuations on the machines. In regard to importations, dealers here state that where discounts are allowed it is advisable that a statement signed by an official of the exporting company accompany the shipment, stating the reasons for which the discount is allowed. Otherwise, the customs often will not allow it. This, of course, also applies to other goods in this line.

"As a rule individual theatres rent their films from one of the larger companies, who supply them with enough film to make up a complete bill, and programs are changed weekly. The rental charge varies widely, running from $100 to $600 a month, depending on the theatre and the class of film shown. For special films an extra charge is usually made. The programs are long; those for the better class theatres will include two picture of about six reels (sometimes both are foreign, sometimes one, while some theatres show exclusively Japanese films), a weekly news letter, a comedy, and two or three episodes of a serial film (usually an exciting melodrama).

"The trust states that for a first-class foreign film they often secure $200 a week, and for individual performances from $25 to $35. The larger Japanese companies usually buy their films outright and then supply them to their different theatres. A film on the last circuit will last a little over a year and then it is stored. There is little or no sale for films after they have made the rounds. Films are dutiable at 8.25 yen a kin ($3.10 a pound), including inner packing.

No Redress for Pirating

"Complaints are made of pirating of films, and apparently with some foundation, as many individuals make a business of obtaining films in various ways and selling them outright. As there is practically no redress for this sort of thing, American companies should take every possible precaution to safeguard their productions.

"American films practically dominate the market as far as foreign films are concerned, although Italian makes enjoy a certain amount of popularity and some German films have had a remarkably good run. As regards Japanese productions, a decided improvement can be noticed, and the producers are following more and more the foreign style of plot, with more action and less posturing."

Penrhyn Stanlaws Lays Aside Brush and Easel

Penrhyn Stanlaws, the artist-producer, has returned to the Paramount West Coast studio after a month's stay in New York with several new stories tucked away in his grip and tentative plans for several pictures which he will make during the coming year. The star will be Betty Compson.

Stanlaws says that he has deserted for good and all his paint brush and easel for motion pictures. He has closed up his artist's studio in New York and will spend most of his time on the Coast hereafter.

Lasky Sues First National and Strand, Alleging Infringement on "Sumurun"

ALLEGING that the production of "One Arabian Night," presented at the Strand Theatre, New York, the week of October 8, is an infringement on "Sumurun," Jesse L. Lasky as vice-president of the Elwood Amusement Corporation has instituted suit in the New York Supreme Court against the Associated First National Pictures, Inc., the Mitchell H. Mark Realty Corporation, David P. Howells and the David P. Howells, Inc.

It is alleged that in 1912 one Von Frederich Freksa originated a composition or pantomime entitled "Sumurun," which he subsequently transferred to the Deutsche Bioscop Gesellschaft and one Max Rheinhardt, which included the exclusive right to reproduce it in motion picture form in this country. Some time ago, it is alleged, they made a motion picture version retaining the title "Sumurun" for the screen production, and it is alleged they assigned these exclusive rights to Nathan Burkan, the lawyer, who on September 23 transferred the rights to the Elwood Amusement Corporation.

It was with considerable surprise, the plaintiff alleges, it found its production of "Sumurun" being exhibited in this country under the name of "One Arabian Night," and it is charged that knowing of these rights of the plaintiff the Mitchell H. Mark Realty Corporation exhibited the picture at the Strand.

It is contended by Lasky that the production of "One Arabian Night" is an infringement on the imported German picture known as "Sumurun" and its exhibition in violation of the exclusive rights purchased from Burkan. Lasky, therefore, asks the court to issue an injunction restraining the further exhibition of "One Arabian Night" pending trial of the case, and that the defendants be required to account for all money received from the exhibition of the picture, and that the defendants be ordered to deliver up all positive prints and negatives of the picture for destruction or impoundment.

One Fatality

From injuries received in an automobile accident near Albany, N. Y., the Japanese chauffeur of Alice Brady, motion picture star, died December 23 in an Albany hospital without having regained consciousness, following the accident several days before. Miss Brady was injured in the accident, but only slightly.

First National Stars Aid Poor East Siders

At a monster benefit given in the New York Hippodrome on Sunday, December 18, by a galaxy of grand opera and musical comedy stars, one of the interesting events was the sale of twelve dolls donated by First National stars. The proceeds are said to have amounted to $4,000 and will go towards providing a happy Christmas to poor children of New York's East Side.

The donors of the dolls were Norma and Constance Talmadge, Jackie Coogan, Madge Bellamy, Marguerite de la Motte, Anita Stewart, Katherine MacDonald, Richard Barthelmess, Mabel Normand, Hope Hampton, Anita Loos and John Emerson. An additional interest was lent to these dolls by the fact that they were dressed to represent the donors in various roles.

Candee Promoted

Rae B. Candee, with the Robbins Amusement Company of Utica, N. Y., for two years, has been named assistant to Nathan Roberts, president of the company, and as such will transfer his operations from the De Luxe Theatre in that city, to the Avon. Mr. Candee will be succeeded at the Avon by S. A. Allen, a former newspaperman, who has acted as personal representative of Wilmer & Vincent of New York City, for the past five years.

Motion Picture Evidence

In an effort to get before the government officials at Washington the true value and advantages of New York State's Barge Canal, Congressman Peter G. Ten Eyck, of Albany, N. Y., is arranging a National Transportation Night for the latter part of January, and will use motion pictures as a means of explaining in detail the canal system of the state, which represents an expenditure of $50,000,000.

Complete Film Service Furnished the U. S. Navy

A complete moving picture service is now being furnished vessels of the Atlantic fleet and a number of the naval stations, according to the annual report submitted to the President by the Secretary of the Navy, and plans are being made for extension of the work so as to supply the Pacific and Asiatic branches.

The Navy Motion Picture Exchange was established April 15, 1920, at the New York navy yard, and has since been developed to a point where it furnishes a regular and sufficient motion picture service to the Atlantic fleet, the Atlantic naval stations, the West Indian stations, the European stations, and, to a limited degree, the Pacific Coast, it is stated.

The bureau of navigation proposes during the coming fiscal year to extend its service to the Pacific and Asiatic stations. Motion picture sub-exchanges have been established in the first, fourth, fifth, sixth, eighth, eleventh, thirteenth and fifteenth naval districts. Sub-exchanges have further been established in Haiti and Santo Domingo, and the supply of pictures to West Indian stations has been organized on a satisfactory basis. A branch exchange has been established at the Mare Island, Calif., naval training station.

Asta Sues Crusader

Suit to recover $25,000 from the Crusader Film Corporation has been filed in the New York Supreme Court by the Asta Films, Inc. According to the complaint, the plaintiffs say that in September they contracted with the corporation to re-edit and retitle the Asta Nielsen film, "Hamlet," for exhibition and distribution in this country, giving it an American version on its arrival here from Germany. The compensation, it is alleged, was to be $2,500, and $1,000 was paid the Crusader concern to bind the bargain. They say the work was not properly done.

Sees No Permanent Setback of Industry in Spite of Patronage Fluctuations

By SAMUEL GOLDWYN

INDICATIONS point to an improvement in business conditions. Confidence is being restored and the great American public is gradually resuming its normal life.

Motion pictures are an essential part of our living. Knowing this to be true we have no reason to fear lack of patronage even if there are temporary fluctuations in the trade.

We have much to be thankful for in the lessons of the past and the industry as a whole is profiting by them. Production has been placed on a reasonable basis.

Producers are learning that it is far better to make a few really fine pictures each year than to turn out a great number of mediocre ones. With the improvement in the quality of photoplays, the average life of pictures will increase proportionately.

The movement toward longer runs has been gradual, but none the less certain, and speaking for the Goldwyn Company, I may state that we are concentrating on the making of pictures that will justify exhibitors in extending the number of their playing dates.

"The Old Nest" and "Dangerous Curve Ahead" are examples of what may be accomplished through the sheer merit of story and production without relying on the naems of famous stars. Both of these pictures were beautifully acted, but the players were subordinated to the story, which is as it should be.

To start the new year, the Goldwyn Company has another picture of extraordinary quality enacted by a cast that we consider well nigh perfect, but here again faith is centered in the picture as a whole and not in the value of a star's name. I refer to "The Sin Flood."

The optimism reflected through every branch of our organization is based on the knowledge that never in the history of the company have we entered on a new year with so many productions of outstanding merit complete and ready for distribution.

Abraham Lehr, Goldwyn Production Head, Emphasizes Need for Youth to Give Best Interpretation of Photoplay Romances

ABRAHAM LEHR, vice-president in charge of production at the studios of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation in Culver City, Calif., in in New York, conferring with Samuel Goldwyn and other officials of the company on matters of production policy. He expects to remain here for a few weeks developing plans that will be put into operation on his return to the Coast where the studio organization is well ahead of the production schedule for the current season.

In talking of the production requirements of the day, Mr. Lehr stressed the need for youthful players to interpret youth and romance on the screen. "We cannot afford to stand still," said Mr. Lehr, "we cannot rely on actors and actresses because they have become popular in youthful roles. In the ordinary course of events the passing years leave their mark on these players just as they do on all the rest of us and it becomes necessary to find others to fill their places.

Youth Has its Magnetism

"A careful study of the preferences of motion picture fans throughout the country leads to the conclusion that the great majority want above all else a dominating love motive. Now this love interest does not always have to be centered in extremely youthful characters; but there is no getting away from the fact that youth, romance and love are generally a more attractive trinity than middle age, romance and love. This being the case there is no ignoring the need for the attributes of genuine youth in our acting personnel.

"The artful actor does wonders in simulating characteristics that are not his own, but after all there is a magnetic something about youth—its verve, its sparkle that can be reflected on the screen through the medium of youth itself. Goldwyn is a young company and it intends to remain so.

"We have young men in high executive positions in all branches of the organization and through them we get a constant supply of fresh ideas. We have players such as Patsy Ruth Miller and Cullen Landis who radiate youth and high spirits and we are looking for more of the same caliber.

Must Appeal to Average

"In selecting players we keep in mind the need for appealing to the average taste of the American public. Clean-cut, wholesome young men and women whose experiences have not hardened them or led to a premature sophistication are the natural interpreters of the romance of the rising generation. Exotic types may have a brief vogue, but their popularity is necessarily limited.

"Another important point in making pictures of broad appeal is what may be termed finish in production. Goldwyn pictures have won a reputation of being carefully produced in the matters of settings, lighting and photography. All of these are, of course, held secondary to the story, but they can be made of great value in conveying the desired impression to an audience.

Careful Work in All Details

"Under the direction of Cedric Gibbons, art director at the Goldwyn studios, every detail of a picture's setting is carefully worked out in order to secure a suitable atmosphere, and where the story permits, no expense is spared to present homes of wealth and good taste. Considering that photoplays afford thousands of motion picture patrons their only glimpse of the more luxurious side of life, these rich backgrounds must serve to quicken the imaginations of many limited lives. They may in a way give substance to dreams of comfort never realized in actual experience.

"Along the same line, the value of beautiful costumes in pictures depicting society life is never overlooked. Recognizing the exhibitor's need for attracting matinee business, and the fact that his audiences are largely comprised of women, it is easy to figure that clothes are important. Take a picture like 'Grand Larceny,' for example. Here we have Claire Windsor, one of the most beautiful women on the screen, appearing in a variety of stunning gowns. That the attractiveness of the picture, in the eyes of is materially enhanced by these fashionable costumes is obvious."

Referring to the type of story that Goldwyn has in mind for coming productions, Mr. Lehr said that the editorial policy was broad enough to include whatever was true and sincere and likely to be interesting to the great mass of theatre patrons. He emphasized the value of the human note, which is found in stories such as Peter B. Kyne's "Brothers Under Their Skins," soon to be placed in production.

Exhibitors Want Films Like "Theodora," "Old Nest" and "Dangerous Curve Ahead"

By ALFRED WEISS

Vice President, Goldwyn Distributing Corporation

THE year 1922 will be the year of the big photoplay. And by big I mean in subject matter, in imaginative direction, in box-office value, adequate production and in acting marked by high intelligence and truthfulness to human nature and social conditions.

Has Had Big Success

Take our imported spectacle, "Theodora," for instance. It has had the biggest kind of a boxoffice success because it is the world's great spectacular photoplay —the critics of six of America's largest cities bear witness to that fact—and the exhibitors are keen to book it. It is the sort of production, in its bigness, that the exhibitor wants.

But exhibitors want other big pictures aside from the spectacle as the great success of Goldwyn's two Rupert Hughes photoplays of modern, everyday domestic life, "The Old Nest" and "Dangerous Curve Ahead," indicate with the greatest certainty. There is nothing spectacular about either of these photoplays yet they are really big pictures and exhibitors have made big money with them.

Big Pictures Are Business Getters

Exhibitors have learned during the past year that big pictures will double and treble box-office receipts. I have personally received hundreds of letters from exhibitors all over the country telling me that they had done the biggest business of the year, and often in the history of their theatres, with "The Old Nest" and "Dangerous Curve Ahead" and asking for more productions as big in subject matter, direction, acting and producing as those two pictures.

Goldwyn will have a number of productions for the new year that will measure up with these two in every respect. Several have already been completed, others still are in production while still others are scheduled for production in the near future.

For instance, "The Sin Flood" I consider one of the biggest pictures this season. Its theme is as big and vital as its acting and production.

"Grand Larceny" will, I am confident, rank high among the dramatic photoplays of 1922. It possesses drama, vivid characterization and stamina in a high degree.

Rupert Hughes will be represented by a new domestic comedy-drama, "The Wall Flower," which should rival in interest "The Old Nest" and "Dangerous Curve Ahead."

Of the other big productions on the Goldwyn list it is too early to speak at this time, but several of them are destined to rank with the biggest pictures Goldwyn has ever made.

This publication is dedicated to the service of the moving picture industry in all of its elements. Its foundation is character, its watchword is enterprise, its aim is betterment.

THE arrival in America of Ernst Lubitsch is in itself an event of importance because he represents the new inspiration that Europe has given to moving pictures, an inspiration that has stimulated American production quality even more than it has stimulated European achievement. Lubitsch is now twenty-nine years old and he was twenty-one when he made his first picture. His masterpieces (under their American names) include "Passion," "Deception," "One Arabian Night" and "Gypsy Blood." Of these, "Passion" and "Deception" have proved the most inspiring through their splendid art, their perfections of taste and the lessons they teach in the handling of masses.

It is scarcely too much to say that the advance in our production art in this country is directly traceable to the real competition of Lubitsch. The improvements for which our New York censors claim the credit are so far removed from their sphere that they could with equal grace claim credit for the Peace Conference or a mild winter.

To Lubitsch, as an artist whose genius is ripening and broadening as it finds expression, the screen of the world owes a heavy debt. It is pleasant for the industry to be able to greet him personally and to learn his modesty and personableness. We desire to say to him what we have said before by calling attention to the fact that the forward looking men of the screen, backed by the cordial sentiment of the majority of those engaged in all parts of the picture business, want this competition to remain open. They, all but a narrow visioned minority plus the politicians of the Actors' Equity, desire no tariff wall for a protection that we neither need nor want. The retaliatory tariffs would work a great hardship on the exhibitors because the costs which now are pro-rated on a world basis would have to be pro-rated on a United States basis. Aside from the mere money of it those who really are thinking straight on the subject see the idiocy of trying to make art anything but international.

We extend to Mr. Lubitsch a hearty welcome and express a regret that his stay with us is to be confined to a matter of only a very few weeks.

We extend our heartfelt sympathy to our brother, Thomas J. Hamlin, managing editor of the Associated Film Press, on the death of his mother, Saloma Hamlin, who passed away in Minneapolis on Tuesday, December 27. Mr. Hamlin is an honored member of his profession and his many friends will join with us in sharing his sorrow.

At the launching of the Holley Movement whereby theatres were to be supplied with film free and in quantities for the purpose of educating the youth of the country, MOVING PICTURE WORLD asked a few necessary questions which up to date have not been answered. In the meantime the Advertising Clubs of the World, a very important and a very responsible organization in no wise connected with the moving picture industry, began an investigation of the Holley Movement because certain of its clients and members had received letters, purporting to have been written by Dr. Holley and bearing his name, requesting commercial houses to make pictures. The character of the letters caused them to be regarded as worth looking into. We are advised that this investigation is now complete and that a copy of the findings has been sent to Dr. Holley in order to give him an opportunity to reply fully before publication is made. We have not seen this report and, therefore, are unable to discuss its contents, but we indulge the hope that the Holley Movement will be settled one way or another and settled promptly.

WE present an exhibitor's suggestion to you, all of you, in all parts of the industry, as a sound and solid platform for the twelve months now beginning.

Mind your own business; work at it; keep a fast hold on it; do your worrying on the thirty-fifth day of every month, and spend the energy you save in getting the most out of this very business of yours.

Let politics alone; let the gloom shouters make all the noise they want to, for there's a big success coming to you if you stick to your business for 365 days of this coming year less your right percentage of holidays and rest.

Now then, a New Year of work will bring you a New Year of satisfaction and heavy money.

Pathe Playlets Were Written by Well-Known Playwrights

Some of America's greatest playwrights and leading novelists are authors of the Pathe Playlets which Pathe will issue in three-reel form, beginning with Frank Keenan's "The Midnight Stage,' on January 29. A compilation of the authors of these plays reads like a "Who's Who" of American dramatists, and is a sterling tribute to the policy of Pathe when making these pictures of selecting the best America had to offer in a literary way.

Included among the authors of the first fifteen features Pathe has nominated for reissue in condensed form are Winchell Smith, Paul Armstrong, Carolyn Wells, George Scarborough, Gilson Willets, John Moroso and Ellery Clark.

Winchell Smith, one of the co-authors of "Lightning," which ran for three years on Broadway, co-operated with Paul Armstrong in writing "Via Wireless," also a New York triumph, starring Gail Kane in the picture version which Pathe has slated for issuance on February 12.

Paul Armstrong won his place in the front rank of America's playwrights with "Alias Jimmy Valentine," "The Deep Purple," "The Greyhound" and other celebrated stage successes. Winchell Smith, in addition to "Lightning," also has to his credit "Turn to the Right," "Three Wise Fools" and others of the biggest money makers in American stage history.

"At Bay" is the work of another well known dramatist, George Scarborough, and also is an adaptation of a successful play. Scarborough is rated as one of the leading present-day authors, and his "Son-Daughter," produced last year by David Belasco, with Lenore Ulrich in the leading role, was one of the box-office triumphs of the theatrical season.

"Loaded Dice," a Frank Keenan picture, is Ellery Clark's contribution to this great list of productions. Clark is known for his ability to portray melodrama in words, and many of his novels are listed among the best sellers of today.

Henry C. Rowland, one of the favored contributors to the Saturday Evening Post, wrote "The Closing Net," which Edward Jose directed with a cast headed by Madelaine Traverse. This story originally appeared in the Saturday Evening Post, and later was issued in book form. The characters of "Chu-Chu," "Leontin" and "The Tidewater Clam," made famous by this story, are still the characters manipulated by Rowland in his Saturday Evening Post fiction works. This is one of the strongest melodramatic plays ever produced on the screen.

"The Mark of Cain," starring Irene Castle, with Antonio Moreno leading man, is from the pen of Carolyn Wells, a "master of mystery." George Fitzmaurice made a superb picture from this story. Miss Wells is author of many "best selling" novels.

John Moroso, in addition to being a novelist of repute, has written many motion picture successes which include "Vengeance is Mine" in which Irene Castle is starred, with Elliott Dexter as her leading man. George Fitzmaurice also directed this production.

If "The First Law" is selected as the release for April 23, it will bring again to the screen the name of Gilson Willets, for years noted for his melodramatic writings. It was Mr. Willets who wrote "Hands Up," the Pathe serial in which Ruth Roland met with sensational success. He also wrote "The Double Cross," the novel which was adapted into serial form and starred Mollie King. In addition to these, Mr. Willets has written other photoplays and novels, including "Anita," "Workers of the Nation," "His Neighbor's Wife," and "Loves of Twenty and One."

Irene Castle starred in "The First Law," with Antonio Moreno as the romantic hero.

Business Big

A. G. Constant, general manager of the Tri-State Amusement Co., owners of the Strand Theatre, Steubenville, Ohio, writes to the United Artists home office that the Strand patrons were more than pleased with Rex Beach's "The Iron Trail." "Our business was good on this feature," says Mr. Constant, "and we personally considered it a splendid attraction."

SCENES FROM "THE UNFOLDMENT," THE INITIAL OFFERING OF ASSOCIATED EXHIBITORS FOR 1922

Laemmle Asks Bids on "Foolish Wives"; Salesmen to Cover Only the Big Cities

AFTER waiting a year and a half for "Foolish Wives," Carl Laemmle has the satisfaction of seeing the final arrangements for its showing and distribution to exhibitors moving in the smoothest and most encouraging order. The past week has seen the completion of the distribution plan and has received thousands of assurances that exhibitors are highly appreciative of the decision which he made to let them have it direct instead of following a long period of extended engagements in individual cities.

For the purposes of distributing "Foolish Wives" the Universal has created a sales force operating directly from 1600 Broadway, New York City. This force consists of eight men to each of whom has been assigned a territory or zone. These men have nearly all of them been busily engaged with H. M. Berman, the exchange manager, on the details of the selling plan for the last three weeks. They will be occupied for some time only with the big cities in their zones, and it will be necessary for them to do a great deal of traveling in order to cover the territory which the Universal for ordinary selling purposes has divided into thirty-three exchanges.

For this reason it has been thought best to announce to exhibitors that all inquiries about the release of this picture in their territories should be addressed direct to 1600 Broadway, in order to receive the prompt attention which it is Mr. Laemmle's desire shall be given to every offer from exhibitors on this picture.

Mr. Laemmle is fully convinced that "Foolish Wives" will be the bright spot in the theatrical season for thousands of exhibitors. He believes that the big takings that they make in the course of a year can be counted on the fingers of one hand. The reason is because there are not enough big productions available. Now that he has the opportunity within his hand to assist so many exhibitors to start the year 1922 with a big profitable engagement, he is letting nothing stand in the way of any exhibitor from making an offer to his for "Foolish Wives." He has determined that the machinery described above will be the most rapid and effective for putting exhibitors in touch with the "Foolish Wives" release dates which are open in their territory. For this reason he has not thought it wise to announce the cities from which these personal representatives are going to operate. It will facilitate matters greatly if all bids are sent direct to 1600 Broadway.

This matter having been determined, Mr. Laemmle resolved to follow up his move of giving his costly picture direct to exhibitors by an equally striking departure. He has, in the statement just issued, asked every exhibitor who is interested in "Foolish Wives" to make him personally a bid on the picture. The following is his statement addressed to exhibitors:

"You have never before been asked to bid for a picture. But Universal's million dollar picture is so totally beyond the class of any production ever before attempted that it must be handled in a revolutionary manner.

"Universal can never get its money back on this stupendous super-production. It has already cost so much that by the time we haxe exploited it and have made the prints we will have to take in $2,500,000 to break even!

"I could take in more money than this by road-showing 'Foolish Wives.' But there are two powerful arguments against such a method. First, road-showing is a slow process. Second, I consider it unfair to you exhibitors and therefore poor policy, to make regular picture theatres wait for months and months, and maybe years, after release date before showing the screen's greatest effort.

"I want moving picture theatres to have first crack at the biggest achievement in the history of the industry. I say I want this. But I can't afford to sacrifice a $1,000,000 picture—the only one ever made—to accomplish it. Therefore I can't go through with it unless you meet me more than half way.

"Some of the greatest exhibitors in the world have made handsome offers for first run of 'Foolish Wives.' But, as handsome as those offers have been, they do not cover that part of the negative and positive cost chargeable against their cities.

"Better still, such men as Tom Moore of Washington, Felt Brothers of Philadelphia, Ruben & Finkelstein of St. Paul and Minneapolis, and others, have offered me their theatres on any terms I see fit to make, because they say the industry owes this tribute to Universal! It is a great spirit, a new spirit, a spirit which will inspire Universal to reach greater heights in the future than it ever hoped for before.

"Other exhibitors have said that I will be justified in asking terms that have never been dreamed of before. One man said, 'Your company has done a thing no other concern ever dared to do. You are entitled to recognition for this. You are entitled to the very highest limit every exhibitor can give you.'

"It was this exhibitor who suggested that I ask you to make your very highest bid for 'Foolish Wives.' Will you do it? Will you smash all precedent and tell me the very limit you can stand in order to have the honor of being the first to present the first $1,000,000 production in your city? Will you demonstrate that my policy of giving motion picture theatres first chance is the right policy?

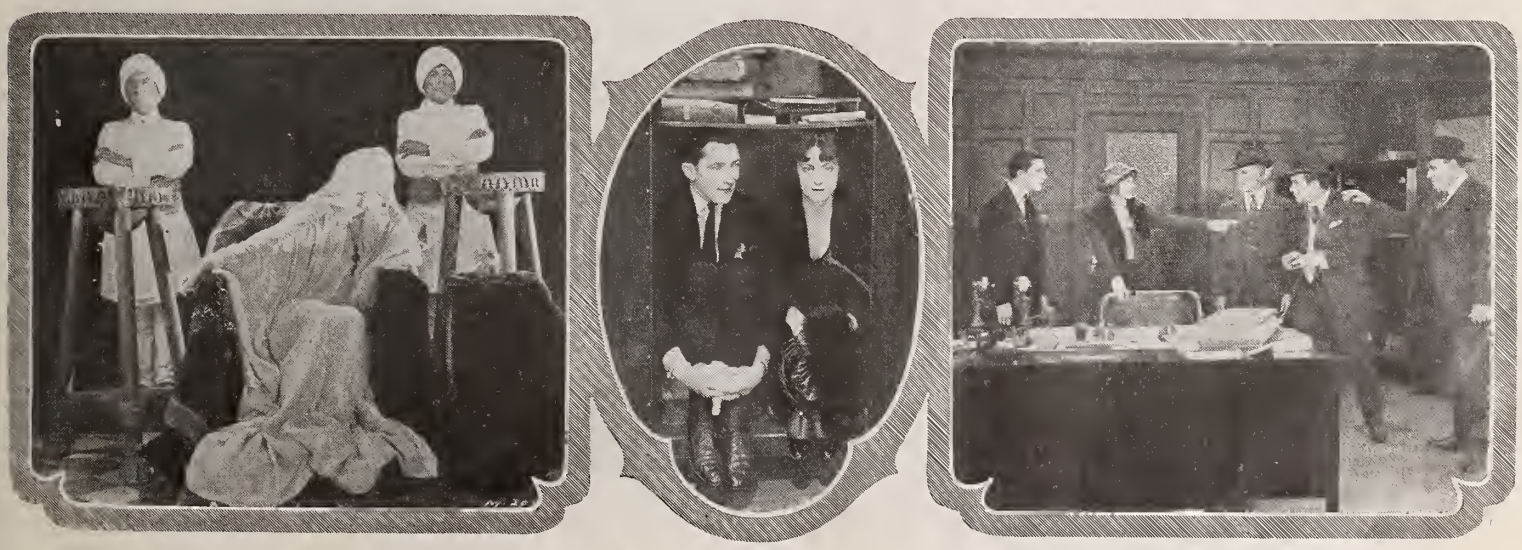
"With so much at stake I naturally reserve the right to accept or reject your bid; in either event, I am going to receive it in the best of faith, just as I ask you to accept this announcement. Address all bids to Universal Film Mfg. Co., 1600 Broadway, New York City."

The opening at the Central Theatre in New York has been changed from January 8 to January 11. The interest in "Foolish Wives" is to blame. The opening will be as brilliant as any theatrical first night, and the change was made to prevent conflict with other opening attractions, of which there will be an unusual number following the holidays.

Making Four Films on the Lasky Lot

The Lasky studio at Hollywood recently presented an appearance suggesting a composite picture of a gathering of a gigantic circus troupe, a grand reception to the embassies of the world, a musical comedy rehearsal and a grand opera ensemble. Working in the big settings was a great throng of players, assembled for "The Noose," William D. Taylor's production starring Betty Compson; Sam Wood's production of Elinor Glyn's story, "Beyond the Rocks," with Gloria Swanson as the star; Thomas Meighan's picture, "The Proxy Daddy," directed by Al Green, and Wallace Reid's "Across the Continent," directed by Philip E. Rosen.

Some gorgeous costumes were used in the reception scene staged for "The Noose," while in "Beyond the Rocks" a Tyrolean tavern scene with native dancers and musicians.



SCENES FROM "WINNING WITH WITS," STARRING BARBARA BEDFORD. A WILLIAM FOX RELEASE

Fox Lists Big Productions for Release During January

From Fox Film Corporation comes announcement that "Man's Weakness," the first production starring William Farnum since his return from a long rest in Europe, will head the list of January releases for that organization.

Adapted from the novel by Alexander Dumas, the story deals with a romantic chapter in the life of Edmund Kean, the famous English actor of the early nineteenth century. It was screened with sincere devotion to detail of the life of that period. Herbert Brenon is the director.

In the New York studios of William Fox, where the picture was made, there was erected an interior of the world-famous Drury Lane Theatre of London. The stage, proscenium, loges, royalty's boxes, and the auditorium are exact in every respect. Twelve weeks were spent in research to make possible the various scenes in "Man's Weakness."

The picture carries an exceptionally large cast of notable screen and stage actors, among them being Holmes Herbert as the Prince of Wales; Paul McAllister, the former matinee idol, as Count Koefeld; Etienne Gerardot as Salo'man; Peggy Shaw as Anna Damby; Myrta Bonillas as the Countess, and America Chedister, Ruth Goodwin, Paula Shay, Edward Boring, and Bernard Seigel.

Tom Mix's January release will be "Sky High," in which the star is supported by Eva Novak in a story of the Southwest. Mix is seen as a young immigration inspector serving on the Mexican border. As the picture progresses he becomes the dashing hero of a series of thrilling scenes taken in the Grand Canyon of Arizona. The photodrama was directed by Lynn F. Reynolds.

"Any Wife" is the title of the Pearl White production in the January list. It is a picturization of the dire consequences of a wife's unwarranted discontent. Herbert Holmes is seen in the part of the villain. Herbert Brenon directed.

Shirley Mason's release, "Little Miss Smiles," gives the demure Fox actress the part of a little-big sister of the New York Ghetto who struggles through an appealing chapter of her life with a blind mother, a shiftless father, a pugilistically-ambitious brother and a number of younger members of the family. The story was written by Myra Kelly and the picture directed by Jack Ford.

From the widely read novel, "Gleam O'Dawn," by Arthur Goodrich, the noted author, was adapted the story for the first starring vehicle of John Gilbert, recently raised to stellar distinction by William Fox. It is a stirring tale of love, hate and adventure in the Canadian Northwoods, and Gilbert's first performance as a star is said to be remarkably fine. The histrionic heights attained by this young actor in "Shame," the big Fox special, released in October, earned for him the right to stardom. After assuming the leading role in another super-special production made at the Fox West Coast Studios, for release early in 1922, Gilbert was made a star, and "Gleam O'Dawn," directed by Jack Dillon, is his first picture in that capacity.

"Winning With Wits," starring Barbara Bedford, is the second Fox picture in which she appears as a star. Her first, "Cinderella of the Hills," received the hearty endorsement of the critics throughout the country, and under the direction of Howard M. Mitchell her latest offering is declared to surpass in many details her first. "Winning With Wits" has for its theme the cleverness of a courageous daughter in exonerating her father from an unjust charge and freeing him from prison.

There are three Sunshine Comedies on the January production list. They are "Try and Get It," "False Alarm," and "Hold the Line." An exceptional group of Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons completes the release schedule. Included are "A Ghostly Wallop," "Beside Her Cider," "Long Live the King," "The Last Laugh," and "The Holy Cheese."

Fox News will present, as usual, a series of interesting events and human interest scenes, many of them from foreign countries.

Finish Anita Stewart's "The Woman He Married"

The filming of Anita Stewart's "The Woman He Married," has been completed at the Louis B. Mayer studio under the direction of Fred Niblo and is expected to be ready for shipment to First National, New York, within the next few weeks.

"The Woman He Married" was adapted by Bess Meredyth from the stage play by Herbert Bashford, formerly a San Francisco newspaperman. The story has subtle comedy, human interest touches, romance and strong dramatic situations. The sensational climax is followed by an ending that is a little different from the smile-embrace-kiss finale.

Supporting Anita Stewart, Darrl Foss heads the list, with Shannon Day, Donald MacDonald, William Conklin, Charlotte Pierce, Charles Belcher and Frank Tokunaga, in important roles. Dal Clawson was in charge of the photography and Doran H. Fox served as assistant to Mr. Niblo.

Rialto Books Hurst Story

"Just Around the Corner," a Fannie Hurst story filmed by Cosmopolitan Productions, will have its first New York presentation at the Rialto Theatre beginning Sunday, January 1. This production was directed by Frances Marion who also wrote the scenario. It was Miss Hurst who wrote the orginal story of "Humoresque," the Gold Medal winner of 1920, and Miss Marion who wrote the scenario of that great success. The new picture is released by Paramount.

If there is one class of persons more than another to whom "Just Around the Corner" will appeal it is to girls all over the world. The picture tells of a young and beautiful girl, "standing with reluctant feet where the brook and river meet." Like most girls of her age she longs for romance and she imagines she is finding it in the company of a presumptuous, smug, young cad who hasn't the faintest trace of fine feeling.

Margaret Seddon has the role of the mother. Lewis Sargent is her son, Jimmie Birdsong, and Sigrid Holquist plays the daughter, Essie. Others in the cast are Fred C. Thomson, Edward Phillips, Peggy Parr, Mme. Rose Rosonova and William Nally.

"A Doll's House" Makes Progress

So marked has been the progress in making Ibsen's "A Doll's House" the forthcoming Nazimova production, and her first to be released through United Artists, that it is now being predicted that the picture will be completed and ready for presentation some time during the month of February next.

Among the foremost players in the cast engaged by Nazimova are Alan Hale, Wedgwood Nowell, Nigel deBrulier, Florence Fisher, Elinor Oliver and Cere Lee. Little Phillippe DeLacy and Barbara Maier will appear as the children.

In giving to the screen her portrayal of Nora Helmer, Nazimova will revive one of her greatest roles, and one in which she has achieved great distinction on the spoken drama during her first appearance as an English speaking actress.

"A Doll's House" is being directed by Charles Bryant, assisted by Al Kelley. Charles Van Enger is the chief cameraman.

Film Completed

Director Frank Urson has completed Realart's Helen R. Martin story, starring Mary Miles Minter, and between intervals of cutting will prepare for her next photoplay, a Harvey Thew adaptation of a story by Mary Morrison.

Irene Castle Gives Party to Kiddies

Nearly a hundred pickaninnies from the San Juan Hill section, west side, New York City, were made happy last week when Mrs. Irene Castle, star in Edwin L. Hollywood productions released by Hodkinson, played Mrs. Santa Claus for the members of the Lincoln House branch kindergarten of the Henry Street Settlement Association.

This is the fifth year in succession that Mrs. Castle has journeyed over to the San Juan Hill section with a load of dolls for the girls and fire engines for the boys.

The party was held in the rooms of the Lincoln House branch, and the supervisor and matrons had arranged a special reception for their distinguished guest. There was a lighted Christmas tree and the rooms were decorated with holly wreaths and Christmas bells. The program consisted of singing and dancing by the children and a special chorus by the mothers. Then came the big moment. Reading the names from the kindergarten record, Mrs. Castle called each little girl and little boy to the front of the room and handed out the presents.

When the party was over Mrs. Castle hurried back to the studio to complete an important interior for "The Rise of Roscoe Paine," an early 1922 Hodkinson release.

Says "Miss Lulu Bett" Proves Public Likes Artistic Pictures

"The success being achieved by William deMille's picture, 'Miss Lulu Bett,' is gratifying because it is striking evidence that you do not have to play down to the American public," said Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

"Because some pictures, well acted and well produced, have not gone over to tremendous successes," said Mr. Lasky, "a certain section of the industry has apparently jumped to the conclusion that, to be successful, picture producers must stick to hokum and claptrap. I have no patience with this theory, as it has been demonstrated that you cannot aim too high in entertainment for the American people.

"In producing 'Miss Lulu Bett' we not only took into consideration the powerful drama in Zona Gale's story, but the popularity of her novel and play. We saw immense possibilities, and we were strengthened in our belief by letters from leaders of various communities expressing pleasure that they were going to have a chance to see 'Miss Lulu Bett' on the screen.

"The success of 'Miss Lulu Bett' at the Rivoli Theatre, New York, and other big first-run theatres proves we were justified in our high hopes. Hugo Riesenfeld, managing director of the Rivoli, told me he thought 'Miss Lulu Bett' was one of the best motion pictures he had seen in all the years he had been in the business. He wanted to book this picture day and date in the Rivoli and Rialto, but other bookings prevented.

"Given to the public without clamor and hubbub, 'Miss Lulu Bett' has proved one of the biggest box-office pictures we have released. That it is possible to make a big box-office success and at the same time an artistic success is evidenced by the reviews on its opening in New York.

"Alan Dale in the New York American called 'Miss Lulu Bett' a 'delightfully convincing picture,' and said that nobody who has assimilated Zona Gale's novel will hesitate to praise the film.

"Heywood Broun in the World said: 'William deMille has done an excellent job in his production of Zona Gale's "Miss Lulu Bett." It is an excellent picture without lugs or dewdabs and is worthy of your attention.'

"The New York Journal reviewer said: 'Here is a splendid picturization of a fine book and play, and proof that character analysis can be transferred from book to screen, from screen to onlooker.' The New York Globe called the picture 'a screen masterpiece, 'and the Evening Post said, 'If you want to see a good photoplay go to the Rivoli, where they are showing "Miss Lulu Bett."'

"Too much praise cannot be given William deMille for his direction of this picture. Not only in the numerous details which built up the picture, but in his preservation of the atmosphere throughout. Not a little of the credit for the success of the production should be given to Clara Beranger, who did the scenario, and to Lois Wilson, who played the title role, as well as the other actors who made up an unusually well balanced cast.

"Striking evidence of the power of this picture is given in the repetition of one fact in a large percentage of the numerous telegrams we have received from exhibitors."

Pathe's "Behold the Man" Is Film of Jesus' Life in Colors

"Behold the Man," Pathe's hand colored story of the Life of Christ, has received a notable tribute from James Dean, film critic of the Newspaper Enterprise Association. To his audience of more than a million theatre goers, Mr. Dean said:

"The 'best seller' of all times is the Bible. That is because, judged from a literary standpoint alone, it possesses more dramatic situations than have ever been enclosed between the covers of any other volume.

"The Bible engages the imagination more than any other work of literature. That is manifested by the number of creeds founded upon the Book, creeds that by their variance prove that life in all its phases, in all its tragedies and comedies, its hopes and its despairs, is reflected therein.

"A number of film versions of the Bible have been made. Most of them have failed because they have not transferred the Bible to the screen in its dramatic phases only. But 'Behold the Man' is a short seven reels and is a work of rare dramatic merit."

Stillman Theatre, Cleveland Adopts Policy of Longer Runs

The Stillman Theatre, one of the largest and finest of Cleveland's downtown houses, has adopted the policy of long run showings of big pictures, putting on three and four week showings at 35 and 50 cents for matinees and 50 to 75 cents at night. The theatre seats 2,000.

"Man-Woman-Marriage," the big First National production made by Allen Holubar, was one of the recent attractions shown under this policy. Acting in co-operation with Walter E. Lusk, manager of the Associated First National Cleveland Exchange, Manager Jack Kuhn gave a special showing of the picture a few days before its scheduled opening, to an invited audience of clubwomen at Loew's Euclid Theatre.

"We thought this move wise because the picture has a special appeal to women," said Mr. Kuhn. "Such a showing always awakens interest. People know that the picture must be good or the management would not risk holding such a screening and inviting comparison."

Signs were also placed on the Euclid avenue street cars—mounted on the front just below the vestibule window. A special feature of all the advertisement was the carrying of the starting times of the picture—11 a. m., 1, 3, 5, 7 and 9 p. m. In addition window cards were used in nearby shops, and a 24-sheet was mounted in the lobby.

The Stillman is situated only a few doors from the corner of Euclid avenue and East Ninth street, said to be the second busiest corner in the country.

Vignola Making New Production

While no definite announcement is forthcoming, it is understood that Robert G. Vignola's next production for Cosmopolitan, for which he is now preparing, will be a big spectacular picture requiring colossal sets and a large number of people. Mr. Vignola has just completed "Beauty's Worth" by Sophie Kerr, starring Marion Davies.

Peters in "The Storm"

House Peters will star in the Universal-Jewel dramatization of "The Storm," Langdon McCormick's stage play. The story is simple in theme, but powerful, and concerns two men and a girl who are snowbound in the North Woods.

J. G. Hawks is writing the continuity.

SCENES FROM "TOO MUCH WIFE," STARRING WANDA HAWLEY. A REALART PICTURE RELEASED THROUGH FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY CORPORATION

Pathe News Says Its Quick Service Was Year's Outstanding Development

Pathe News' tenth anniversary celebrated just a year ago the remarkable development of motion picture news reporting. But Pathe says it did not foresee that the eleventh year would show achievements in handling big events excelling any in previous records of film news service.

During the past year the greatest advance in film news service has been along the line of speed in getting the pictured events before the public. Transmission of news negatives from distant points by airplane has become an established system. Pathe News uses airplane service so constantly that a large number of the important newspapers of New York and other important cities of the country rely upon its negatives for their earliest pictures illustrating their news columns. This is notably true in the case of happenings abroad.

Through this means both picture theatre patrons and newspaper readers enjoyed the earliest pictorial accounts of famine scenes in Russia along the Volga and the distribution of supplies from this country; scenes at the "self determination" balloting in Silesia; the recent views of important personages and conditions in Moscow and Petrograd; the last days of the great tenor, Caruso in Italy, and his impressive funeral; outstanding events in the hunger strike of Irish patriots' armed resistance against England, and of the historic conference of leaders resulting in the present apparent settlement of all difficulties; post-war developments in Germany, and many other events of world-wide interest. In all cases of Russian and Central European news nothing but liberal use of the airplane service enabled Pathe News to accomplish its purpose of superior speed in getting its negatives to this country, and its quickly printed films on all screens.

For great news occasions at home much more than utilization of airplane transmission was necessary to maintain the Pathe News record for quick presentation to picture theatre patrons. Forethought, careful planning and generalship in meeting emergencies of photographing, and clock-work accuracy of the machinery of developing, printing and local delivery—all had to be developed to the highest point. This perfection of organization and efficiency in all departments was essential in enabling Pathe News to deliver its films of the last Unknown Soldier rites at Arlington at the big New York picture theatres before eight o'clock in the evening of the same day, and in giving quick service on many other big news events.

"Handle With Care" Scheduled to Be Released on January 22

J. E. Storey, sales manager of Associated Exhibitors, states that January 22 has been set as the release date on "Handle With Care," the big Rockett special which was announced for release through Associated Exhibitors, following Ray Rockett's recent trip to New York.

Heralded as an unusually fine production, this feature is said to be one of the best audience pictures of the season. The principal role is handled by Grace Darmond, while Patsy Ruth Miller plays the ingenue. The male characters include such names as James W. Morrison, Harry Meyers, William Courtleigh, Landers Stevens and William Austin.

The original story is from the pen of Charles Belmont Davis. The production was directed by Philip E. Rosen under the supervision of Mr. Rockett, and Associated Exhibitors claim that "Handle With Care" has been afforded a wealth of rich settings. The story tells of the career of a popular debutante, who is strenuously wooed by no less than five suitors of distinctly different types.

Harold Lloyd Film a Feature in Many Houses

The Capitol Theatre of New York and the Symphony of Los Angeles head an impressive line up of first run theatres across the country, which played Harold Lloyd's big feature, "A Sailor-Made Man," as a Christmas week attraction.

The fact that this is Harold Lloyd's first comedy of feature length makes its showing doubly impressive Associated Exhibitors state, and proves Harold Lloyd's right to be viewed by the exhibitors as a star with such a big public following as to justify "A Sailor-Made Man" being the big feature during one of the most important weeks of the entire year. It is said that it is one of the most widely advertised attractions in the theatres today.

Universal Films N. Y. Crowd for Scene for "Leather Pushers"

Broadway had one of its greatest thrills recently when Harry Pollard, director of "The Leather Pushers" the H. C. Witwer prize ring series being filmed for Universal with Reginald Denny as the star, paraded his company up and down the Gay White Way at the height of the theatre crowd hour filming the crowds, the lights and "The Leather Pushers" principals, A battery of Sunlight Arcs provided illumination for the camera-men.

It was not a publicity stunt, as the shots taken of the principals and of Broadway life are to be used in Round Three of "The Leather Pushers" series. Theatre-goers crowded around the moving picture company and lined the side-walks as Pollard's unit moved from place to place.

Los Angeles and certain other American cities are accustomed to being filmed at all hours of the day or night, but it was a distinct novelty to Broadway to "act in the movies" at its most crowded hour. It was only after great trouble and much persuasion that Pollard obtained permission from the police department to take the pictures he needed.

Next Mermaid Titled "En Route"

The greater part of the Hamilton-White stage has been utilized for the construction of train sets which are being used in the production of the latest Educational-Mermaid Comedy featuring Lloyd Hamilton, which is to be called "En Route." In addition to a Pullman car, where much of the fun takes place, there is a dining car, observation car and sleeper, and a large locomotive. The sets are among the largest ever used in filming a Mermaid Comedy featuring Hamilton.

Optimistic Statement from R-C Tells of Plans for Coming Year

Pessimistic rumors of an impending closing of the R-C studios in Hollywood following the curtailment of production at several other southern California film plants, are belied in a cheerful statement issued recently by local R-C officials in regard to the future plans of their company. Preparations are now being made for increased productional activity immediately after the first of the year, according to these officals, and there is no hint of pessimism as to the concern.

It was decided not to start any new productions during the Christmas holidays, it was stated, because of the thoroughly human penchant of actors for seasonal enjoyments away from work at that time of the year. But the R-C organization will be expected to make up for lost time in the first few weeks of 1922.

Sessue Hayakawa has two productions which are now being prepared for release. "Five Days to Live," which was made under the name, "In the Street of the Flying Dragon," and in which the star is supported by his wife, Tsuru Aoki, has received the final touches of the film editors. R-C officials are so pleased with this picture that they are considering giving a pre-view at a downtown Los Angeles theatre for their friends of the press and the motion picture profession.

Final scenes in "The Vermilion Pencil," in which Hayakawa is supported by Bessie Love, will be completed within a few days. The cutting department has started to edit the film under Hayakawa's personal supervision. The star is expected to start upon another picture about January 9. The name of his next story has not yet been announced.

Pauline Frederick is also supervising the cutting of her latest production, "Two Kinds of Women," adapted from Jackson Gregory's novel, "Judith of Blue Lake Ranch." Miss Frederick's next R-C production is expected to be a film presentation of William J. Locke's novel, "The Glory of Clementina." E. Richard Schayer is now preparing the continuity for this story, and it is expected that it will go into production about January 9. Two other big stories, both written directly for the screen, have been purchased for Miss Frederick, it was stated. The names of these will be announced later.

Doris May is nearing the close of her third R-C starring vehicle, "Boy Crazy." She will be started upon her next picture, "Gay and Devilish," about the same time the Hayakawa and Frederick companies begin work again.

R. J. Tobin, vice-president and general manager at the studios of the R-C Pictures Corporation, is expecting to leave for New York within the next few days to remain until after the first of the year, discussing future plans with officials at the home office of the company.

It has been announced that several new companies may be organized for special productions early in 1922, as the R-C scenario department has purchased several books and plays that are considered excellent screen material. These companies will be made up of well-known capable players. Christy Cabanne, who has been in New York for several months directing productions for R-C Pictures Corporation, may return to California to make his next film at the R-C studios there, it was stated.

Exhibitors Send Praise of "Hurricane Hutch" to Pathe

Pathe correspondence from exhibitors voluntarily reporting profitable "Hurricane Hutch" engagements includes all sections of the country, big cities and the smaller towns and houses of all degress of capacity, Pathe says. The following expressions are among many received during the last week of the old year:

From Rialto Theatre, Monette, Mo.—"I am running 'Hurricane Hutch,' having bought it from Pathe. It is a 100 per cent. serial. Thought enough of it to take another chance by booking the big Indian story, Ruth Roland's 'White Eagle'."

From Star Theatre, Sarcoxio, Mo.—"Played first episode of 'Hurricane Hutch' to 360 paid admissions on first showing, and had to turn many away as I could not get any more in the theatre. Only 900 to 1,000 population."

Shelby Social Club, Ellwood City, Pa.—"'Hurricane Hutch' is all that anyone could wish for in the line of a serial for any sort of an exhibition."

From the Avoy Theatre, Moline, Ill.—"We opened 'Hurricane Hutch' by admitting the children for one cent or one potato. Before the doors opened for the matinee over 2,000 children were waiting outside. We are doing much better than we expected, and are much pleased with the serial."

Real Atmosphere on Pictures Made Abroad

No stone is being left unturned in the effort to procure absolute accuracy in the atmosphere of all settings for Paramount pictures made abroad.

A few weeks ago, the George Fitzmaurice Company left for Italy to film the exteriors of "The Man from Home," and at the same time the J. S. Robertson Company was dispatched to Spain to start work on "Spanish Jade."

It is interesting to note that each company has its own staff art director. N. Gregory Arnold has followed Mr. Fitzmaurice to Italy and will design his studio interiors of the various buildings chosen as locations.

L. Dawson, art director for Mr. Robertson, has also been spending two weeks in Seville to familiarize himself with the peculiarities of Moorish architecture, upon which principles most houses in the district are more or less constructed. He is rapidly filling his sketchbook with all manner of impressions, which will not only serve the purpose of the story at present under production, but also prove a fruitful source of inspiration for any future script requiring a typically Spanish setting.

Kansas City Critics Praise "Disraeli"

"George Arliss in 'Disraeli' demonstrates the supreme art of acting in motion pictures," wrote the critic for the Kansas City Post, when this United Artists release was shown at the Newman Theatre, and added, "If you like the best don't let anything or anybody keep you away. Mr. Arliss makes us wish we could see him much more often in pictures. The screen version of his greatest stage characterization proved to be a rare combination of excellent acting by excellent players splendidly directed and with a story that holds the attention till the last moment.

"'Disraeli' is not a historical play. The author merely gave us a story to illustrate the life and times of the great English statesman. Nobody should miss it."

"A large audience, spellbound, followed George Arliss through 'Disraeli,' a picture that, from the lay viewpoint, is one of the few celluloid dramas of importance," said the critic for the Kansas City Times.

"George Arlis is Disraeli," declares the critic for the Kansas City Star. "There is no other and he has made it impossible for us to imagine another. His Disraeli has lost nothing in its transition from the stage to the screen. Disraeli's touch of impishness is still there, his posings, his dramatic effects, are all preserved. Mr. Arliss has paid Disraeli the high compliment of understudying him, for Disraeli, too, was an actor and so perfectly has Mr. Arliss done his part that we see not him, but Disraeli, himself. Disraeli would, we feel, have done exactly what Mr. Arliss has done."

"Little Lord Fauntleroy" Gets Praise from Los Angeles Critics

"'Little Lord Fauntleroy'," classic of childhood, with its petite hero embodied by Mary Pickford, in the most elaborate production in her ten-year career in films, is at the Mission Theatre," said the critic of the Los Angeles Evening Express when this United Artists release was shown there. "In an ideal picture for her talents, and personality the incomparable star has shown what can be done when worth-while tale, able direction, capable players and expert cameramen come together. The star is bewitching in every scene; she has kept the spirit of the book with unvarying care, and she acts the boy faultlessly."

"Mary Pickford's 'Little Lord Fauntleroy' without question outrivals anything she ever has done," wrote the critic for the Los Angeles Record. "Filled with an appeal indescribable, Miss Pickford, by turns, romps boyishly and walks sedately through ten reels of most beautifully photographed scenes. The film gives you a chance to see Mary in knickers; a chance to see her kiss herself; a chance to see her pass a photograph to herself, and various other unsual bits of 'business,' all of which makes 'Fauntleroy' a triumph of filming."

"Mary Pickford is her own best rival in 'Little Lord Fauntleroy'," said the Los Angeles Examiner review. "When you see her dressed in her little velvet costume, swaggering around with a delicious boyishness, you are sure you like her best that way—and then in a minute, as the film shifts and you see the sweet-faced 'Dearest' your affections are at once transposed—and she's your favorite."

"Somewhere there is a society which interests itself in the future generation. I do not know whether the executives of that body have seen 'Little Lord Fauntleroy,' or whether they propose to include the motion picture in its list, but it seems to me that Mary Pickford's current cinematic vehicle is worthy of a pigeon-hole in the archives where rest the big things in history and the arts." Thus wrote the critic for the Los Angeles Evening Herald.

"'Little Lord Fauntleroy' is a great picture," says the review in the Los Angeles Times. 'It is great largely because Mary Pickford is great. The double roles of the tender young mother and the quaint, friendly little Cedric shows the wide range of this star's amazing genius. He's no sissy, this 'Fauntleroy' of Miss Pickford's; there's real boyishness in him; he has a boyish slant of thought as well as a boyish stride, and a boyish carelessness, too."

Will Announce Bookings for Select Picture

Select branches throughout the country are screening "Conceit," second of the Supreme Selznick Six, for important first run accounts. Prints were shipped from the New York offices some days ago and early bookings will soon be announced. The exhibitors' campaign book on "Conceit" has been completed and is in the hands of the Select branch managers.

Schulberg Engages Blackwood to Start Revolution in Publicity Copy Writing

B. P. Schulberg, president of Preferred Pictures, Inc., producers of the Katherine MacDonald features, released by First National, promises to "start something" in the ranks of those press agents whose most valued possession is the mimeograph—to say nothing of the carbon paper.

Mr. Schulberg has come to the conclusion that there is something radically wrong with the publicity that is sent out from almost every studio in the country to each paper that boasts a circulation of 10,000 or over. In short, it is Mr. Schulberg's contention that 90 per cent. of the mass of press material that weekly emanates from the various studios finds a final resting place in the wastepaper baskets in the editorial rooms. He even goes further and declares that the chief reason for this is because the press stuff is duplicated, that much of it lacks originality and is loaded down with superlatives, hysterical hyperbole and adjectival embellishments that make its use almost out of the question by any editor that has an average amount of respect for his readers.

So, in order to test his theory, Mr. Schulberg has re-organized his Katherine MacDonald publicity and has engaged John H. Blackwood as its head. Mr. Blackwood has been associated with the industry for more than ten years, chiefly with Thomas H. Ince in the capacity of scenario editor and publicity expert, with Robertson-Cole as scenario editor and in the same capacity at the Universal studios. He formerly was the dramatic editor of the Washington, D. C., Times and was associated with David Belasco in the management of Mrs. Leslie Carter for a number of years.

Mr. Blackwood has inaugurated a publicity campaign for Katherine MacDonald along the lines suggested by Mr. Schulberg, and with a staff of expert stenographers his publicity department will turn out exclusively written material that promises an innovation—certaintly it will be an experiment well worth watching.

SCENE FROM "CONVICT 993." RELEASED BY PATHE

Wanda Hawley in Realart Feature for January 1

Scheduled for release through Famous Players-Lasky exchanges on January 1 is the Realart picture, "Too Much Wife," starring Wanda Hawley.

Lorna Moon, the author, is a former newspaper woman who has recently attained success as a writer of screen tales. Her most conspicuous success is the Paramount special, "Don't Tell Everything," in which Wallace Reid, Gloria Swanson and Elliott Dexter are starred.

Percy Heath wrote the scenario Thomas Heffron directed the picture and Elmer Harris supervised its production.

T. Roy Barnes has the role of a man considerably embarrassed by "too much wife." A golfer himself who hits 'em around in the neighborhood of the low 80's, Mr. Barnes proves particularly fitted for those scenes which call for his appearance on the links. The golf scenes were filmed at one of Pasadena's most exclusive clubs.

Other players in the cast include Arthur Hoyt, Lillian Langdon, Leigh Wyant, Bertram Johns and John Fox, the last named being a clever boy actor.

Capitol Theatre Books "Theodora"

Goldwyn's Italian spectacle, "Theodora," which met with such overwhelming critical commendation in New York, Boston, Chicago, Detroit and Pittsburgh, the only towns where it has as yet been seen and where it showed at the $2 top scale, will be the attraction at the Capitol Theatre, New York, starting New Year's Day, Sunday, January 1.

S. L. Rothafel, manager of presentation at the Capitol, is arranging a musical and scenic setting which will have novel features, though modeled upon the successful presentation of the spectacle at the Astor Theatre.

"Theodora" will show at regular Capitol Theatre prices and if the enthusiasm which it awoke at the Astor Theatre and the big business which it did there are any criteria should fill the great Capitol Theatre for the entire week.

Gardner Boosts Rival Attraction

J. B. Gardner, manager of the Gem Theatre, Sandpoint, Idaho, believes in co-operation with the community. When the American Legion post put on a show recently he not only boosted this opposition to his own show, but he portrayed one of the important parts in the cast.

In his own newspaper advertising the first line called attention to the community show. "After seeing 'The Whirl of the Town'," it read, "go to see the show at The Gem."

Mr. Gardner has met the problem of getting business by booking the best pictures and has employed a publicity man. Then he bought two new Simplex projectors, a new transverter, and installed new chairs. He claims that the way to get business, when times are hard, is to give the people more for their money.

Hodkinson New Year Schedule Includes Variety of Subjects

Plans of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation for 1922 include the "Official Urban Movie Chats of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America," one a week beginning January 15, several of the Great Author series to be released monthly, the two-reel Triart productions, a number of Hugo Ballin and Edwin L. Hollywood productions and others.

For release in January is "French Heels," "The Young Painter" and "At the Sign of the Jack O'Lantern." "French Heels" is the first of the series of Edwin L. Hollywood productions starring Mrs. Irene Castle. It was written by Clarence Buddington Kelland, and the cast includes Ward Crane and Charles Gerard. "At the Sign of the Jack O'Lantern is the second Renco Film Company's production. It is a Myrtle Reed story. The cast includes Betty Rose Clark, Victor Potel, Earl Schenck, Wade Boteler and Clara Ward.

"The Young Painter" is the third of the Triart Productions which are being made under the supervision of an advisory board of the eminent art patrons, consisting of Robert W. DeForest, President of the Metropolitan Museum of Art; Francis C. Jones, Treasurer of the National Academy of Design; Edwin H. Blashfield, President of the National Academy of Design; Charles Dana Gibson, President of the Society of Illustrators and editor of "Life"; Robert Aitken, President of the Sculptors' Society of America; Louis C. Tiffany, founder of the Louis Comfort Tiffany Foundation, and Daniel Chester French.

During February Hodkinson will release "Heart's Haven," a Benjamin B. Hampton Production, featuring Claire Adams, Carl Gantvoort, Claire McDowell and Robert McKim; and "Hope," the fourth Triart production, based on the masterpiece of the same name by Watts; also another Benjamin B. Hampton production, "The Grey Dawn."

Another Triart Great Masterpiece production scheduled for early release is "Mona Lisa," based on the famous painting of the same name by Leonardo da Vinci.

Big Business From "Way Down East"

J. G. Goldman, manager of the Strand Theatre, Fargo, N. D., reports that during a nine-day showing of D. W. Griffith's "Way Down East," during which time a new $250,000 theatre was opened in Fargo, the Strand not only did a remarkable business throughout the run of this United Artists release, but that the management did not hear of a single dissatisfied patron.

"We want to go on record," Mr. Goldman reports, "as saying that in our opinion 'Way Down East' is the greatest box-office and audience attraction produced in the last five years. It has no opposition, and we extend hearty congratulations to Mr. Griffith and United Artists Corporation."

Parker Directing John Barrymore

At the Amsterdam studios in West Forty-fourth street, Albert Parker is directing John Barrymore in his second production following "The Lotus Eaters," an adaptation of Conan Doyle's famous detective story, "Sherlock Holmes."

Macey Harlem in New R-C Picture

In the all-star cast of "Beyond the Rainbow," the new R-C production, Macey Harlem, who played Milton Manning in R-C's "Shams of Society," is carrying the part of the imposter Count Ricardo Terrion, erstwhile barber. The Count affords Mr. Harlem opportunities for some effective comedy, it is stated. Mr. Harlem returns to pictures after a season on the road with Olga Petrova in "The White Peacock," which is scheduled to open in New York in the near future.

Ralph Ince to Make Important Films for Selznick in 1922

The announcement is made by Myron Selznick, vice president in charge of production, that Ralph Ince will continue to be an important factor in the screening of Selznick pictures during 1922. Before Mr. Selznick departed for Europe he outlined plans that will keep Mr. Ince busy with production engaging Eugene O'Brien and Elaine Hammerstein as stars.

Just now Ince is finishing Eugene O'Brien's presentation of "Channing of the Northwest," the company having returned in time for Christmas from Lake Placid, N. Y. In this picture Norma Shearer will be O'Brien's leading woman.

When his present work with O'Brien is finally disposed of Mr. Ince will turn his attention to the next production in which Elaine Hammerstein will star. This new offering will be the second picture Ince has supervised with Miss Hammerstein the central figure, "Remorseless Love," released in September, having been produced under his supervision when Selznick was making pictures in Fort Lee.

SCENES FROM "THE SONG OF LIFE," A FIRST NATIONAL ATTRACTION

SCENES FROM "BACK PAY," A PARAMOUNT PICTURE

Partello, Successful Exhibitor Personally Guarantees His Shows

"Billy" is what they call him in Mansfield, O., on the street, but in business and social circles it is Mr. William A. Partello. Back in the early '90's he was a clown with the Sells Brothers' Circus. As "Slivers" he was known all over the country and internationally.

From the circus Partello shifted to the theatrical game and soon had the Partello Stock Company, of which he was owner and manager. He was successful from the beginning. Ten years ago with Mrs. Partello—Alice Kennedy, as she is known professionally—he settled in Mansfield, where he became interested in an organization controlling the Grand and Majestic Theatres, of which he was made managing director.

Road attractions of advanced calibre were available for stands of one or two nights now and then, but both theatres were "dark" most of the time.

"The people of Mansfield and vicinity were demanding amusement, and I made up my mind to give them classy pictures," said Mr. Partello, and they "took" "like vaccination."

Mr. Partello received a First National sub-franchise and explained to the people of Mansfield and the country surrounding that the First National trademark stands for "class."

Just before Thanksgiving he booked "The Kid" for the first four days of the week at the Majestic. "I expected big business for four days but was sure all the people wanting to see 'The Kid' would see it during this time."

But all the people did not get to see it during the four-day period and, as a result, Partello had to hold it over for two days, and says the probabilities are that a little later on "The Kid" will be recalled for a couple of more days.

When he knows he has a good thing Partello never hesitates to let his clietele know it. He has personally recommended Constance and Norma Talmadge, Katherine MacDonald, Anita Stewart, Charlie Ray, Lionel Barrymore and others, and is, accordingly, responsible to a great extent for their popularity in his locality.

Partello has made a great hit in and around Mansfield by letting the people know through little booklets that fit the vest pocket of the man or the handbag of the woman and girl, just what he expects to offer from three weeks to a month ahead.

"I have found that the average person plans picture theatre attendance just the same as social or business engagement and that if you let the public know what is in store they will make arrangements accordingly, and you will be the gainer," says Partello.

Everything considered William A. Partello is one of the big men not only of Mansfield and vicinity, but of Central Ohio and this not only as an exhibitor, but as a citizen and business man.

A Mansfield newspaper recently carried a three-column line drawing of Partello on its first page. Above it was the heading: "A Prominent Mansfield Man." Under it was this:

"William A. Partello has for years been prominent in the theatrical business. He knows the game from beginning to end. A gentleman through and through, Mr. Partello has won the confidence and esteem of all who know him. He is a success."

"Back Pay" to Be Released by Cosmopolitan Early in January

"Back Pay," created by Cosmopolitan Productions from the story by Fannie Hurst, will be released by Paramount early in January. This picture is notable because of its big and controversial theme, the fame of its author and the calibre of cinema talent that engaged upon its making, Cosmopolitan says. Fannie Hurst, authoress; Frank Borzage, director, and Frances Marion, scenarist, the trio whose combined efforts evolved "Humoresque," have again collaborated in the case of "Back Pay."

The production is the third directed by Frank Borzage for Cosmopolitan and follows soon after his "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford." It is different from either of his two previous Cosmopolitan productions —its variance being another proof of the versatility and mastery of the young director, it is stated. Seena Owen has the leading feminine role. Matt Moore has the principal male part.

Did Big Business with "Iron Trail"

Showing Rex Beach's "The Iron Trail" to a three-day engagement, one day more than the usual booking, Paul DeMordaunt, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Blackfoot, Idaho, reports that business for this United Artists release was "far above the average" and the picture pleased all the theatre patrons.

"The first day we were unable to accommodate the crowd;" continued the report, "business was very fine for the second and third days. Probably some extra business owing to Thanksgiving holiday. No special stunts were used aside from cutouts."

Fox Actress Is Chosen as Mascot

The honor of representing both the Eastern and the Western sections of the United States has been bestowed upon Estelle Taylor, the popular actress who for about two years has been playing leading parts in William Fox productions. Word has just been received from Los Angeles that Miss Taylor has been chosen as honorary mascot of the Washington and Jefferson football team of Pennsylvania, which has journeyed to California to meet the gridiron performers of the University of California in an intersectional match on January 2 at Los Angeles.

Miss Taylor has been in California several months. She is the leading woman in a new picture starring John Gilbert, made under the direction of Emmett J. Flynn. While in New York she worked in several pictures directed by Charles J. Brabin, among them being "While New York Sleeps," "Blind Wives," and the current Fox special, "Footfalls."

Charles Ray Gets a Warm Welcome

Southern hospitality was cordially extended to Charles Ray last week during his first visit to the South. In Washington, D. C., where the star and his party made their first stop after saying farewell to New York, Mr. Ray met many of the foremost political figures of the nation, including President Harding, Chief Justice Taft, ex-President Woodrow Wilson, Herbert Hoover and others. In Atlanta Mr. Ray was the guest of Sig Samuels, owner, and Willard Patterson, manager, of the Metropolitan and Criterion theatres. Mr. and Mrs. Ray and their party, which includes Arthur S. Kane, Richard Willis, Albert A. Kidder, Jr., and George Rizard, camera man, spent Christmas in New Orleans. The star will soon return to Los Angeles.

Smallwood and Players Back from South Where Exteriors for First Pyramid Picture Were Made

Ray C. Smallwood and his technical staff and all-star players have arrived in New York City after spending seven weeks in the South, making the exteriors for Pyramid Pictures, Inc., first super drama, "My Old Kentucky Home." Mr. Smallwood timed his outdoor settings so that Monte Blue, Sigrid Holmquest, Lucy Fox, Julia Swayne Gordon, Frank Currier, Matthew Betz, and Billy Quirk could be in New York City for the Christmas holidays.

The original story for "My Old Kentucky Home," written by Anthony Paul Kelly, finds its scenes and locales in the South. Five weeks were spent in Savannah and Thomasville, Georgia, while the last two weeks were employed in and about the race track at New Orleans.

One of the features of "My Old Kentucky Home" is the staging of a big horse race. Southern hospitality was never better exemplified than by the manner in which society turned out at the time when the scenes and settings were made for this part of Pyramid's first release. More than 1500 prominent Southerners can be seen in "My Old Kentucky Home."

With Mr. Smallwood in New York, nothing will be left undone to have "My Old Kentucky Home" ready for pre-showing before January 15. Elaborate plans have been made by Pyramid to start this picture on its run in a manner in keeping with the class and calibre of the production and the cast.

Mr. Smallwood will personally supervise the editing, titling, and assembling of this picture. And as soon as it is complete, Mr. Smallwood will commence casting for Pyramid's second super production, "The Queen of the Moulin Rouge," that stellar Broadway attraction written by Paul M. Potter.

Monte Blue, who has earned additional fame by his masterly acting with the Gish girls in Griffith's latest spectacle has been signed by Pyramid Pictures as the first of the all-star cast to be featured in "The Queen of the Moulin Rouge."

Vitagraph Special "Prodigal Judge" Is Now Complete

"The Prodigal Judge," Vitagraph's super-feature adapted from the novel by Vaughan Kester, has been completed. The final editing and titling has been done and the technical force is now preparing prints for the release of the picture which will come early in the new year. "The Prodigal Judge" will be presented as an Edward Jose production.

Vitagraph considers this as one of its greatest productions With the action laid in Tennessee in 1835, the Southern scenery, with its moss-covered trees, the Mississippi river and the great vistas of plantations afford colorful and picturesque backgrounds for the story of the love of Betty Malroy for Bruce Carrington, the riverman, and the Damon and Pythias friendship between Slocum Price Tuberville, the prodigal but lovable judge, and Solomon Mahaffy, his dour but equally lovable companion. These two types are new to the screen or the stage. There is a tear and a laugh; exciting spectacular scenes interspersed with quiet humor.

Locations were used as far north as the Canadian side of the St. Lawrence River.

The large cast is headed by Jean Paige as Betty Malroy and includes Maclyn Arbuckle as Judge Price, Ernest Torence as his friend, Mahaffy; Earl Fox as Bruce Carrington; Arthur Carew as Col. Fentress; Horace. Braham, Charles Kent, Charles Eaton, Robert Millasch, George Bancroft, Peggy Shanor, Lillian Van Arldale, Mrs. Mary Curran and the six clever Curran Children.

Ballance, Returning from West, Reports Improved Conditions

H. G. Ballance, General Sales Manager of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has returned to New York from a trip of four weeks during which he held sales conventions at the Paramount Exchanges in Denver, Salt Lake City, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Seattle and Minneapolis, which were supplementary to the recent District and Branch Managers' convention in New York.

Mr. Ballance says that he noted a prominent turn for the better in the picture business, especially in the Rocky Mountain and Pacific Coast territories, with exhibitors exercising more care than ever before in the selection of their pictures. Big, worthwhile productions are doing tremendous business. Particularly George Melford's production, "The Sheik," which, though it is only in its second month of showing, threatens to break Paramount records.

The big success of "The Sheik" at Jensen Von Herberg's Strand Theatre in Seattle, where it has broken all records for attendance and is now playing its third week, Mr. Ballance says, reflects also the marked improvement in the lumber and fisherics industries in the Northwest. The improvement being so great as to transform this territory from one of the darkest to one of the brightest on the motion picture map.

While in Los Angeles, Mr. Ballance closed with Gore & Lesser for the full Paramount output for their circuit of fifty theatres. He also closed contracts with Finkelstein & Ruben for their houses in Minneapolis and St. Paul.

Mr. Ballance was accompanied East by M. H. Lewis, special representative at the Lasky studio for the Distribution department, who will remain in New York for a few days.

First Associated Exhibitors Release for 1922 Announced

Associated Exhibitors first feature production for 1922 is "The Unfoldment," a George Kearn production, scheduled for release January 1. It is particularly in keeping with the New Year's spirit, for it is a drama of the power of faith and hopefulness. The production is in six reels, and includes a list of players who are well known for their work in previous features. The cast includes Barbara Bedford, Florence Lawrence, Wm. Conklin, Albert Prisco, Murdock MacQuarrie, Charles K. French, Wade Boteler and Lydia Knott.

The theme of the story deals with the efforts of a newspaper girl to change the lives of her associates who, through contact with the rougher side of life and influenced by adversity, have lost the finest instincts of their better natures.

"The Unfoldment" is described as a gripping drama of intense emotional appeal, softened by a spirit of romance and distinguished by an inspirational climax.

Associated Exhibitors say that while it is basically different than "The Miracle Man," it has a deeply human appeal, and that it is distinctly a photoplay of genuinely good entertainment. It is said to have been produced with a fine attention to detail, and contains sumptuous settings, which mark it as a really big production.

Associated Exhibitors have listed the following as among the accessories available: One, three and six sheets, a twenty-four sheet, campaign book, colored lobby photos, as well as the usual supply of newspaper cuts, slides, black and white photographs and similar exhibitor aids.

Helen Frost Is Expert Teacher of Clog Dancing

Helen Frost, Instructor in Physical Education, Teachers' College, Columbia University, conducts classes in Clog Dancing at the College for students who are studying to become teachers of Physical Education. The course is a regular part of their program, as clog and gymnastic dancing appeal to all ages and particularly to the boy. "Clogging" is said to be helpful in classroom work and in festival programs and a healthful, wholesome form of activity.

Miss Frost is the author of "The Clog Dance Book," recently published by A. S. Barnes and Company, concerning which one reviewer remarked: "The 'steps,' the 'brush,' the 'rattle,' the 'hop,' the 'toe-tap,' the 'fall,' the 'slap or flop,' the 'chug,' the 'handcar,' the 'railroad shuffle' and the 'hen scratch' are all explained in graded lessons, so simple and understandable that anyone with average intelligence can learn to clog at home."

Miss MacDonald Signally Honored

Katherine MacDonald, the Associated First National star has been singled out for distinction by the directors of the Annual Photo Exhibit of the Most Beautiful Women of the World, to be held at the Swarner Galleries, Kansas City, commencing January 2.

Miss MacDonald, it is said, will be the only American whose portrait will be used. Three large, artistic photographs of the First National star have been sent to the Swarner Galleries by B. P. Schulberg, president of the Preferred Pictures, the producers of Miss MacDonald's First National pictures.

While Miss MacDonald has already been the winner in thirty-one so called "beauty contests" held by newspapers, magazines and theatres in various parts of the country, she deprecates the emphasis that has been laid upon her beauty and declares it has been a severe handicap in her efforts to make screen productions that are of the worth-while sort.

Have You Read Pages 35 to 46?

A. B. C. Statement of Moving Picture World for New York State is

Why leave out New York City?
Why leave out Brooklyn?

In New York State circulation the Greater New York territory is precisely as important as the up-State circulation.

A Western trade paper publisher brings up the question of which trade paper has the largest circulation in New York State, claiming for himself 457—mind you, these reports are made out by one of his own paid employees. All of the good white space devoted to this pretention in his paper is for the purpose of eliminating the A. B. C. audit from the discussion of trade paper circulation. This astute (oh, very) publisher is not a member of the Audit Bureau of Circulations and therefore he can claim any circulation his imagination suggests or his hopes devise.

All this circulation talk of New York State excludes New York City and Brooklyn, indicating a pathetic weakness in this ambitious publisher's national circulation. To be pleasant we could concede to him a regional circulation—on theory—but until his figures are backed up by an A. B. C. audit we refuse to pay further attention to these wholesale claims.

Our New York State circulation, including New York City and Brooklyn, is 1169 (A. B. C. audited).

"Miss Lulu Bett" and "Rent Free" for Paramount Release January 1

Paramount opens 1922 with William de Mille's production, "Miss Lulu Betts," and Wallace Reid in "Rent Free," scheduled for release January 1.

"Miss Lulu Bett" is adapted from the successful novel by Zona Gale and Miss Gale's own play which won the Pulitzer prize for the best stage play during the season 1920-21. Clara Beranger was responsible for the adaptation, and so well was her work done and so well was the picture directed and acted that it has drawn forth the admission from the author herself that in many points the picture improves upon the original story and the play.

The story is that of a household drudge who longs for freedom and thinks she has found it when she contracts an informal civil marrage with a man who already has a wife. Awaking to the truth, she returns to her monotonous house duties and is at last liberated when a real man gives her his love.

The title role is played by Lois Wilson. Milton Sills plays opposite her, while character roles are played by Theodore Roberts, Helen Ferguson, Ethel Wales, Mabel Van Buren, Clarence Burton and May Giracci. The picture has received high praise from the newspaper critics of New York.

There are said to be a lively plot and plenty of action in the Wallace Reid picture, "Rent Free." A good deal of the action supposedly takes place on the roofs of two New York rooming houses, and Mr. Reid plays the part of a young artist who prefers to shuffle for himself rather than study law in his father's office. To get the better of the rent problem and to escape from an irate landlady, he moves up on the roof and later established himself in a house, the owners of which are away. There he finds a mysterious note about a will which awards to a girl whom he has met in the meantime, the home and estate of which she has been defrauded by an unscrupulous stepmother.

Mann Page and Izola Forrester Page wrote the story of "Rent Free," and Elmer Harris wrote the scenario from which Howard Higgin directed. Lila Lee plays opposite the star and the cast also includes Henry Barrows, Gertrude Short, Lillian Leighton, Clarence Geldart, Claire McDowell and Lucien Littlefield.

Sets Completed for Next Big De Mille Special

A New York hotel lobby complete, with telephone booths, news stand, switchboard, etc., forms the first of the interesting settings that William de Mille has had prepared for his new Paramount production, "Bought and Paid For," the successful Broadhurst play which Clara Beranger has adapted to the screen. Agnes Ayres in the role made famous by Julia Dean and Jack Holt in Charles Richman's part, with Walter Hiers playing the role of Jimmy Gillay and Leigh Wyant as Fanny Blaine, comprise a cast of unusual excellence.

The presence of two of Paramount's newly-made stars in the roster will add greatly to the attraction of the story, it is believed. With his usual care, Mr. de Mille is missing no opportunity of gaining effects by attention to even the smallest detail.

The play teems with tense moments, emotionally dramatic and of such William de Mille is a complete master. Moreover, it is promised that the picture will adhere closely to the text of the play.

Uses Ex-Soldiers

Doing its "bit" to end the unemployment problem insofar as it affects the wounded ex-service men, Realart celebrated the beginning of "The Heart Specialist," starring Mary Miles Minter, by employing thirty-five disabled soldiers for certain scenes. The men were given work through the co-operation with the Hollywood "Motion Picture Post" of the American Legion.

Lucy Doraine, the Star of "Good and Evil," Preparing to Come to United States

A report just received from abroad by Wid Gunning, Inc., brings word that Lucy Doraine, Continental star, who appeared in the spectacular Gunning release, "Good and Evil," is anxious to come to America to make personal appearances in connection with the showing of that production. Miss Doraine, according to the report, is working on another massive production, and as soon as that is completed, she will make arrangements to visit this country. She hopes to be able to do this during the coming season.

Reports to the Gunning offices from the exchanges of the organization throughout the country indicate that the young actress has already obtained a considerable following in this country in the short time since her appearance in "Good and Evil," and that further productions in which she will appear will be awaited with the greatest interest by American fans.

Exhibitors who have shown "Good and Evil" throughout the country report that its great drawing power is due to the beauty of the new star, the gorgeous sets, the vast mobs and the unusual exploitation campaign carried out by the Wid Gunning field forces. The picture is presented by the Herz Film Corporation. It is a Sascha Production, and was directed by Michael Kertesz, the husband of the star.

"His Back Against the Wall" Has Laughs in Every Foot

"His Back Against the Wall," the new Goldwyn comedy by John Frederick, in which Raymond Hatton is featured, is a new kind of western photoplay. Its ranchmen are the real thing and behave like human beings. Julien Josephson, one of the most expert continuity writers in the country, prepared the script from Mr. Frederick's novel, while Paul Bern, editor of Goldwyn's scenario department, edited it. Rowland V. Lee was especially engaged to direct this picture and was so successful that Goldwyn retained him for other productions.

Mr. Hatton gives one of the deftest and most amusing character studies of his career as Jeremy Dics. Virginia Valli is the rancher's daughter, Gordon Russell the "Bronc" Lewis. Others in the cast are Shannon Day, Virginia Madison, Raymond Cannon, Fred Kohler, Jack Curtis, W. H. Bainbridge and Dudley Hendricks.

Browning Filming Story By Eytinge

Tod Browning, who directed "Outside the Law," has been selected by Universal to film "Peter-man." It is by Louis Victor Eytinge, a lifetermer in the Arizona state penitentiary. In "Peter-man" he has written the epic of crookdom, delineating the underworld with a true pen, neither sympathetically nor relentlessly. It stars Herbert Rawlinson, supported by George Webb and William Courtwright.

Selznick Announces Three Star Issues and Revival Forthcoming

From January 1 to February 10 Select will issue four attractions, embracing one for each of the Selznick stars—Elaine Hammerstein, Eugene O'Brien and Conway Tearle—and a Constance Talmadge revival, "Good-Night Paul," is the "come back," a production by the late Walter Edwards that was based on a play by Roland Oliver and Charles Dickson and first issued when Lewis J. Selznick was making the Talmadge girls screen stars three seasons ago.

Conway Tearle's "Shadows of the Sea" is set for January 10. This is an Alan Crosland production based on a story by Frank Dazey, associate editor of the Selznick scenario department.

January 20 brings Elaine Hammerstein to the screen with her newest production, "Why Announce Your Marriage?" This is also an Alan Crosland presentation made from a scenario in which Crosland collaborated with Lewis Allen Brown. Niles Welch makes another appearance as Miss Hammerstein's leading man.

Eugene O'Brien's presentation of "The Prophet's Paradise" is likewise an Alan Crosland production. It is the third issue in the O'Brien series. Sigrid Holmquist, known in her native land as the "Swedish Mary Pickford," is O'Brien's leading woman. She is just now being exploited in association with "Just Around the Corner," a new Cosmopolitan production wherein she acted shortly after she arrived here from Sweden.

'SCENE FROM "THE MIDNIGHT STAGE," RELEASED BY PATHE

Robert C. Bruce Returns from Northwest with New Scenics

Robert C. Bruce well-known producer of scenic pictures, whose one-hundredth picture was recently released by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., and whose European series, now almost completed on Educational's release schedules, has added much to his popularity, has just returned to New York from the North-West with a group of pictures that mark a new departure in scenic moving pictures.

The new subjects brought back by Mr. Bruce will be called "Wilderness Trails." Each will present an interesting little story about men in the great out-doors, and all the acting being done with beautiful scenic backgrounds. This will combine the attractiveness of the pure scenic with the appeal of novel stories laid in the mountains, valleys and waterways of Washington, Oregon and California and occasionally along the Northern Pacific Coast.

Penetrated Wildest Parts

Mr. Bruce's adventurous spirit led him into the wildest country he could find. Into the Goat Rocks Country in Washington, where only sheep herders are ever known to go, he led his pack company. The herders make their entrance into the valley and exit therefrom by one passage, but the Bruce party fought their way over the snow-clad, treacherous hills that marked the far side of the valley, and after a hard tussle made their way out with splendid "shots" of territory that, it is said, had never before been photographed.

"Shots" of this remarkable country are included in a picture which Mr. Bruce has in preparation called "My Country," which will be presented as "an appreciation of the Pacific Northwest."

The first release of this new series will be on Educational's release schedule for February. It is called "And Women Must Weep", and will follow in order of release "Unknown Switzerland, which is to be made available to exhibitors in January and which closes the current European series.

Others to follow in this series of "Wilderness Tales" include "The Split Outfit", "The One-Man Reunion", "Prickly Conscience", "Nights of Many Shadows", "The Natural Born Liar" and "Missing Men".

Best of Career

"Prickly Conscience" gives a good example of the type of story Mr. Bruce has taken as the basis for these "Wilderness Tales." A young man is arrested as a vagrant and thrown into a jail in a little Western town. As the arresting officer has no desire to hold him, the jail door is left open, and before long the prisoner, seeking to escape, tries the door, and without trouble makes his way to freedom. But everywhere he goes, his conscience follows him to prick him. The young man is seen wandering through beautiful country, along the ocean front, across the mountains. Everywhere, always, "Prickly Conscience" turns up to torture him, until at last, almost a broken man, he goes back to the town where he was arrested, and hunts up the marshal who put him in jail, years before. The marshal is too busy with other work to talk to him even, so after many efforts to turn himself over to the authorities, he forces his way into jail as he thought he had forced his way out, and in this way rids himself of his remorse.

"The pictures constitute the best work of my career", says Mr. Bruce. "Right in our own country I have found the most beautiful scenery and the least known. In the great Northwest is to be found every sort of country one could possibly wish for, and with this rich ground I have taken the best pictures I've ever made."

Big Advertising Display for Film

One of the largest advertising displays ever used for a single production announced the opening of "What Do Men Want?" the Lois Weber production, distributed by Wid Gunning, Inc., at the Pantheon Theatre, Toledo, Ohio. Three full pages in the Toledo Times, on the Sunday of the opening, smashed across the message.

McGowan Film for January Release

A new J. P. McGowan feature is scheduled by Playgoers Pictures for release on January 15. This is the third of a series of five made for Playgoers by Herald Productions. It is entitled "Reckless Chances." J. P. McGowan is director as well as star. He is supported by a new leading lady, Dorothy Wood.

Hodkinson to Handle Kineto Single Reel Great Authors Series and "Four Seasons"

The conclusion of arrangements made by Harry J. Sherpard of the Kineto Company of America and the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation under the terms of which the latter organization will distribute the four reel special, "The Four Seasons," and a series of one reel Great Authors' productions made by Charles Urban is announced.

"The Four Seasons" is a feature novelty of great beauty described as a fascinating visualization of nature's handiwork, depicting animal and plant life and showing how they are affected by the changing seasons. It was planned by Dr. R. L. Ditmars in charge of scientific research for the New York Zoological Society and photographed largely in Bronx Park. In its production he had the counsel of Charles Urban whose knowledge of scientific photography has resulted in noteworthy screen products.

A very successful pre-release showing of this feature was held some weeks ago at the Rialto Theatre, New York, following which Managing Director Reisenfeld wrote an enthusiastic letter to Mr. Urban praising the production.

The Great Authors' series includes such distinguished American authors as James Witcomb Riley, Henry W. Longfellow, Walt Whitman, James Fennimore Cooper, James Russell Lowell, Edgar Allen Poe, Washington Irving, John Greenleaf Whittier, Nathaniel Hawthorne, William Cullen Bryant, Oliver Wendell Holmes and Mark Twain. They will be released one a month, and have received high praise, both from an entertainment and educational standpoint by Ernest L. Crandall, director of lectures and visual education, New York City.

Although at the present time the series consists only of American authors, it is understood plans are being perfected for including famous authors of other countries, such as Tolstoi, Victor Hugo, Dumas, Flaubert, Dickens, Kipling, Shakespeare, Ibanez, and others.

"Our Mutual Friend" Classed Among Best Pictures of 1921

The National Committee for Better Films has placed "Our Mutual Friend," the Wid Gunning picturization of Dickens' last complete novel, on its list of the best family pictures released during 1921, according to a notification just received at the Gunning home offices from Orrin G. Cocks, Secretary of the Committee. Two other Gunning releases, "The Old Oaken Bucket" and "What Do Men Want?" the Lois Weber spectacular drama, have likewise been accorded the honor of a place on the list, making, it is said, an unusual record considering the short time the Gunning company has been in operation, and the comparatively small number of pictures it has released thus far.

The Committee gave "Our Mutual Friend" special mention in issuing its list, commenting favorably on the portrayal of the Dickens' characters, adding that it possessed "undoubted appeal." The list consists of those plays considered as possessing a mass appeal, suitable for neighborhood and small town theatres as well as metropolitan houses.

Century Offers Two Sweet Films

Julius Stern, president of Century Film Corporation, announces the release of two Harry Sweet pictures in January.

"An Idle Roomer," the first Sweet picture to be directed by Arvid Gillstrom, deals with the adventures of a young man in a furnished room house. Sweet falls in love with his landlady's daughter, played by a new Century beauty, Thelma Dillerman. Budd Jamison fills his usual ungrateful role of villain.

"Horse Sense," Sweet's other comedy, is directed by Fred Hibbard. Margaret Cloud, Bud Jamison and Harry Cornells are in the cast. The action takes place both on land and on sea, and much of the fun is on board ship.

"Circus Clowns," starring Brownie and Baby Peggy, is on the way from the coast. Fred Hibbard is the director.

"The Straphanger," Lee Moran's first Century Comedy, and "Shipwrecked Among Animals," a parody on the Universal success, "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals."

Nell Shipman Film Said to Be Making Hit

Nell Shipman in "The Girl From God's Country," the outdoor animal drama, released by Wid Gunning, Inc., has been received by the big exhibitor circuits of the country as one of the strongest box-office cards of the fall and winter season, according to reports which have reached the Wid Gunning home office recently. Miss Shipman is author, star, director and producer of the "The Girl From God's Country," a story of the North Woods.

The S. A. Lynch Southern Enterprise Circuits booked the picture, and other important circuits which have also booked it are the entire Poli Circuit in New England; Jensen and Von Herberg, Seattle; Lubliner and Trinz Circuit, Chicago; Gore Brothers, Ramish and Lesser, Los Angeles; Rialto Theatre, San Francisco; Turner and Dahnken Circuit, San Francisco; Bernard Depkin, Baltimore and Bingham and Cohen, Indianapolis.

"The Girl From God's Country" played to packed houses at Clune's Broadway Theatre in Los Angeles. It was also shown at the Keith Theatres in New York, Swanson's American in Salt Lake City and the Nolan Colorado circuit, two powerful factors in the Denver area. The Strand Theatre, Atlanta, the Circle and the Strand Theatres in Cleveland, and the Isis Theatre, in Indianapolis, were other first-run houses which booked the picture.

On Location

A company of thirty-two people left Hollywood recently for Bouse, Arizona, where scenes for "The Proxy Daddy," Thomas Meighan's latest Paramount picture, will be filmed.

Al Green, the director, took with him Mexican types, miners and peons in addition to the principals of the company, including Mr. Meighan, Leatrice Joy, his leading woman; Maude Wayne, Laurence Wheat, Adele Farrington, J. F. MacDonald and five children with their mothers and a school teacher.

Gunning Says "Quo Vadis" Promises to Break Records It Made When First Shown

"Quo Vadis," George Kleine's production from the fanous Sienkiewicz novel, released in a brand-new garb by Wid Gunning, Inc., bids fair to break the records it made when it was first shown in this country, the Gunning organization says.

When the massive Italian production first invaded America, it was handled as a regular production, at what was then an unusually high admission charge—$1. It ran for twenty-six crowded weeks at the Astor Theatre, New York City, and was shown at a great many large houses throughout the country, being handled as a road attraction.

Today, according to reports being received at the Wid Gunning home offices, there is every indication that the two million dollars it grossed then, will be equalled, if not exceeded. And this prediction is made possible because "Quo Vadis" is not being handled by that organization as a reissue, but, for many good reasons, as a new production of a great work, which is universally known.

For one thing, a new generation of motion-picture patrons has sprung up since "Quo Vadis" made its sensational debut in this country. Those who saw it then are not the people who go to the motion-picture theatres now. So that for ninety-nine out of a hundred in an average audience, "Quo Vadis" is a new picture.

Even for the handful who might have seen the original "Quo Vadis," the present picture will be different and better, according to the statement of Wid Gunning. The picture has been cut down to six reels, so that it will be more manageable by the ordinary house, and will fit in better with the modern program.

It is explained also, that the picture has been re-edited at a cost of thousands of dollars and is practically a new production. Doty Hobart and Warren A. Newcombe, who created the successful picture, "The Woman God Changed," revamped the captions, made new art titles, and contrived a new ending to the story, which follows the original, but adds greatly to the dramatic effect, it is stated.

SCENE FROM "SYLVIA OF THE SECRET SERVICE." RELEASED BY PATHE

"The Battle of Jutland" to Be Shown at the Marine Barricks

"The Battle of Jutland," the three-reel production of the world's greatest naval conflict, which has been brought to this country for distribution by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., is to be presented at the Marine Barracks in Washington on January 9, following its showing at the Naval Academy on January 7, which has already been announced by Educational.

Students at the Academy and naval officers on duty there will be able to see this remarkable short reel special at the Annapolis presentation, but for the convenience of officers stationed in Washington who might find it inconvenient or impossible to attend this showing, Educational has made arrangements to present the picture again with the assistance of the Marines. Invitations are being issued to this showing by Captain Shuler, while the Annapolis showing will be under the direction of Admiral Wilson, superintendent of the Academy.

With the hearty co-operation of the "leathernecks," who as everybody knows, have the reputation of putting across in great style whatever they undertake, Educational will present the same complete diversified program that is to be given at Annapolis. This will include a Christie Comedy, Selig-Rork Photoplay, Robert C. Bruce Scenic, Sketchografs and the current issue of Kinograms. Music will be furnished by the orchestra from the Marine Corps. Among the invited guests will be a large number of newspaper men.

"The Battle of Jutland" has already been realsed in Canada, and is receiving an euthusiastic reception from exhibitors and public. Showing in leading theatres in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, it has brought highest praise from the newspaper critics, while patrons of the theatres have shown the greatest enthusiasm over this remarkable record of history.

"Three Musketeers" Gets Front Page Display Head in California Newspaper

What happens when Douglas Fairbanks and his "The Three Musketeers" goes into a small city, and how the local paper spreads this star and his greatest picture all over the front page, was demonstrated when this United Artists release was shown at the Palace Theatre, El Centro, Calif.

The day before the first showing the Imperial Valley Press, an afternoon paper, gave the feature as big a front page display head as any other piece of news, the story running over a half column turn on page two. The next afternoon there was another front page display, the story again breaking over onto the second page, despite the fact that the first performance in a four-day run was booked for the evening. The next afternoon saw still another first page "smash," and half column "jump" on page two. The fourth day's first page display wasn't quite so big, and it didn't turn, but it was good space, at that.

The management of the Palace put on a strong advertising campaign prior to the showing, and showed wise showmanship in not dropping their advertising during the run of the pictures. In fact, the biggest display carried was used while the picture was showing.

Exhibitors View Rex Ingram Film

Three hundred exhibitors and their wives saw a special showing of the Rex Ingram production for Metro of Balzac's "The Conquering Power" on December 25 at the roof-garden of the Hotel Adelphia, Thirteenth and Chestnut streets, Philadelphia. It was the first motion picture shown in Philadelphia in a year on Sunday.

Robert Lynch, manager of the local Metro office, obtained police permission to put the picture on before an invited audience on the ground that the exhibitors could not all manage to see it during the week. News of the showed stirred a renewal of the agitation for an open Sunday for photoplay theatres in Philadelphia.

In addition to the Adelphia showing, Mr. Lynch arranged for the simultaneous display of 150 twenty-four sheets, announcing "The Conquering Power," with Rudolph Valentino and Alice Terry, in prominent roles opening at the Stanley Theatre, Philadelphia, January 9.

The photoplay at the Adelphia was put on with the musical accompaniment by the Stanley Theatre orchestra, under the direction of Albert F. Wayne supplemented by ten additional musicians.

Paramount Stars Win Competition

The Tacoma Ledger's Ideal Cast contest, recently closed, gave Theodore Roberts the lead over all other individuals in any class and returned him as winner in his own class, character man, with a vote of 26,909. This was a tremendous plurality over the next highest, who had a vote of 3,517. Rudolph Valentino, Paramount featured player, won the leading man competition with a vote of 13,359. Bebe Daniels, as a vampire, got 25,719 votes and won the contest in her class—rather a misnomer at present.

Selznick Sales Drive in Detroit

The Select Pictures Corporation branch in Detroit, Mich., is putting on a special sales drive of its own the week which includes February 8, designating it Kent-Selznick Week.

On February 8, J. O. Kent, manager of the Select office here, will have been in charge of Lewis J. Selznick's business in Detroit just four years and will have been in Mr. Selznick's employ a little more than seven years.

Mrs. Ginoris Now with Paramount

Mrs. Marie Ginoris has recently been added to the technical staff of Paramount's London Studio in the capacity of head film cutter. Mrs. Ginoris is a veteran in the American film industry, having started with Pathe's New York branch in 1906. She was placed in charge of the laboratory and afterward the editorial department. She was later promoted to the scenario department.

Carleton in Cast

In "Domestic Relations," her latest photoplay which Chet Withey is now directing at the Preferred Pictures' studio, Katherine MacDonald is supported by William P. Carleton. Others in the cast are Barbara La Marr and Frank Leigh. Frank D. Ormston designed the settings.

Selznick Program Practically Complete for the Coming Year

What with plays that have been produced and await release and scenarios that have been declared upon for future production, the Selznick program is practically "all set" for the rest of the theatrical year. The Talmadge revivals are fixed as already announced and there remains only decisions to be made on the special features that are to be produced to complete the promise of "Forty from Selznick" made at the outset of the current season.

Owen Moore's presentation will be considered apart from the other plays Selznick will present along with the "star series" that included the Elaine Hammerstein, Eugene O'Brien and Conway Tearle presentations. It is these program pictures that are ready for announcement in outlining what exhibitors may expect from Select exchanges in the months to come.

Conway Tearle's pictures are all screened and in the Selznick laboratories. "Shadows of the Sea," released as of January 1, will be third in this season's list of Tearle issues that have included "After Midnight" and "The Man of Stone." "Shadows of the Sea" has Doris Kenyon in the role opposite Tearle. The story was furnished by Frank Dazey. The picture to follow "Shadows of the Sea" will be selected from "A Wide-Open Town" and "Love's Masquerade." In the latter the leading woman is Winifred Westover. William P. S. Earle directed from Edward J. Montagne's story and scenario.

"A Wide-Open Town" will have Faire Binney as leading woman. Earle Mitchell provided this story and Ralph Ince made the production.

For Elaine Hammerstein, "Bachelor's Blush," a Saturday Evening Post story by George Weston; "Yesterday's Wife," written by Evelyn Campbell for a popular magazine, and "Borrowed Wings," contributed by Leonard Praskins and Thomas Marstens have been obtained. When Ralph Ince is finished with his present assignment as Eugene O'Brien's director he will begin one of the stories starring Miss Hammerstein. Eugene O'Brien features are provided for in "Prophet's Paradise," to be released February 10; "Channing of the Northwest," now being screened by Ralph Ince, and "The Law Bringers," to be produced from C. B. Lancaster's story.

Actors Have Strenuous Time Filming New Pathe Serial

Zero zephyrs snapped up to forty miles an hour at Block Island a few days before Christmas, found Charles Hutchison and the members of his supporting cast in the forthcoming Pathe serial of that thrillful brand engaged in shipwreck rescues in which an ice-coated breeches buoy was the center of interest. Hutchison is reported to have been pleased with these superior "stunt" conditions, while Marguerite Clayton, his blonde and unterrified leading lady heroine of scores of hairsbreadth serial escapes, rose to the occasion like a true viking's daughter, it is stated.

As the stern requirements of this episode began to be lived up to, the highest degree of fortitude on the part of the star and those surrounding him was called for. It was necessary to rush the "shooting" of these scenes, for the heavy wind and seas beating upon the wrecked ship rendered every passing moment more hazardous to the actors. It was a case of jumping into perils and feats of endurance which professional sailors and life guards find it difficult enough to sustain.

Members of the company say that Director George B. Seitz seemed to glory in the punishment he received from wind and frozen spray—though a bit indignant occasionally on discovering his moustache frozen to the megaphone mouthpiece.

These Hutchison shipwreck thrills come in toward the end of the, as yet, nameless new serial. It is designed for Pathe release early in the coming spring.

Popular Players in Realart Film "Sleep Walker"

Two well-known former stars, Florence Roberts of the stage and Cleo Ridgely of the screen, will play in support of Constance Binney in the Realart picture, "The Sleep-Walker," released by Famous Players-Lasky.

Cleo Ridgely was co-starred with Wallace Reid in "The Golden Chance" and other plays before her marriage four years ago to James Horn, the director. She also co-starred with Lou Tellegen and starred in her own right in such plays as "The Chorus Lady."

Returned to Screen Recently

Only recently did she return to the screen with Betty Compson in "The Law and the Woman" and now, with Miss Binney in "The Sleep-Walker," by Aubrey Stauffer, which Edward Le Saint is directing. Others in the cast are Edythe Chapman, Jack Mulhall and Bertram Grassby.

New Daniels Film

Bebe Daniels has completed her Realart picture, "A Game Chicken," the Nina Wilcox Putnam story on which she has been working for nearly two months. Many of the scenes are on shipboard, in the water and aboard real submarines. "A Game Chicken" is a tale of Cuban-American booze-smuggling which affords Miss Daniels an opportunity to wear Spanish costumes. "A Game Chicken" will be released by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Effect of Irish Peace Shown

With 3,000 Sinn Fein political prisoners released—as pictured in Pathe News No. 102—one of the earliest practical results of the signing of the Irish peace is realized. Prisoners are seen leaving Kilmainhan Gaol, saying good-by to British officers and being greeted by crowds of friends.

Secretary of the Navy Denby is seen visiting a big naval gun factory and scrambling over acres of 16-inch guns — a costly "graveyard" under the Arms Conference "scrapping" agreement. In the meantime Urbain Ledoux preaches a "sermon" in front of the Pan-American Building while banners are carried about containing peace Bible texts.

In timely lighter vein you see kiddies in the New York City clinics being practically taught to prepare their own Christmas dinners. Little amateur, but manifestly able, cooks are shown enjoying stuffed turkey and mince pie of their own handiwork. At Westlake, La., an educated bullfrog is shown smoking a cigarette and seeming to enjoy it, while out in Oklahoma a parachute jumper may be excused for not enjoying his sensations during the first 500 feet of a 26,000 feet descent from an airplane—after that you see the parachute catch the air, and all is well.

This issue also contains a timely animated illustration of the Scientific American's figures forecasting a possible limitation of armament of the armies of the great world powers. Vivid pictures are screened showing the construction of the new, great French lighthouse, designed to guide airplanes from a distance as great as 200 miles.

Mangan Resigns from Allen to Form Own Presentation Bureau

Stepping to the front with his own individual 1922 gift to the industry, Francis A. Mangan, one of the pioneers in the field of motion picture presentation, announced this week his resignation as managing-director of the Allen Theatre, Montreal, and the formation of his own presentation bureau in New York.

Mangan's position as one of the path-finders in screen showmanship has been recognized since the early days of 1913, when he was appointed the successor to S. L. Rothafel at the Regent Theatre, when that house attracted attention as a picture theatre with a modern presentation program.

Mangan's innovations at that house won him an offer as managing-director of the Cumberland, which he made famous as the finest picture theatre in its territory. His artistic staging here resulted in his appointment as managing-director of a chain of leading New York theatres, among them the Crescent, Empire, Dyckman and others.

His showmanship traveled across the country, and Phil Gleichman was quick to sign Mangan as director of the Broadway-Strand and Majestic Theatres in Detroit. Further promotion came to him with an offer from the Allens to present their showings at the Allen Theatre, Montreal.

Mangan will take care of pre-release and premiere showings of pictures for producers. He will also take care of the opening of new houses throughout the country. He already has completed prologues for all the latest releases, including electrical and scenic specifications, special music scores, etc. His presentation department will be part of the activities of the New York Concert League, 1664 Broadway, New York.

Preacher Thanks Metro for Films

The Rev. M. Billmayr, pastor of St. Peter's Church, Browerville Minn., who exhibits motion pictures in his church hall, as a part of the church schedule, wrote a letter of thanks recently to A. H. Fischer, Metro branch manager at Minneapolis, in which he said:

"Thank you for those good productions received so far from your firm. Will remember you with future contracts. I carefully watch the latest issues. Anything good in the movie line is welcome from Metro in our St. Peter's Hall."

—Happy New Year—

Speaking of "The Little Minister" reminds us of something. For the time being we are going to join the ranks of the "I told you so's." Last week we got all steamed up about the manner in which the reviewers on some of the local dailies were handling pictures, and after an accumulation of aggravations that have been continued for months in the so-called film criticism departments of these prints, we boiled over. Maybe we wouldn't have gone as far as we did if it was just a personal opinion. But so many persons in the industry and as many outside have from time to time passed remarks that the readers of a certain few papers were not being given the correct idea at all concerning current productions. They were getting the personal reactions of persons who had nothing to make these reactions important or interesting. It is not

An enterprising nut of our acquaintance has devised the scheme of placing thousands of large size pictures on the wall of the subway, so that as the train rushes along the standees may view what will appear to be moving pictures.

MARION DAVIES AND HER CHRISTMAS DOLL

The star of Cosmopolitan Productions presented the toy to the New York Philanthropic League, which sold it at auction for the benefit of the crippled children of Manhattan fair to the readers, the producers nor the theatres.

It happened that last week we predicted that Penrhyn Stanlaws' production of "The Little Minister" would receive the same treatment that other pictures of real and general entertainment value or genuine beauty have—reviews written with a pose. At least we hoped it was a pose, because if not an attitude, it denoted downright ignorance. Well, our little group of offenders came through on schedule, with the possible exception of one reviewer, and she did not happen to review "The Little Minister."

Her place was taken by a person that has fine perception and can convey it with especially able writing, and who signed the review with three initials. Of course the defense of the absent one will be that we thought the substitute correct in his or her attitude because he or she agreed with us. Whoever it was did not agree wholly with what we thought of the picture, but the review was written without the attitude of rather being funny than fair and without being anæsthetic to beauty.

But the reviewer on the Tribune struck her usual picture and made a few wise cracks that in no way conveyed in the slightest degree what "The Little Minister" was all about. And Quinn Martin, the young gentleman who recently published a story a month old concerning some affairs of the National Association which the trade papers could have made public if they had wanted to break their word, displayed his usual attitude when a thing of rare beauty comes to the local screen. He ended an undeservedly short review that had the appearance of a terrible fear of being accused of being responsive to sentiment that was not sentimentality with a phrase to the effect that dispelled the picture with the idea that it was just suitable for Christmas week presentation.

The attitude of these reviewers would be humorous if it didn't have the serious angle that perhaps one or two persons are influenced by what they write while striking their tiresome poses.

And please bear in mind that "The Little Minister" is not the only case in point. It brought the matter to a head.

One of our European scouts informs us that London will be introduced to an entirely new form of entertainment at a remarkable cinema du luxe to be erected in the vicinity of Buckingham Palace.

Carefully selected "interest" films will be accompanied and surrounded by music furnished by a huge symphony orchestra, and in every way the theatre will cater exclusively for the highest class public. It is the intention of the promoters to offer an entertainment of an absolutely distinctive and original character amid surroundings of unequalled elegance and comfort.

The enterprise was originated by a well-known London film renter with whom are associated the following distinguished co-directors: Hon. Edward Lascelles (brother of Viscount Lascelles), Rt. Hon. Erskine, Hon. D. A. Forbes, Capt. Baillie Hamilton, Major H. M. Digby, Major A. Brind and W. E. Berry (of Bradford). The scheme will be operated by a small private company with a nominal capital of £40,000, and arrangements have already been completed for the purchase of the freehold site known as St. Peter's Chapel at Ease and Nos. 12 and 12a, Palace street, Westminster.

Ernst Lubitsch was guest of honor at a luncheon given in the Hotel Ambassador December 28 by the Hamilton Pictures Corporation which was attended by representatives of the daily newspapers and trade press. Following the delightful repast Herr Lubitsch made a speech which was understood by but few of those present as it was spoken in his native tongue. Through the kindness of Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld the speech was translated. After that Paul Davidson, a countryman of Lubitsch's in apparent contradiction to his English name, and the man who is responsible for discovering Lubitsch and Pola Negri, also made a few well chosen remarks, which Dr. Riesenfeld obligingly made into something the guests could readily understand.

Just before the luncheon party broke up Herr Lubitsch answered questions that some of the guests directed at him at his request. Among other things, someone wished to know what he thought of American film reviewers, and he answered that he had a very high opinion of them so far and that he hoped it would continue in the future.

The eighth of Harry Reichenbach's amazing series of "Foolish Wives of History" is:

"MRS. BEN FRANKLIN"

One day Benjamin Franklin awoke before Philadelphians usually got up, it being but two in the afternoon, and laying his motorcycle aside for the nonce, took a stroll down one of the main streets.

He was in the abstract and was nonchalantly chewing on a lollypop —then called "all day suckers."

As he walked, his strides were slow and methodical, and carried him past the Y. W. C. A.

Leaning out the window and discussing the Stillman case of that period a young woman, not particularly noted for beauty but who clinked a miserable money bag, gave young Ben the up and down and snickered.

"What a tricky looking egg that is," she said to her companion.

"You added up your words and gave a total," said the other miss.

Young Ben was sore.

"You're a couple of fine snobs," he said. "Pretty soon I'm going to start the Saturday Evening Post, and what I won't say about you two can't be put in lower case."

That scared the one girl and several hours later she sent word to Franklin that if he'd refrain from roasting her and give up lollypops she'd marry him.

"But I don't want to get married," he said.

"If you don't," she answered, "you'll have no one to be unfaithful to."

So Ben took her for better or worse. Ask him.

The Passing Week in Review

THIS is the season of rumors. Everywhere one goes a rumor concerning this or that deal is heard. If one were to take seriously all that is being said in certain idle circles a book the size of our Christmas issue would be far too small to record them. Rumors are harmful. And for an official whose concern is mentioned in these idle reports to encourage their further circulation by arousing added curiosity on the ground that it is publicity is in reality serving food for idlers who while away the time talking. This is not the time for talk. Rumors mean nothing. Seconds are precious. They must be consumed with action—not cheap talk. Forget rumors. Stop circulating them. If you hear any, keep them to yourself—your neighbor may be too busy building his business, meeting buyers or contracting for new pictures to want to waste his valuable time listening to the report of this or that deal. It doesn't mean a thing. It's money he wants to make.

THE other day we wasted our time looking at a propaganda picture which we predict will die an awful death once the effort is made to place it on the market. The picture was offered a State Rights firm last week, but the head of that company very wisely turned it down. There is no room for anything but entertaining pictures these days in the State Rights market. Propaganda films are an insult to the intelligence, not only of the struggling exchanges and exhibitors, but to the business as a whole. And particularly true is this when the propaganda picture threatens to antagonize theatre patrons. Be on the lookout for such pictures as these and lose no time in turning them down. Remember you're in the show business and that means the business of entertaining the public. Your duty to the public is plain. You can't do it by handling propaganda pictures. It's only a question of time when you will ascertain that good, old Abe Lincoln knew what he was talking about when touching on the subject of "fooling the people." But it may be too late then. Be on the lookout. Buy pictures that entertain. That's your business. Stick to it.

A MIDDLEWESTERN exchange man came to New York a week or so ago. He had his little tale of woe. And he lost no time in telling it to other buyers he met at his hotel. Howling and persistent complaining over every little thing that bobs up will not hasten our return to normalcy. It breeds discouragement and despondency. And no one need be told that what we most need at this time is confidence. Business is picking up and will continue to improve. We have the situation in hand and everything considered, the situation at present is exceedingly encouraging. It looks like a big independents' month.

LOUIS BAUM, who spends five or six weeks at a time going out into the territories to ascertain at first hand the needs of the market, returned to New York. Lou is one of those keen showmen who doesn't "kid" himself into believing that times are good when they are otherwise. He's too shrewd a business man to be misled or to mislead those upon whom his firm is dependent for business. And for having such a man on its official staff Equity is to be congratulated. Baum made one observation on this last trip that is unusually interesting. He said: "As I see it the field does not call for a volume of pictures, but rather fewer pictures and better ones." And we are happy to say that independents in general are appreciative of this condtion and are working accordingly.

WE want to thank the many readers who so kindly sent along their comments on this department. Incidently we take this opportunity of thanking our friends in and out of this field for their holiday greetings. This department is dedicated to the State Rights and independent market. We are here to serve you. Our department will contain all the news and information that will help the State Righter in his daily work. Our reviews of State Rights pictures will be unbiased and written absolutely from the money-making possibilities both for exchange and exhibitor. We maintain that a picture being State righted on a $10,000 basis must not be reviewed as one being marketed for $100,000. The logic is that the exhibitor booking a picture at a rental of $10 a day does not expect a "Way Down East." And the house playing a $10-a-day picture is not charging his patrons the same prices that the $100-a-day exhibitor is getting from his audiences. A producer, who had only $12,000 at his disposal, can not be expected to turn out a picture that has the artistry of one that cost $50,000 to make. These facts must be considered and are considered. The producer, distributor, exchangeman and exhibitor are in this business for what money they can make. Our reviews will be constructive—not destructive. The investments of the producer, distributor and exhibitors will at all times be considered.

IT is indeed encouraging to note that many distributing concerns in order to prove the drawing power of their pictures to exhibitors and exchanges are staging special shows. And what is more convincing is the fact that these showings are being held in poor show towns and at a time of the season when everybody in show business steers clear of any experiment.

HERE'S a letter from a representative New England exhibitor—"Bill" Mahoney of the Rialto Theatre, Providence, R. I.—that is absolute proof that State Rights features are welcomed by real showmen:

"Up to April 1921, I had used very few State Rights pictures, but during the past year I have booked them at every opportunity. As one who has the interest of the industry at heart permit me, as an exhibitor, to say that State Rights pictures have improved tremendously during the past year and a half. Some of my best money-makers of the year were State rights pictures. If the independents would only remember that it is the public that must be pleased, they will have no trouble getting bookings. As a matter of fact it was a State Rights picture that made away with the biggest gross receipts in this city in 1921. I have found many, many money-makers in the independent market—and intend to find even more this year. The day of the State Rights picture has arrived."

WITHIN the next five weeks the trade can expect to hear of the entry of four very well known stars in the independent field. This testifies to the remarkable advance made by this market. It has attracted many good box office names; but there are more to come. And yet there are those who, disguised as friends of the State Righters, comment on what they characterize as a "lack of quality pictures." The State Rights market during the past year has given more real box office winners in one year in proportion to the total number of releases than any other branch of the industry. That's an absolute fact. Think it over. And watch for the big doings of 1922.

Plenty of Attractive Paper for "Shorty" Hamilton Films

In their endeavor to give the exchangeman and exhibitor effective co-operation, McGovern & Egler, distributors of the new series of 26 two-reel westerns, featuring "Shorty" Hamilton, have provided an unusually striking set of posters.

There is one one-sheet and one three-sheet to be distributed with each release, besides a stock one and a stock six sheet to run throughout the series until exhausted, then a new style one and a new style six-sheet will be made, and used as stock paper. When this supply is used up, another style will be put in use.

Exhibitor Help

This system will no doubt meet with the approval of every exhibitor, as he will practically have two style one sheet, one style three sheet and a one style six sheet with each release.

The stock paper has been made especially for cut-out use, and, acing to J. V. Ritchey's assertion, the lithographs are the best he ever made for a two-reel western.

Warner's Probe to Ascertain Picture Appeal

In order to ascertain the appeal of the Warner Brothers production, "Ashamed of Parents," the publicity department probed the records of the Domestic Relations Court of New York, and found that scores of young folks are responsible for the neglect and utter disregard of their parents.

This proceedure was taken for the purpose of gleaning at first hand the universality of the Warner production, following the feature articles of Sophie Irene Loeb in the New York Evening World and Jane Dixon in the New York Telegram. Mention of these facts is made because it affords the exhibitor booking the production an unusual opportunity to secure unlimited publicity in his locality.

The members of the cast include Edith Stockton, Jack Lionel Bohn, Charles Eldridge, Walter McEvan and W. J. Gross. Eddie Bonns and Louis Marangella, of the Warner publicity staff, edited and titled the production.

Elmo Lincoln to Make a Personal Appearance Tour

After several weeks of negotiations, Louis Weiss, Secretary of "Adventures of Tarzan" Serial Sales Corporation, announced this week that Elmo Lincoln, star of the serial "Adventures of Tarzan," will make a personal appearance tour of several weeks duration in conjunction with the showing of this production in several of the territories. Lincoln, at present in Los Angeles, will arrive in New York on January 12.

His tour will open in Philadelphia the latter part of January, where under the direction of Ben Amsterdam, Masterpiece Film Attractions, owners of "Adventures of Tarzan" for Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey, the gigantic serial favorite will appear in various houses over a period of two weeks. Following this, Lincoln will appear in Detroit and the surrounding cities for two weeks under the auspices of Strand Features, Inc., owners of the serial for Michigan.

His tour will take him into ten states and will be heralded by an extensive advance publicity campaign under the direction of Bert Ennis, who will accompany the star on the entire tour. A special act is now being prepared for the original interpreter of the character of Tarzan and it is understood that distinct novelty has been worked out in connection with the various wild animal stunts which Lincoln performs in the production itself.

Following the termination of the trip throughout this country, arrangements will be made for the appearance of the star of "Adventures of Tarzan" in England.

Goldstone Will Star Talmadge

Phil Goldstone announced this week that he will feature Dick Talmadge, the acrobatic, knockabout star, in a series of productions that will be released in the independent market during the coming year. Talmadge's initial independent starring feature, "The Unknown," was given its premier at B. S. Moss' Franklin Theatre this week. Capital Film Exchange, which is distributing the feature in New York, announced a number of first run engagements.

On January 3 "The Unknown" will be given its Broadway premier at Marcus Loew's New York Theatre. The feature also has been booked into the metropolitan Keith, B. S. Moss, Proctor, Loew and Fox theatres.

Horner Film Ready

The first of the twenty-four Bob Horner two-reel Westerns being distributed by Western Classic Sales Company, will be State righted on January 15. "Bullets and Justice," starring Tom Pickford, will be the first release.

Arrow Official Back with Good News; "Ten Nights" Sets Record

T. A. Curran, special representative for Arrow Film Corporation, returned last week after a three months' trip in the Oklahoma, Kansas, Georgia and Texas territories, where he visited all the independent exchanges as well as many exhibitors. Mr. Curran found conditions improving and added that from talks he had with exhibitors he was led to believe that theatre owners there favor independent productions wherever it is practicable. He reported, too, that Arrow productions are increasing in popularity and the demand for pictures handled by that firm shows an encouragingly big increase.

Arrow's home office this week was in receipt of more pleasant news concerning Blazed Trail Productions, Inc.'s feature, "Ten Nights in a Barroom," starring John Lowell. Following the record-breaking two-week run at the Victory in Providence, R. I., the Keith office was so pleased with the showing the picture made at the Rhode Island metropolitan house that it booked it into the Bijou Theatres, Woonsocket and Pawtucket, R. I. At one show on Sunday, December 25, in Woonsocket, the picture did more business than that house had done for any prior three shows.

On the following day the picture did within three hundred dollars of the house record for three days. When the run concluded on Wednesday the picture not only shattered every record, but also brought the theatre more business than Manager Watson thought was possible to pack into the house in one week. It became necessary to give extra shows to accommodate the crowds. This showing was made in spite of the fact that 80 per cent. of the population of Woonsocket is foreign and the city is industrially crippled, all but two mills there being shut down.

Arrow announced this week that the press book on "Ten Nights in a Barroom" is now ready.

Between You and Me

IN desperation a director, well-known on the Coast, rushed East just before the holidays to dispose of a feature that he wanted to turn into cash immediately. He consulted a number of program corporations, but they postponed a definite reply. Finally he went to a State Righter, who not only took the picture over immediately after screening, but also gave 50 per cent. of the purchase in cash within ten hours after the agreement was reached. The State Righter is the winner, for he obtained a bargain and when formal announcement of this acquisition is made a huge surprise will be sprung on the trade.

Elmo Lincoln's personal appearance tour in conjunction with "Adventures of Tarzan" serial which the Weiss Brothers are State Righting, is a neat piece of business and bound to popularize both the star and distributors. It's going to cost a good piece of change to send him and a corps of publicity men on the road, but the move shows the proper spirit and is bound to bring big returns to the Weiss Brothers.

A State Righter handling a foreign picture two weeks ago closed a deal with a Salt Lake City exchange for the Northwest rights to the film. A print was sent on immediately, C. O. D. The C. O. D. was not lifted. Because of the heavy Christmas freight, the distributor was not notified until a week later. When he made inquiries he ascertained that the exchange had gone out of business. The deal cost the distributor approximately $325, but he got that much back in experience.

To listen to certain folks out of the motion picture business, this is the only industry that is making money. That probably accounts for the presence of eight "angels" considered "big men" in their particular lines of endeavor. One "angel" last week sunk $50,000 in cash on a State rights proposition that is looming up like ten times that amount.

Christmas was a record-breaker for State rights first runs. And what is more virtually every engagement was a winner.

A Coast exchange suddenly found itself without salesmen. A former salesman succeeded in getting local financial backing among certain exhibitors and opened an exchange, inducing his former fellow workers to quit their jobs and join him. They did, but the exchange flopped three weeks later. The deserters returned to their former exchange, seeking their jobs, but learned to their disappointment that the day after they had quit, other salesmen quickly filled their shoes.

A well-known star, after inducing a wealthy admirer to back a producing company of which she was to be the active head and star, approached a State rights distributing organization to effect a releasing medium. The distributor was willing, but when he ascertained that the backer was associated with a failure in another line, he very wisely replied, "Nothing doing."

Lesser-Rosenberg Announce Production Plans for 1922

Convinced the 1922 will be a year for big and better pictures, the Irving M. Lesser and Michael Rosenberg interests, composing Western Pictures Exploitation Company, announced this week the first of what will be a series of special productions to be distributed from Los Angeles by their organization.

A contract has been entered into by Messrs. Lesser and Rosenberg with Hugh B. Evans, Jr., whereby Roy Stewart is to be starred under the direction of Robert Thornby. Stewart has made a box-office name for himself in the last few years, appearing recently in the Zane Grey stories, as well as with Katherine McDonald and other stellar lights. "Heart of the North" in which Stewart was starred was held over a second week at the Alhambra Theatre, when it played in Los Angeles recently. Shortly Stewart will be seen in a series of stories written by the famous author, Peter B. Kyne. Marjorie Daw will be his leading woman.

After a careful canvass of the literary market for the best story obtainable and suitable for Roy Stewart the producers have selected "Ridin' Wild," by H. H. Van Loan, author of "The Virgin of Stamboul" starring Priscilla Dean; "The Blue Moon," starring Norma Talmadge, "The Great Redeemer," starring House Peters, and "Fighting Mad," starring William Desmond.

Brandt's Feature Arouses Interest

Much interest has been aroused in film circles over the splendid exploitation incident to the State righting of "The Greatest Question," starring Roy Stewart. Joe Brandt and George H. Davis are state-righting this feature which has won so much commendation from exchangemen, exhibitors and critics of the trade press. Harry Revier directed the picture.

Reasonable Priced Features Are Needed, Says Schnitzer; Observations of the Week

THE duty of the State rights man is plain. He must do his utmost to materially assist needy exhibitors in keeping their houses open. This we can accomplish by giving theatres pictures that can be booked at a reasonable cost. But the picture must carry merit and entertainment value."

The above from Joe Schnitzer, President of Equity Pictures Corporation. Mr. Schnitzer's firm has accomplished many tasks and its 1921 contributions to the State rights market commanded more than ordinary attention. Joe this season openly demonstrated his confidence in this field by paying a record price for W. K. Ziegfield's Florence Reed starring vehicle, "The Black Panther's Cub."

But this is not the time for pretentious and costly productions, says Mr. Schnitzer. And the point is well taken. Good pictures do not necessarily mean the expenditure of "big" money. By good and reasonable-priced pictures, he means features that entertain, that will keep the wolf from the exhibitor's door. Joe believes in that old, but ever reliable adage, "live and let live."

Will an attractive title bring them to the box office? That is the question that Film Row has been discussing for some time. After carefully studying the current situation we believe that a good title is one of the most attractive features of a picture from the box office angle. The Warner Brothers have proved this to be a fact. "Why Girls Leave Home", an old, but, familiar title that brought back memories of other rays, packed theatres throughout the country. "School Days" with Wesley Barry established history with its triple premier showing this week in Cleveland, Washington and Hartford. And "Ashamed of Parents," which inspires much original exploitation, is proving its mettle. A particularly entertaining feature of the latter production is the diversified titles by Eddie Bonns and Louis Marangella.

Franklyn Backer of the East Coast Pictures is having no trouble disposing of franchises. The proposition that Mr. Backer is submitting to independent exchangemen is one that is difficult to turn down. As a matter of fact, it guarantees the exchange a permanent supply of pictures for the entire year, three of the features already being completed, and on most reasonable terms. Mr. Backer is perfecting a promising organization that should soon make its presence in the State rights field strongly felt, for he is not only intimately acquainted with the business in general, but incidently he is working for to-morrow and not only today.

Tony Luchese of De Luxe Film Exchange of Philadelphia was in New York this week, smiling and uncomplaining. Tony bought the eastern Pennsylvania rights to Arrow's great box office picture, "Ten Nights in a Barroom", before that feature started on its meteoric two-week record-breaking run in Providence, R. I. Tony admitted when he first bought the picture that he had an unusual attraction, but when he heard the Providence reports, he fairly went wild with enthusiasm and had no trouble setting a premier for the picture in Reading, Pa., on Jan. 9. Bill Haggerty is exploiting the feature and is out to better the New England record. Go to it Bill.

A certain salesman who was in the Western territory returned to New York this week. He found that exhibitors out there were not making much use of twenty-four sheets. What is true of the West seems equally true of other sections of the country. In these days when economy should be watchword of every firm, it would be well for State righters to think well before laying out money for twenty-four sheets. Accessories should be given the same careful attention as is given the production of the picture itself.

The Lesser Brothers have an exchange exploitation system that should receive the careful attention of exchangemen. The Lessers have learned that proper exploitation creates a demand for a picture. They are exhibitors and through keen exploitation have succeeded in building a string of money-making theatres on the Coast. They are applying the same tactics to the exploitation of pictures handled by their own exchanges with the result that they are creating a local demand for their productions. This demand is created via the mailing lists. The Lessers have obtained various lists from theatres in their territory. Instead of waiting for an exhibitor to exploit a picture, the enterprising brothers go them one better and create public interest in their offerings by keeping in constant touch with the "fans" and informing them of additional acquisitions as soon as they are taken over. This system has increased bookings of Lesser distributed pictuers in San Francisco and Los Angeles over 200 per cent, in less than a year. Think it over.

Speaking of exploitation of pictures reminds us of the splendid work that Harry and Jack Cohn and Joe Brandt are doing. These three short subject kings do not wait for theatres or exchanges to exploit their wares. On the contrary, they grasp every opportunity to advertise their subjects in the trade press, daily newspapers, window displays, etc. And what is more they resort to original tactics. Take, for instance, that Chamber of Commerce "movie ball" stunt in New York. The Cohn boys were right on the job. they turned out a movie of the ball in record-time, incorporated it into their interesting "Screen Snapshots" and thereby introduced the latter subject to several thousand folks. And so it goes. We have even seen the Cohn-Brandt combination inspire newspaper editorials. And that's the sort of enterprise that wins. No wonder Joe, Jack and Harry are characterized "the short subject kings."

Bert Lubin on Tour of 'Changes in Sunny South

Bert Lubin producer of the new Allen Ray series of six society-adventure dramas, left New York this week on a short tour of the Southern exchanges, carrying with him a print of "Partners of the Sunset," the initial release. Mr. Lubin's first stop was Atlanta. He will also visit New Orleans and Dallas.

A deal is pending for the entire foreign rights to the series. All Star Feature Company of Detroit this week purchased the Michigan rights and already has started exploiting the first picture.

Laub Freelancing

Harry Chandlee and William B. Laub have joined the freelance forces, but will retain their positions with World Film Corporation. Mr. Chandlee is now at work on World's "Into the Beyond", while Laub is editing and subtitling "Road of Peril", a German feature owned by F. Kahan.

Many Territories Sold on "The Mysterious Pearl"

Backing his convictions that the present demand for pictures stimulating business for the many large theatres that have been built during the last few years, will create a new field for the booking of high-class serials. E. S. Manheimer of Photoplay Serials Corporation has released the new Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber chaptered photoplay, "The Mysterious Pearl," to state rights exchanges and announced this week the immediate sale of the latest feature from the pens of J. Grubb Alexander and Harvey Gates to several well-known exchanges.

Every one of the fifteen chapters of the new serial was completed and is ready for immediate delivery before the release of the production to independent buyers was announced. This method was followed by Mr. Manheimer because of his belief that the time was exceptionally opportune for serials and the demand would be such that the different territories would be contracted for in unusually quick time.

That he was right seems to be proven by the fact that his first announcement of the exchanges that will handle the Ben Wilson vehicle includes the following. Greater New York and Northern New Jersey went to Warner Brothers of New York; New York State was taken by Grand and State was taken by Grand & Warner Film Company of Buffalo; Metro Film Exchange of Philadelphia controls Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey, while New England went to the Confederated Film Exchange of New England, located in Boston.

Katherine Stuart to Edit Bible Films

Katherine Stuart, well known scenario writer, has been engaged by Weiss Brothers Artclass pictures Corporation to edit its Italian version of the Old Testament. She will work in association with Adolph Weiss. Jack Holbrook, well known camera and technical authority, is supervising the laboratory work as well as the color effects which will be an important feature of the finished production.

Galaxy of Stars

Twenty-four stars appear in the latest release of "Screen Snapshots," distributed through the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc. Among them are Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Hart, Jackie Coogan, Mary Pickford and Doug Fairbanks, Montague Love, June Caprice, Conway Tearle, Marshall Neilan, Doris Kenyon, Douglas McLean, Lucy Fox, Zena Keefe, Eugene O'Brien and many others.

Arrow on Broadway

Arrow was on Broadway during Christmas week as a special engagement at Marcus Loew's New York Theatre. The production featured was "Love, Hate and a Woman," starring Grace Davison.

State Rights Coast News

Scotty King has signed with the Commonwealth Motion Picture Producers, of which Fred Caldwell is director, as casting director. He will also play character parts in the features which will be State righted.

Larry Weingarten, of Sacred Films, Inc., of Burbanks, is responsible for the announcement that the five episodes of the Bible series being made by that firm have been completed.

O'Connor Productions has made its last picture at the Brentwood studio and is moving to the Caswell studio, where production will be resumed immediately on the Mirthquake comedies.

Dick Sherer is at the Warner Brothers' studio working on the animal serial.

George Hackathorne has received an offer from Archie Frazier, the Australian film magnate, to head a producing company of his own in that country.

Amalgamated Products' Corporation, of which Gilbert M. Anderson is the head, has started work on "Any Night," which East Coast Pictures' Corporation, of New York, of which Franklyn Backer is the president, will State Right via the franchise system.

Backer Completes Negotiations for Eastern Franchise Holders

Returning from his first swing around the circle in the interests of the new East Coast-Amalgamated producing and distributing organization, Franklyn E. Backer, president of East Coast Productions, Inc., which is handling the pictures of Amalgamated Producing Company, produced under the personal supervision of Gilbert M. Anderson, this week announced franchise-holders east of the Mississippi.

On his trip Mr. Backer took three Amalgamated pictures with him so that they could be screened for the salesmen in each territory. As the pictures are to be booked in series as well as separately, and the array of stars in the first three, including such notables as Robert Edeson, William Courtleigh, Myrtle Steadman and Tulley Marshall, give an idea of their quality, it was thought wise to let those responsible for their proper exploitation see at least three of them before the first, "Ashes" was released.

Mr. Backer states that they were viewed with enthusiasm by the personnel of the following exchanges who hold the franchises for their respective territories: Harry Segal of Boston for New England; Warner's Exchange of New York for Greater New York and Northern Jersey; Grand-Warner Exchange of Buffalo for Northern New York; Skirboll Brother's Gold Seal Productions Company of Cleveland for Ohio and Michigan; and Samuel Spitzer's Reelcraft Film Corporation of Chicago for Northern Illinois and Indiana.

Lester M. Scott, Jr., whose wide acquaintance has made him a well known figure as traveling representative for several large distributing organizations, and who has until recently represented C. C. Burr, has been selected as field manager by East Coast Productions, Inc., for the territory west of the Mississippi, where he will acquaint the franchise holders with the importance of the Amalgamated Productions and co-operate with them in their presentation.

Warners Devise Novelty to Exploit Edwards' "School Days"

An exceedingly clever publicity stunt was devised this week by Warner Brothers as a means of further exploiting "School Days," starring Wesley Barry. In order to imbed the idea firmly in the minds of exhibitors who play the picture, the firm has adopted the following slogan for "School Days," viz: "Advertise with Music."

The feature was inspired by the theme that inspired the screen version in that the Gus Edwards melodies play a big part in the picture. The innovation will be introduced at the New York Warner Brother's exchange. A phonograph, the horn of which will protrude out of many big windows on the exchange floor, will play the Gus Edwards melody, "School Days."

Permission is also being obtained for the installation on the roof of the Leavitt building, Broadway, of a Magna-Vox, commonly known as an amplifier, which, when connected by wires with the long chain of music stores and commercial shops throughout the city, will play the theme song so that every passerby will hear it. Arrangements are being made to connect the entire State of New York. The stunt is calculated to stir the metropolis.

The slogan "Advertise With Music," will be synonymous wherever the picture is shown, according to Eddie Bonns.

Shows Bible Films

Sam Rothafel of the Capitol Theatre, New York, during the week of Dec. 18 staged the metropolitan premier presentation of Sacred Film, Inc.'s first Old Testament narrative, "Creation". Mr. Rothafel has booked the entire series consisting of twelve single reelers.

1922 Will Be Record Breaker for Independents—L. L. Hiller

"I don't feel that any one will contradict the fact that the State righting of good pictures is growing in favor," said L. L. Hiller, President of "His Nibs" Syndicate, Inc., which is distributing "His Nibs" starring Charles (Chic) Sales, when interviewed this week concerning the coming year.

"Of course, at first the exhibitors wondered if they were really going to get good pictures, and thy naturally were backward about showing too much enthusiasm. But the past year has been a period of advancement for the independent. The exhibitor has realized in the past year that it is poor business judgment and often means a great loss of money when he books a picture a year before it is made.

"Good clean pictures—pictures that are intelligently made—are what the public is demanding. Of course, the 'fly-by-night' exchange has proved a detriment in the past, but those days are over. The chorus girl who kills her lover is no longer sought as a picture star any more than she is in demand as a vaudeville headliner. The whole mental of the country is advancing. The public school systems are attending to that and as the young people grow up they are thinking and reading deeper than the average of ten years ago. And they want intelligent amusement. I believe the independents are the first to realize how vitally important it is that they should get that type of motion picture."

Official Lauds Curwood Film

Arrow Film Corporation is in receipt of a letter from Hon. F. W. Hinckley, president of Pine Tree Pictures, Inc., enclosing another letter from Ransford W. Shaw, Attorney General of Maine, in which the latter congratulates the firm on the initial James Oliver Curwood production, "God's Country and the Law." Mr. Shaw saw the picture in Houlton, Me., where he said the reception accorded the picture was so great that a return engagement was necessary.

Big Deal On

A persistent report heard in Chicago this week had it that a big deal involving the consolidation of three exchanges, two in that city and one in Indianapolis was pending.

An Exhibitor's Resolution

I resolve for 1922:

That I will quit talking about bad business and boost for Prosperity.

That I will give the public a square deal by buying the best pictures I can find, regardless of price.

That I will book every PERCY AND FERDIE HALLROOM COMEDY, because my patrons enjoy and demand them—because they are clean, wholesome, and high class—and because they represent the finest type two-reel comedy on the market.

Many Previews for "His Nibs"

"His Nibs," the Exceptional Pictures Corporation's production starring Charles (Chic) Sales, will be released to first run houses Jan. 1. L. L. Hiller, president of "His Nibs" Syndicate, Inc., which is State righting the picture, this week announced a number of preview engagements. All-Star Productions, Inc., Salt Lake City, showed the picture to exhibitors in that territory at the Pantages Theatre there. George A. Levy of Liberty Theatres Corporation of Kansas City also staged several preview showings during Christmas week.

In every case the exhibitors were particularly enthusiastic over the picture and especially the meteoric work of Charles (Chic) Sale.

Bill Alexander Starts for Home

William Alexander of Alexander Film Corporation, which is State righting the Sherlock Holmes series will leave England this week and is expected to return to New York late next week. He is bringing back with him among other commissions from film men of the United Kingdom an order for a compilation of a boom stunt encyclopaedia to be used for suggestions for exhibitors and exploiters there.

The commission came followed a novel exploitation stunt pulled by Mr. Alexander with the co-operation of Sir A. Conan Doyle.

Warner-Grand New Exchange

With the expansion of its Buffalo offices to include the entire exchange space at 338 Pearl street until the completion of the new building at 265 Franklin street, the Grand-Warner Film Exchange has equipped itself with more adequate facilities for the handling of the extensive business which has followed on the heels of his venture into the Buffalo territory four months ago.

The firm is meeting with great success with "Miracles of the Jungle" and "Why Girls Leave Home." The next big feature will be "School Days." Sydney Samson is manager of the exchange.

"Four Seasons" Has Big Appeal

Five hundred students of Peddie Institute, Hightstown, N. J., attended a special showing of "The Four Seasons," released by Kineto, the showing was arranged at the request of E. A. Morrie, a member of the Critique Committee of the National Board of Review, which voted to put "The Four Seasons" in its list of "Exceptional Photoplays."

In a letter to Kineto Mr. Morrie told of the exceptional appeal on the picture to students and young folks.

Gossip of the Trade

J. CHARLES DAVIS, 2D, advertising and publicity director of Arrow, was stricken with the grippe while exploiting "Ten Nights in a Barroom" in Woonsocket, R. I., on Christmas day. Tom Curran came on from New York and acted as pinch hitter.

Clyde E. Elliott has sold his interest in the Chicago Pioneer exchange and established the Clyde E. Elliott Amusement Enterprises there. He purchased all the unsold territory on "The Lady of the Dugout" last week.

J. H. "Lani" Magoon, of the Consolidated Amusement Company, Honolulu, T. H., was a holiday visitor in San Francisco this week. He is to come East and look over features available fo his territory.

J. J. Goodstein, general manager of Arrow Photoplays, Inc., spent two days in Seattle, Wash., last week, appointing A. H. Huot as manager of the Seattle exchange. Charles Zagrans, New York auditor of the firm, is working on the hooks.

General Manager Goodstein announced, too, in Seattle this week that Arrow Photoplays will open an exchange in San Francisco. He will also visit the Salt Lake City and Denver branches.

Joe Feld has quit the St. Louis Fox exchange, where he was auditor, to become secretary-treasurer of Superior Pictures Corporation in Kansas City. Superior recently purchased the Pioneer picture rights of Tom Leonard for eastern Missouri and Kansas.

Al Jennings is making personal appearances in Missouri in conjunction with the showing of his independent picture, "The Lady of the Dugout." He recently addressed the St. Louis Chamber of Commerce.

The Warner brothers were a busy lot this week. There were three premiers for "School Days," starring Wesley Barry. Abe Warner went to Hartford, while Harry Warner went to Cleveland. They were both auspicious openings.

J. B. Underwood last week assumed his duties as manager of the St. Louis exchange of Enterprise Distributing Corporation. He succeeds P. E. K. Collins, who joined the Fine Art Exchange in the same city.

W. J. Jenkins is back in Atlanta, Ga., following a tour of the Enterprise Distributing Corporation exchanges in St. Louis, Kansas City and Dallas.

All in all, Christmas was mighty good to attaches of State Rights exchanges throughout the country, judging from much information that has poured into this office during the past few days.

A conference of officials of the Lande exchanges of Ohio was held last week in Cincinnati. Among those who attended were Harry Lande, Joe Davidson and Bill Finkle.

M. R. Fink, president and general manager of Peacock Productions, Inc., sailed for America from Europe on Dec. 26. He will arrive at his office in Kansas City on Jan. 6.

A pre-view showing of "His Nibs," the Exceptional Pictures Corporation feature, was given at the Liberty Theatre, in Kansas City on Dec. 28. George A. Levy, president of Liberty Theatres Corporation film exchanges, supervised the showing.

Tom E. Davies and H. Winik, who were in this country last month and purchased foreign rights to many State rights pictures here, cabled their arrival in England last week. Incidentally, they also announced the purchase of the foreign rights to the Bible films, produced for Sacred Films, Inc., by Raymond Wells, now abroad.

Al Kahn, of Federated-Crescent Film Exchange, Kansas City, on his return to the latter city from New York, announced the purchase of the Missouri, Nebraska and Iowa rights to 15 feature productions.

Sidney Baker, of Exhibitors Direct Service Exchange, St. Louis, released "A Yankee Go-Getter," a comedy-drama starring Neva Gerber, on Dec. 22. Baker is looking forward to an unusually busy year in his district.

Tony Luchese, of De Luxe Exchange, Philadelphia, this week announced a policy of "fewer and better pictures."

The Boston State Rights exchangemen are conducting a campaign of their own against the censorship issue which will be decided by the voters of Massachusetts early next year.

The column takes this means of thanking the many readers who so thoughtfully sent on holiday greetings. Same to you and many of them.

Joe Weil is a busy man these days and is having no trouble at all keeping the wares of Export & Import Film Company and Bert Lubin before the trade and public. "Hustlin' Joe" has made it a study to fill the wants of the editors and writes his copy accordingly. A very good tip.

This is the "I resolve" season.

In sending along his Christmas greetings William Parker of Western Exploitation Company of Los Angeles informed the writer that that firm will get out a series of State Rights pictures that will knock the field "cuckoo." O. K. by us, Bill. Shoot.

Lester Scott, traveling for East Coast, from away out in Omaha, Neb., where he spent the holiday, sends word to the effect that conditions in that territory are improving rapidly.

Between peddling out newsy and feature copy on "The Adventures of Tarzan" serial and helping Weiss Brothers keep the Italian version of the Old Testament before the trade, Bert Ennis has nothing to do these days. Aye, wot?

Al S. Glenn, who publicized the achievements of C. C. Burr enterprises, is now associated with a Wall Street brokerage firm, a Christmas card from him discloses.

Joe Brandt, one of the livest of "live ones," has several deals under way that will furnish the trade with an agreeable surprise when consummated.

Backer Closes Foreign Deal

Through a contract negotiated by Franklyn E. Backer, of East Coast Productions, Inc., the entire foreign rights to the series of twelve Amalgamated Productions presenting Broadway favorites under special co-starring agreements have been acquired by the Export and Import Company of New York. These pictures are to be delivered at the rate of one each month.

Other contracts with exchanges in the United States who will handle the Amalgamated product as franchise holders are now being consummated and the announcement of the principals promised at an early date.

Bookings Pile Up on Stewart Film

"The Heart of the North," the George H. Davis-Joe Brandt feature of the Northwest, featuring Roy Stewart, has been going over so strong and securing so many bookings in the Detroit territory, that Dave Mundstock, president of Strand Features of Detroit, which hold territorial rights to the feature in that territory, found it necessary to wire this week for an extra print in addition to those he had originally ordered as sufficient for his use.

Mr. Mundstock, after returning to Detroit from New York, found that bookings were piling up so quickly on this picture that he was unable to get along with his original number of prints.

Arrow Invades Foreign Market

Arrow Film Corporation is making rapid progress in the British motion picture market. A systematic advertising campaign is now underway there. According to Arrow's weekly statement the demand for independent productions has shown a decided increase during the past weeks and the future looks very bright.

Weiss Back February with Important News

Max Weiss, now abroad in the interests of "The Adventures of Tarzan" serial, starring Elmo Lincoln, will return to this country in February at which time important announcements concerning foreign pictures acquired by the Weiss Brothers will be made. Mr. Weiss is at present visiting Germany and France. He is studying film conditions abroad.

Export & Import to State Right Col. Selig's Big Animal Serial

Export and Import Film Company, Inc., which controls the world rights on the new fifteen episode animal-jungle serial, "The Jungle Goddess," has defintely announced this week that this Selig chapter-play will be sold on the independent market.

This decision was made following a careful survey of the State right field and only after a sufficient number of episodes had arrived in New York and passed the inspection of Mr. Ben Blumenthal, president, and L. Auerbach, vice-president of the Export and Import Film Company.

"The Jungle Goddess" has been in production for the last four months at Col. Wm. N. Selig's studios and is now rapidly nearing completion. The concluding episode of the serial is scheduled to be in New York by Feb 1. Colonel Selig is one of the most experienced producers in the motion picture industry. As a producer of wild animal serials he stands in a unque position, having made wild-animal chapter plays, "The Lost City" and "Miracles of the Jungle."

Export and Import Film Company recently contracted for Colonel Selig's entire output for the next three years. "The Jungle Goddess" is the first of Selig's productions under this new contract.

When starting "The Jungle Goddess," Colonel Selig is said to have given carte blanche to go to any means to excel anything, everything which has ever been done in wild animal serials and thereupon placed his entire resources into the production of this serial. In making "The Jungle Goddess", Colonel Selig has the advantage of being able to draw upon the Selig Zoo for Jungle beasts, this being the largest privately owned collection of animals in the world.

James Conway who is directing the serial has at his call a collection of over 470 animals, including tigers, lions, leopards, chimpanzees, giraffees, monkeys, crocodiles, sacred cows and myriad other jungle tribes.

Elinor Field, who is being co-starred with Truman Van Dyke is a star in her own right and has just played the heroine in several Metro pictures. The story for the serial was especially written for the screen by Agnes Johnston and Frank Dazey, who have many successes to their credit.

"Black Panther's Cub" Is Sold to Friedman for Four States

Announcement was made this week by Equity Film Corporation of the purchase of the W. K. Ziegfeld Florence Reed starring feature, "The Black Panther's Cub" for Minnesota, North and South Dakota, and northern Wisconsin, by Ben Friedman of Friedman Film Corporation of Minneapolis. Mr. Friedman intends to exploit the picture on an elaborate scale and is busy arranging a campaign.

Mr. Friedman is particularly enthusiastic over "The Black Panther's Cub," which in addition to Miss Reed includes an all-star cast of distinguished players. He said he was prompted to purchase the feature because of the demand in his territory for big pictures. The picture, he said, is particularly adapted to the so-called small town, for "the smaller town folks devote more time to getting wise to who's who in the theatrical and film field than the city people."

"Give me four pictures like "The Black Panther's Cub,'" said Mr. Friedman, "with big dramatic smashes such as this picture contains and I want nothing better for my territory. This is the kind of picture that gets money for exhibitors for it gives him giant exploitation points and the picture backs him up. I look for big results on this picture."

Second National Announces Films

Announcement was made this week by Second National Pictures Corporation of plans for the early release of several pictures. The first will be "David and Jonathan," a picturization of E. Temple Thurston's novel, starring Madge Titheradge. This production is now ready. Charles E. Davenport arranged the scenario, while Martin Thornton directed under the supervision of Allan B. Carrick. Godfrey Webb and Richard also are in the cast.

The other releases are "The Edge O'Beyond" by Gertrude Page; "The Night Riders" by Zane Grey, and "Mr. Pim Passes By" by A. A. Milne. Other pictures are now in preparation.

National Board Commends "The Four Seasons" to Newspapers

The National Board of Review of Motion Pictures strengthens its aid to the industry by securing as much publicity as possible for all pictures it considers to be of exceptional merit. It sends its news direct to the motion picture theatre patrons thus creating a demand for pictures it deems of value to the public.

In one of its recent stories sent to the newspapers it says:

"For the first time in the history of the publication of 'Exceptional Photoplays', the critical bulletin of the National Board of Review of Motion pictures, a film production lacking the dramatic elements of personal conflict has been reviewed in the Bulletin.

"The film to attain this unique distinction in the final issue of the year of the magazine, is the 'Four Seasons,' by Raymond L. Ditmars, produced under the direction of Charles Urban and released by Kineto, and as is suggested in the title, deals with the various aspects of nature through the cycle of the year.

"And yet, although it lacks all the plot and character elements which are typical of the American Photoplay, it is nevertheless, according to the review, real thrilling drama."

New Hallroom Comedy With Jimmy Adams in New York

The first of the Hall Room Boys Comedies in which Jimmie Adams appears arrived in New York this week from the West Coast producing centre, for release through Federated Exchanges of America, Inc.

The picture has been titled "Nobody's Baby," and is said to be a "baby picture"—the first of a series of special comedies that have been prepared for the purpose of permitting Sid Smith and Jimmie Adams an opportunity to display to the fullest advantage their perfect comedy team-work.

The story of "Nobody's Baby" revolves around a lost baby, for the finding of whom a large reward is offered—a reward which the Hallroom Boys set out to secure. During the course of the action they attempt to return twelve different youngsters to the advertisers of the reward—and word comes from Harry Cohn, the producer, that one of the most difficult details of production of this comedy was the rounding up of twelve youngsters all the same size, build, and coloring, and providing identical clothing for all of them. They were secured, however, and the effects of all these kiddies ranged up is to provide one of the funniest situations that has ever been seen in comedies. Of course when the boys do get hold of the right youngster they don't know it—and try to get rid of him.

Announcement comes that beginning with this first comedy in which Jimmie Adams appears, the Hallroom Boys will be seen in the habiliments that made them famous—the real Hallroom costume—frock coat, high hat, white spats and canes.

Arrow-Ben Wilson's star, Neva Gerber, is completing work on the coast in her latest production, "The Price of Youth."

Exhibitors Enthusiastic Over Russell Feature Is Report

Judging from letters received by Russell Productions, Inc., Chicago, the company's seven-reel American feature, "Shadows of Conscience," promises from the point of booking possibilities, to be one of the biggest investments made by state right operators during the current year.

Pioneer Corporation, which is releasing the picture in the states of New York, Northern New Jersey, Illinois and Indiana, has screened the production for a number of eastern exhibitors, "with the result that there is going forth a unanimity of praise for the feature," states A. E Lefcourt, President of Pioneer Corporation. He further advises:

"Indications point to 'Shadows of Conscience,' setting a new pace in the release of independent productions and we are indeed happy that we procured this photoplay from you. It is just such productions as 'Shadows of Conscience' that make the independent field the favorite one with the exhibitors, and you are to be congratulated on having to your credit a production so worthy and so masterful.

Chicago and the Middle West

Chicago News

"Theodora," the Goldwyn spectacle, which had its premier in Chicago at the La Salle Theatre early in November, has been booked for an indefinite run at Ascher's Roosevelt Theatre, beginning January 1. Simultaneously, it began a run at the Alhambra Theatre in Milwaukee. "Theodora," as a road show, has created a sensation in the middle west, according to Cecil Mayberry, Goldwyn Chicago manager, who returned recently from Kansas City and other points where the picture had been booked and presented at advanced prices.

A. S. Aaronson, vice-president of Goldwyn, is on his way East from California. He stopped in Des Moines, Iowa, December 26, when a special showing of "Theodora" was made to representatives of the A. H. Blank Enterprises. All the managers of that concern were called in to see the subject and to pass on the exhibition possibilities in the territory in which the Blank theatres are operated.

The Chicago Paramount Pep Club, 100 strong, composed of executives and employees in the Paramount Exchange, was the guest of Commandant Wurtzbaugh and his associates at the Great Lakes Naval Station one day during the week. The party was greeted with a turkey dinner with all the trimmings and was entertained after dinner with a number of boxing bouts, between the stars of the navy.

The success of the party was largely due to the efforts of Jack Wolfberg and Herman Bush, of the Paramount office, and Chief Mate Manion, of the Great Lakes Station.

Mr. A. H. Spanuth, president of the Commonwealth Pictures, has declared that his exchange although always busy, will show increased activity after the first of the year. This he says, will be due to a novel international picture which he is offering to State right buyers, a production that he believes compares favorably with the best now on the market.

The Master Advertisers Corporation, of Chicago, has been employed to handle the publicity, and is preparing an advertising campaign for all the trade papers, as well as an elaborate press book for the exhibitors' use. Al Dezel and Joe Fischer of the Master advertisers will also arrange for an effective trade showing for the press in the near future.

George Beban arrived in Chicago last week with the entire cast of players in "The Sign of the Rose" for a four weeks' stay, during which he will make personal appearances at the Chicago, Tivoli, Riveria and Central Park theatres, all of which are operated by Balaban and Katz.

During Christmas week Mr Beban worked in co-operation with the Chicago American in giving away to poor children free tickets to the Chicago Theatre. He also visited the Christmas parties at the Coliseum and distributed roses and candies. He also joined the Goodfellow movement on Christmas to distribute baskets of food to needy families.

A good tie-up between Fox's "Connecticut Yankee" which opened Christmas Day at Wood's Theatre, and the book sections of the Chicago department stores, under the supervision of the veteran publicity man, George K. (Doc) Robinson, has been effected. The Fair, Rothschild's, Boston Store, and Carson Pirie, Scott's all made window displays of the book, while Marshall Field's gave an elaborate display of stills. Ben Garretson and Lee Metcalfe are assisting the publicity work. The film is booked for an indefinite run.

Associated Exhibitors' Film Is Founded on a Tennyson Poem

The big spectacle film, "Lady Godiva," which was recently announced for release through Associated Exhibitors, is founded upon the legend which inspired Lord Alfred Tennyson's poem of the same name. It is declared that the screen version of "Lady Godiva" is perfect in its delineation of eleventh century England, and is distinguished by big and elaborate settings, the entire town of Coventry having been reproduced with historical accuracy. There are, it is said, sweeping mob scenes in which thousands of extras were employed, and gorgeous action such as the coronation scene and the wild revel which preceded the Earl's downfall.

Associated Exhibitors say that every detail of exploitation and exhibitor aid will be in keeping with the bigness and class of the production

SCENE FROM "HUNTING OF THE HAWK," A PATHE RELEASE

News in Brief from Everywhere

Pittsburgh

Pete Demas, of the Minerva Theatre, Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, is planning to expand his theatre holdings, and has already acquired properties in other cities.

He has leased a store room at 1117 and 1119 State street, Erie, Pa., now occupied by the Cadillac agency and close to the Nixon and Princess Theatres, which he will remodel into a 1,000 seat house. Work on the place will be started March 1 and the expectation is to have the theatre ready for opening about the middle of April.

Demas has also signed papers whereby he takes over the Strand Theatre at Brownsville, Pa., on April 1. This is a 700 seat house and is owned by the Wright Brothers.

Mr. Demas also has a large lot in Homewood, at 709-711 Homewood avenue, on which he expects eventually to erect a modern picture theatre. However, the property is improved and the revenue received therefrom may deter the owner from making any heavy investment for the present, at least. When the house goes up, Demas says, it will be a modern theatre in every respect, of 1,000 capacity, and will represent an investment of $150,000.

F. C. Bonnistall, well-known film man, of Pittsburgh, and Frank P. Garber, formerly an exhibitor of Monongahela, Pa., have purchased the franchise of the Synochronized Scenario Music for Ohio and Kentucky and will open an office in Cleveland and later in Cincinnati

Mr. Bonnistall was formerly manager of the Pittsburgh Paramount office, the Pathe Exchange, and recently of the Associated Producers, and is well-known here. Mr. Garber was manager of the Bentley Theatre at Monongahela City for several years.

They both have the best of wishes of a host of friends in their new field of labor.

Charles Schwerin is now manager of the Pittsburgh office of the Wid Gunning Corporation, located for the present in the Seltzer Building, at 1201 Liberty avenue. He arrived in town two weeks ago and is making things hum. Mr. Schwerin is well-known in this territory, having formerly been manager of the local Select office, as well as manager of the First National when it was started here.

One of the beauty spots in the lobby of the Regent Theatre, East Liberty, is the large fish pond. This is a favorite stopping place of the Regent's patrons, and the goldfish come in for a large share of the popularity.

John Donovan, manager, gave us some information about the feeding and care of the fish, which we pass on to you as interesting reading, and which also may prove surprising and beneficial.

There are now 350 goldfish of all sizes in the pond. Three years ago John had 365. He has made no additions since that time, showing that he has lost only 15. One loaf of bread a month feeds the 350 fish. John dries out a loaf to get the gas from it, then crumbles a little of it in his hands twice a week and feeds it to the fish. Very economical, to be sure. Many of the fish are valuable, and as a result are given the best of care.

The new Chester Theatre at Chester, W. Va., will open the first of the year. The house has a seating capacity of 375. The building was formerly a garage. O. S. Watson is the owner and manager. Chester has not had a picture theatre for the last four years, and no doubt the new show house will be a money-maker.

Mike Marks, the old-time showman, is not rushing work on his new Coliseum Theatre at New Castle. Mike says he wants everything done right, and if you push the workmen too hard, it is never done properly. From the looks of the house at the present time, we believe Marks will have a very beautiful theatre. The plans call for 1,500 seats.

Zeitler and Touran, of the Academy Theatre, Meadville, Pa., have had their lobby re-decorated very artistically, and it surely makes a wonderful improvement to the appearance of their house.

RICHARD E BROWN
New manager of the Aldine Theatre, Pittsburgh

Nate Friedberg, head of the Associated Theatres, is again hard at work, after a week's sojourn in a local hospital, where he underwent a minor operation.

Two of Pittsburgh's largest theatres will change ownership and policies on January 2.

They are the Sam S. Shubert and the Duquesne Theatres, which have been traded. Whether or not any cash was involved on either side could not be learned.

The former house was traded by the Shubert Enterprises for the latter, which was controlled by the Felt Brothers, who are owners of the Aldine and Ambassador Theatres in Philadelphia, and also the Aldine and Parkway Theatres at Wilmington, Del.

The Duquesne, which was formerly an exclusive picture house, will hereafter be the home of Shubert vaudeville, on the two-a-day circuit, and will be re-named the Shubert-Duquesne.

The Shubert will be called the Aldine Theatre, and the program at this house will consist of continuous performances of six acts of vaudeville and a feature picture.

Richard E. Brown, resident manager of the Duquesne Theatre, has been retained as an employee by the Felt Brothers, and has been named as manager of the new Aldine.

Announcement is also made by the Shuberts, that the Pitt Theatre, now a legitimate house, will play pictures exclusively, beginning on January 16. The opening attraction will be Griffith's "Orphans of the Storm," which has been booked for an indefinite run. This will be followed, it is said, by Mary Pickford in "Little Lord Fauntleroy."

Baltimore

The Patterson Theatre (colored), 1202 Laurens street, and the dwelling at 1204 Laurens street, will be put up at an attorney's sale at 4 p. m. on Thursday, December 22. This theatre has a seating capacity of 350 persons and the ground rent on the property is $136, annually. This playhouse was managed by Julius Goodman, who operates the Ideal Theatre, for some time. The attorney in the case is Thomas Isekoff and the auctioneers are Joseph J. Baylin & Company.

In the budget which has been submitted to Governor Albert C. Ritchie for his approval, provision is made for employing two additional inspectors for the state censor board. There is only one paid inspector at the present time and if the legislature acts favorably on the budget it will mean that the board will have three. Under the present system there is an emergency inspector who tours the theatres occasionally, and it is claimed that when he made a tour of about fifty houses recently only six convictions resulted from minor violations. It is claimed that this indicates a need of regularly paid "snoopers."

Edward Meyer, head of the visual instruction department of the extension division of the University of California, states that the use of moving pictures for educational work is constantly increasing. During the month of November this department circulated 377 pictures to non-theatrical organizations, such as churches, schools and clubs. Four years ago, he said, there were but fifty schools and churches in California using educational pictures, while today they number more than 700.

Buffalo

Bruce Fowler, manager of the Elmwood Theatre, is holding two special matinees during Christmas week, one on Wednesday, when "The Last of the Mohicans" will be shown, and one of Friday, when "Alice Through the Looking Glass" will be the feature. He is suggesting that patrons buy books of tickets to the Elmwood as Christmas presents. A saving of 50 cents is made on each book, containing ten tickets. A new stage setting has been installed at the Elmwood. Business continues excellent, declares Mr. Fowler.

Special Paintings for "After Midnight"

Saxe's Modjeska Theatre, Milwaukee, sells largely on its front and Manager Frank Sutter went to some pains to sell Select's "After Midnight," knowing that the appeal would reach his particular clientele if he played up the underworld stuff, so he made the lithographs the basis of some special paintings, framing the paper in painted brickwork, broken out to reveal the poses.

Seven of these were made, the central frame, sixes on the corners with threes inside and threes above, in addition to which was a banner. All of the material gave emphasis to the locale of the play and four ones and two threes were used to supplement the special stuff.

It made a large flash, but it brought in the business close to a record, and that was what Mr. Sutter was figuring on.

THE MODJESKA, MILWAUKEE, PAINTED ITS OWN FRONT

Special designs were made for Select's "After Midnight," and the front was very lavishly decorated by Manager Frank Sutter, who knows that the way to get them in is to tell them all about it. Milwaukee likes to be shown—and he did

Tickets to Drivers a New Exploit Idea

It has nothing whatever to do with "Over the Hill," but when the Fox production played at the Mozart Theatre, Elmira, N. Y., Manager Gibson announced that on a certain day tickets would be given the drivers who displayed the greatest care in handling their machines at the city's busiest street intersection.

It was a new angle of the safety first idea, but it was a fine excuse for parking an advertising car in the most desirable location in town for an entire afternoon, for the judge's car was almost solidly posted with paper and signs.

The newspapers lifted the story from the paid advertising and made news stories. and several hundred persons were constantly on hand throughout the afternoon.

The privilege could not have been purchased, but at the cost of a few pairs of seats the stunt was put over.

A private showing, the telegraph and music store hook-ups and a hook in on a newspaper prize contest completed the exploitation scheme.

Still Another Angle

In addition to using most of the standard stunts on Goldwyn's "The Old Nest," E. L. Nesbit, of the Linwood Theatre, Tarkio, Mo., did something different. He devised a special letter designed to bring in those known to be infrequent theatregoers.

Mr. Nesbit figured that this special would help to convert them, and so he made a special drive. He also appealed to physicians, telling them that the old-fashioned country doctor was faithfully and sympathetically portrayed, and he interested the barbers in the various characteristic haircuts of the homecoming characters. He believed that if writing a letter would sell one or two tickets, it would pay him to write, so he looked for special appeals to play up to limited lists.

New Lindlar Lobby Is Framed for "Experience"

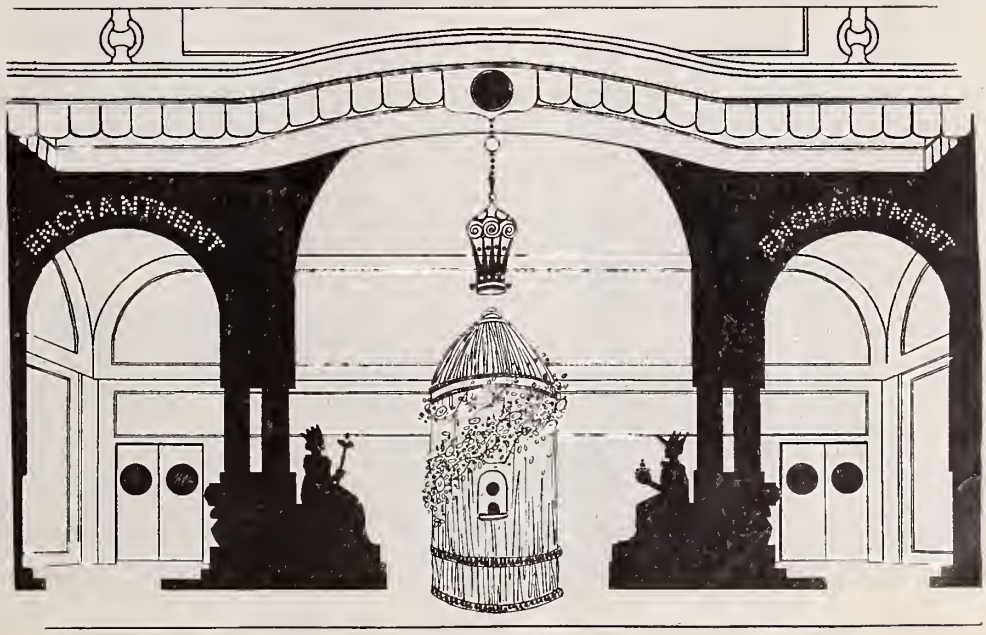
Walter Lindlar, assistant to Claud Saunders, of the Paramount Exploitation Department, has devised a new lobby effect for Marion Davies in "Enchantment." His earlier lobbies on "The Sheik" and the book front for "The Great Impersonation" have done so well that he plans to offer a series of these.

The present lobby is designed to convey the suggestion of the story and is to be built of beaverboard or other material. Perhaps the better plan would be to build the columns of beaverboard, which can be used for other attractions by repainting, and to make the figures of some lighter material, since these will be used but once.

The general effect is that of a silhouette, and to this end the front should be painted a dead black and the lighting largely concentrated within the lobby space, to get the best effect. Later on the pillars can be done over with paint or aluminum and used again and again.

The box office effect is done by pleating gay fabric and then covering with trailing vines. Only one length of the fabric need be cut to provide the ticket aperture. Using plain cloth and spotting it with colored lamps from behind the arches will add to the effect.

The title can be displayed in small electric bulbs or can be perforated and lighted from behind with one or two strong lights.



A LINDLAR LOBBY FOR MARION DAVIES IN "ENCHANTMENT"

The lobby for "The Shiek" devised by Walter Lindlar, of the Paramount exploitation staff, has been so widely used that Mr. Lindlar has promised to devise lobbies for all of the more important subjects. Watch for them here

"Over the Hill" Aided Railroad Over a Slump

George Schade pulled a lot of extra tickets for "Over the Hill," got a lot of special advertising for the house, and it did not cost him a penny. It's odd, but some of the biggest things are the cheapest, and this was one of that sort.

Sandusky is the centre of some interurban lines. Business is at a slump in the winter months and the receipts of the road fall off. Schade booked in the Fox production, "Over the Hill," and the railroad tied-up to this on the excursion stunt, advertising in the newspapers as well as on the cars that a round trip ticket purchased on certain days would include a pass to the Schade.

All passes used were taken up by the railroad company at face value and Schade got all the advertising free.

The combination price is not new, but to persuade the company to pay full price for the tickets is something else. We believe that in many towns this can be worked at least one day each week, and if the town is not too large you can hook the merchants up for co-operative advertising, if you make it a shopping-matinee trip and have the tickets good only on one or two of the morning cars, to get them into town early enough to do their buying.

Hyman's Novelties at the Mark Strand

With an extra long feature, Edward L. Hyman will have to work close at the Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn, the week of January 1. For one time saver he will combine his overture and opening production. The former will be played while a special Lyman Howe greeting is run down and then swing into the opening chorus of "H. M. S. Pinafore" as the sheet is taken up to show the cyclorama with a nautical setting and a poop deck on one side. The numbers selected will be the opening chorus, "I'm Called Little Buttercup," "When I Was a Lad," "Sorry Her Lot," and the finale, "O Joy, O Rapture." The singers will be costumed as in the play, and a surf and cloud effect will be employed to give life to the drop, the singers being spotted in blue from overhead so as not to destroy these effects.

EDW. L. HYMAN

One of the "Adventures of Bob and Bill" will follow and a soprano will sing "I'll Build a Home in the Heart of a Rose" as a concert number. The Topical Review comes next and this in turn is followed by the prologue to the feature.

Like most of the Hyman prologues, it would be a good production number were it not announced as a prologue. The setting will suggest the garden in Peter Ibbetson, with the grown Peter and the duchess, in period dress, at one side of the stage and themselves as children on the other, the children interpreting the song, which will be "Love Is Just a Game" from "Apple Blossoms." A huge apple tree in bloom will be the chief feature of the setting. The lighting will be amber and pink with green and white lights through the branches of the trees.

The feature, "Peter Ibbetson," will follow and this will give place to the Fox Sunshine comedy, "Say It With Flowers." The organ postlude will be Humoresque.

"Way Down East" Exploited to the Limit in Florida

Everybody got behind Manager W. J. Melvin, of the Plaza Theatre, St. Petersburg, Florida, and put over "Way Down East" to the largest business ever done in St. Petersburg with a picture.

The exploitation was simple, but persistent. It included dated lithographs in windows, 1,500 doorknobs, with rubber bands instead of strings, so they could be attached to steering wheels as well as doorknobs; a prologue, a banner, a perambulator and megaphoned announcements from an automobile the Saturday night before the opening. Drug store soda fountains were painted with water color signs and the newspaper work was started a week in advance, never rising beyond a modest two columns.

For the doorknobs Mr. Melvin used the two column pumpkin mat, printing in the title, house and date.

Special Exploitation Offset Lack of Boards

The Sun Theatre, Fairbault, Minn., cannot use paper as the opposition has snapped up all the available boards. It was felt this would be something of a handicap in putting over "Over the Hill" but in a way it proved to be good fortune, for it increased the intensity of the exploitation.

A Fox publicity man was called in, and his first step was to tie up the newspaper to the "Famous Women" contest by contracting for 400 inches of paid advertising space.

A circular letter, under one cent postage, was sent to a rural list of 3,000 names at a cost of only $40. This was signed by William Fox instead of the local management. About half the stores were tied up to window showings, and the special pre-showing was played up in that 400 inch contract with liners in which various local comments were run with emphasis on the name of the person uttering the sentiment. This also pleased the persons mentioned and leaves them ready to say even nicer things next time to ensure seeing their names in print.

Like the Stars

In New England the newspapers have been hitched up to an identification contest for "The Affairs of Anatol." In the West, the American Theatre, Bellingham, Wash., hitched the local paper to a two weeks' contest for the girl who most nearly resembled one of the four women stars in the Paramount production and only three girls stayed out of the contest, one of whom had a hare lip.

The rest all thought they looked like Gloria Swanson, Agnes Ayres, Bebe Daniels or Wanda Hawley. The top prize went to Nina Ogreen, who looked more like Wanda Hawley, but there were a lot of small prizes to make things interesting. It brought bales of publicity to the theatre and newspaper alike and was good for the circulation, both places.

It was devised by Paul E. Noble, of the Liberty Theatre, Portland, Ore. The side panels show the details of the corners. On the right are shown the kennels facing the lobby, which do not show up in the picture. On the left are the street angles of the same design. The dog heads are about twice life size. Note the hook-up made to the Saturday Evening Post on the inside cards

A CYCLORAMIC PICTURE OF THE GRAND CANYON
Used by Frank A. Lacey, of the Majestic Theatre, Portland, Ore., to put over Harry Carey in "The Fox," the debut of this Universal star at the Majestic, and therefore calling for a little extra effort

Western Cyclorama Color for "The Fox"

Because this was the first Harry Carey picture to play the theatre, Frank A. Lacey, of the Majestic Theatre, Portland, Ore., went to some trouble to put over Universal's "The Fox."

He had a painting of the Grand Canon of Arizona made to fit the side and back of his corner lobby, and shot into the space from the opposite side from his usual viewpoint.

In front of the building line is a rock effect which works down at the side and on the corner post, the latter containing a letter from the star telling how good the picture was.

Amber lighting throughout the lobby kept the colors of the cyke at their proper illumination, and enhanced the effect. Unlike most of the Lacey lobbies, this painting extended across the entrance side, the doors being cut through.

It sufficed to bring the crowds to see the picture and now Carey is a regular Majestic star.

Figures from Stills Made a Window Show

Expense is not the determining factor in the value of a window display. John D. Howard, the Paramounteer in Albany, got a fine window in Albany for the run of "The Sheik" at the Leland Theatre, and it cost very little in money.

The backing on one side was a kneeling camel, though a desert scene could have been achieved at small expense. In front of this was a desert of fine sand strewn upon the floor, with a tiny tent in striped fabric not unlike the desert tents. On one side was an insert card, and between was an open copy of the book with "Read the book and see the play" above the frame of black velvet which set off the book and isolated it from the rest of the display. The desert was peopled by cutouts from the stills; the Sheik and the girl, and a horseman in the distance.

Down front, in easy reading distance from the glass, one copy of the book was opened at the "hottest" page.

The theatre rode on the special card, the lower part of which can be seen near the upper right hand corner of the cut.

Sometimes a "thank you" or "good evening" does more good than a 24-sheet—and costs less.

Time Limit Chariot Race Was Big Detroit Novelty

Because the Fort Washington Theatre, Detroit, was able to hire a couple of chariot racers to boom the Fox production of "The Queen of Sheba," the management applied to the police authorities for permission to pull off a chariot race and the chief gave permission on condition that the speed limits be not exceeded.

That made it sound like a rather flat event, but the drivers were good jockeys and the horses looked as though they were beating the taxicabs, which gave Detroit a real thrill. It was a clean-up stunt for the picture.

The real money maker was the second week stunt. Pictures were made each day of the audiences entering the theatre and each day's work was shown the following day on the screen. This brought in an incredibly large number of persons on a second trip and some even came a third time to see the second filming.

The preview was employed and the theatre horned in on the present prevalent gift distribution scheme the newspapers are employing by getting the scheme promoters to announce that Betty Blythe was drawing the lucky numbers in Los Angeles the two weeks the picture ran.

It was all good stuff because it was all converted into cash at the box office windows.

Making Lobby Lanterns

Oscar White, of the Rex Theatre, Sumter, S. C., used four window cards for lobby lanterns. With a safety razor blade—the kind with a stiff back—he cut out the lettering, pasted colored tissue on the back and formed four of them into a lantern, which was hung over one of the lobby lights. Set with a flasher socket, this will work well for window displays, and is applicable to all attractions, though Mr. White used it for "The Three Musketeers." Another odd stunt was using the "All for one" pose from the big paper for a lobby center, supplying the musketeers with tin swords, which flashed very realistically.

A PILE OF SAND, A BIT OF CLOTH AND CUT STILLS
That's all John D. Howard, Albany Paramounteer, needed to get this effective window display in a leading book-store when "The Sheik" was played at the Leland Theatre. It is cheap, but it is more than usually striking

Southern Managers Make a Cleanup on "The Sheik" Through Good Exploitation

FROM all accounts "The Sheik" did as much business in the territory of Southern Enterprises as any special sent down there this season, and it was done at comparatively little expense because the picture so readily lent itself to exploitation, permitting the title to be put over, with the reputation of the book to back this up. It was not a difficult picture to sell. The only essential was to let the people know that it was coming.

One interesting feature of the campaigns is the almost general use of the Walter Lindlar lobby designed for this play, which was put into employment at the Howard, in Atlanta, and widely copied over the circuit.

Some of the managers adapted the entire front and others merely made a marquee over the box office, but most of them were quick to sense the display value of the striped material used for the tent.

Pleased in Florida

The Casino Theatre, Lakeland, Florida, built a very elaborate lobby at a cost of only $21. The cloth was orange and red and the interior of the lobby and the box office were draped as well as the front, making a wonderful splash of color.

Manager B. B. Gaines used cutouts from the threes and sixes to give life to the display, setting them about the lobby on the floor. He ran business 25 per cent. over the top and would have done better but for a heavy rain the second day. In addition to the lobby he used a book-store hook-up with a cutout of Valentino.

Had a Rider, Too

H. C. Farley, of the Empire Theatre, Montgomery, Ala., built an even better tent over his box office, employing the same cutout idea. He got a better box office than did Mr. Gaines, and a cut gives the details of this. There is something more attractive to the idea of going inside the tent than in going up to it. It was this which gave the Back Door lobby such a kick. People wanted to walk into the scene, just as they wanted to walk into that tent.

Mr. Farley also had a street rider, borrowing a horse from a circus wintering in the town. The horse cost a few passes, but he paid the rider $6 a day. He played to strong business in spite of unusual counter attractions.

Trusted to Camels

H. B. Clarke, of the Rialto Theatre, Macon, Ga., used a couple of camels as perambulators on a four-day run and all the stunt cost was $2, for he borrowed the beasts from Sparks' Circus in return for a few passes. The money went to the camel tender. This is a stunt closed to the average exhibitor, for few cities have circuses in winter quarters, but it worked splendidly. There was a Shrine session on and he got into the parade. The beauty of a Shrine session is that the streets are lined for the parade. Then the Shriners go into their mosque for a session and the crowd is left hung up. It is not like a street fair or circus, which holds the crowd. The procession is all the public is allowed.

Mr. Crute also effected a hook-up with a book store and had a black and white tent lobby with a 24-sheet cutout.

Had Two Perambulators

C. B. Crute, of the Lyric Theatre, Huntsville, Ala., was on tiptoe for this Paramount, and had two perambulators about the size of a 24-sheet board. The first of these announced that 112,625 persons had seen "The Sheik" in New York in one week. This was circulated before the showing, then it was set down in an advantageous location and another put on the wagon with "See 'The Sheik,' Lyric, today," with the star and crescent splattered around. This was preceeded by an outrider in Arab dress mounted upon a fine horse.

He used the striped cloth lobby and set in a store dummy dressed as an Arab.

Set in Three

W. E. Drumbar, of the Riviera Theatre, Knoxville, planned his display as a stage setting, his scene working in three grooves. The photograph, unfortunately, will not reproduce. The entrance was set to give a tent exterior with the second and third rows suggestive of the interior of this tent, with rich looking lanterns. Arches in two gave upon the final backing in three and produced an effect of depth which added not a little to the beauty of the setting. It was a production moved into the lobby, yet it cost only $44.32.

He also used the book store hook-up, the perambulator and the street trash cans, already shown in connection with other pictures.

Used Ticking

The Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., used ticking for the tent effect, being unable to obtain any other material. It worked very well when built up with palms and paintings, but the big seller was an advance showing to the newspaper men a week before the opening.

R. B. ("Jack") Frost, of the Tampa Theatres, used the paintings, supplied by Paramount, in four locations, but says that the Paramount trailer on this subject did more selling than usual. Most of his campaign was newspaper work, but he broke the records he had worked so hard to hang up earlier in the season.

Made a Desert

G. M. Phillips, of the Strand Theatre, Birmingham, made a private desert, laying down plenty of sand in the lobby and backing this up with a painting which ran around the three sides of the lobby. A painting of Miss Ayres, writing in the stand, worked in very nicely with this, and added to the effect. It cost $60, but it offset a drive week at another house. He also used a banner on the main business block.

S. M. Wallace, of the Imperial, Columbia, S. C., could find no copies of the book in town, so was forced to abandon the idea of a book tie-up, but he landed six paintings in store windows, and put plenty of local color into the house, dressing his ushers as Arabs and presenting a dance prologue. He wrote his own music cues, and the playing of the picture brought out many inquiries from patrons as to the compositions. As this was a four-day run, the prologue and presentation should be counted as a part of the exploitation.

In Jacksonville

Jacksonville also reports that the trailer produced exceptional results. This Phil Gersdorf ran at the sister houses as well as at the Arcade, and he speaks very highly of the excellence of the work. He overshot on his book hook-up in one sense. He sold all the copies in town before the play came along.

This was his best performance. He added a line to his heralds to the effect that the book might be obtained at Drew's, and these were wrapped in every package that store sent out, and Drew's does an enormous business. The books were all gone before they could come up to the window showing, but the grateful Drew put in the paintings, and the books worked harder out of the window than they would have back of the glass.

Two riders were dressed in some bunting Gersdorf had left over from a house decoration for a Shrine celebration. He remarks that the red, yellow and green were rather vivid, and does not seem to know that the colors are the proper ones to use. He hired two white horses which really looked like Arabs. One of them was permitted to ride around the field at the big football game of the season.

Special music and a production helped to put the show over to an unusual business.

The summing up of the various reports seems to show that most of the managers held to the Paramount aids, the Sheik lobby and the trailer, building on these as the peculiar angles of the town seemed to require, but it is unusual to find nine out of ten of them using the plan book lobby, although nothing better or flashier could well be devised. "The Sheik" has more than held up its end in the Southern territory.

BORROWED FROM A CIRCUS TO SELL HIS ATTRACTION

C. A. Crute, of the Rialto Theatre, Macon, Ga., borrowed these camels from a circus and played to more business than any other attraction this season. He even horned in on a Shrine parade, which made for business

A Useful Teaser Set

Manager Challis, of the Wysor Grand Theatre, Muncie, Ind., has worked out a set of good teaser postals for "Over the Hill." They were spaced two days apart and in their order read:

A wise man once said "There is always good to be found in the worst of us but—"

The said wise man was not the only one to give forth that thought, for Will Carleton most beautifully exemplified that saying when—

He wrote his "Farm Ballads" which contained that immortal poem "Over the Hill" and now—

A pictured version of Will Carleton's intensely human story of a mother's love,, "Over the Hill," will be presented by William Fox at the Wysor Grand, starting tomorrow.

It would cut costs and make the teasers snappier to eliminate the third card, change the second to eliminate Carleton's name and merely say "a poet," making the fourth card read:

Will Carleton wrote "Over the Hill to the Poor House," which has achieved immortality as one of the greatest tributes to mother love in the English language. William Fox has made a wonderful picture from the poem and it will be shown, etc.

It is seldom wise to use more than a three card teaser. Two are better, one to tease and the other to break the news.

Threw Away an Opinion

Because he knew that the district attorney had seen "The Old Nest" when it played Atlanta, C. J. Ross, of the Strand Theatre, Madison, Ga., persuaded him to write out an opinion of the picture, which he put on a throwaway, from which it may be inferred that the lawyer liked the Goldwyn production. He did. The opening paragraph read:

"The cry has gone up from the public at large for worth-while pictures. 'The Old Nest' answers that cry. It gives the public something it has been waiting for since the birth of motion pictures." He could not come much stronger than that, and it helped business wonderfully—more than anything Mr. Ross could have said.

Combined Two Loans for One Lobby Stunt

Nowadays a picture manager has to be a better borrower than a property man for a stock company.

For Hodkinson's "The Mysterious Rider," John B. Carroll, of the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., doubled up.

Got Horse and Rides

From a harness shop he borrowed the wooden horse used by the store to display its wares. Then he borrowed a dummy from a clothing store along with the appropriate dressing, mounted the dummy on the horse, put it a little back in the lobby and got a fine attractor. The fact that the dummy was masked helped a lot in getting realism, for it took away the awful waxen stare. The rider looked almost as natural as the horse, and the horse was an exceptionally good one.

Mixed Throwaway Talk

Possibly the presence of the Disarmament Conference in Washington was responsible for the break into foreign tongues recently made by E. J. Stutz, of Loew's Columbia Theatre, Washington. At any rate his heralds on a new Paramount read:

Digala lo que deba
or
Le dica cio' che deva
or
Detes lui ce que vous devez but
"Don't Tell Everything"
A Paramount Picture

If the printer sets that right it means "Tell her what you must" in Spanish, Italian and French. Where there is a large Jewish clientele, it might pay to have it in Yiddish, too.

HERE IS A GOOD BOX-OFFICE DESIGN FOR "THE SHEIK"

It was done by H. C. Farley, of the Empire Theatre, Montgomery, Ala. He also used a street rider, and borrowed the Arabian steed from a circus in winter quarters. It built up a large business with a number of repeat patrons

Tied Up to a Washer for "No Woman Knows"

"No woman knows Monday comfort" unless she uses a particular brand of washing machine was the appeal which got a big window for the Universal attraction when it played Powers Theatre, Grand Rapids.

The theatre was permitted to supply the arch and was given the largest lettering in order to attract attention to the machine. The machine itself could stand in the window until it was covered with dust without attracting more than passing notice, but giving it a theatrical tie-up put it over for the crowds and the sidewalk space was well occupied all day, with the result that the handlers are looking around for another hook-up, finding that it stimulates their sales. It helped dispose of the tickets, too, so both parties to the contract are well content.

The Log Cabin Front Reaches Main Street

The only difference between New York and Hoggs Corners is that one is larger than the other. Both have the same sort of people and they will respond to the same general appeal.

Most of the "Broadway" houses in New York do not exploit because they feel it will hurt their dignity, but B. S. Moss would rather have the money, and he is using the same sort of front you will find in the tank towns for his Broadway Theatre, just one block below the heart of the United States.

A couple of weeks ago he had the Hampton-Hodkinson Zane Grey story, "The Mysterious Rider" and he built the same sort of box office you can find in the smaller places, and it brought him precisely the same relative jump in business.

It was not even as elaborate as many, for it was straight painted canvas, with no effort to more than suggest the logs, but it took hold in the same way, and put the picture over to a good week.

The Broadway uses vaudeville, but it makes the film the real feature and specializes on this each week, this being one of the most pretentious displays. If Broadway can make money with it, you can, can't you? Surely!

NICE, CLEAN ADVERTISING FOR "NO WOMAN KNOWS"

This is not a lobby front but the show window of a Grand Rapids store for the Universal picture when it played there at Powers Theatre. Stills and cutouts help to decorate the arch and give color to the display

LOG CABIN BOX OFFICE HAS REACHED BROADWAY

B. S. Moss' Broadway Theatre is doing the same exploitation stuff the small town manager is doing and finds that "smart" Broadway will fall just as hard. This was used on the Hodkinson release, "The Mysterious Rider"

Setting Sideways was Helpful to a Hook-up

Johnny Walker (we've heard that name somewhere before), of the Barcli Theatre, Schenectady, has been using so many hook-ups that they were going a bit stale, and he figured he needed something to put a kick into the stunt.

He found it very simply. He set the stuff in sideways, and even the case-hardened reader stopped to look, and if he looked, he at least had to catch "The Great Moment," but most of them read on.

HOW THE PAGES LOOKED

It's a simple trick, but it saved the day for a good Paramount hook-up and a lot of people who claim they never read advertisements read this one clear through because they had a fresh appeal.

Some advertisers achieve the same result by setting their space in upside down, but it is easier to turn the paper one quarter around than half way, so this is to be preferred.

No two men handle their exploitation precisely alike. Watch what the other fellow does and gain variety in your own work. That is what these pages are for—to be used, not just read.

HOW A THIRD RUN HOUSE PUT OVER "THE OLD NEST"

The Capitol, Los Angeles, figured that the Angelians had not all seen the Goldwyn picture, so it tagged the first and second runs and cleaned up at 11 and 17 cents to a prosperous week with heavy exploitation

It's a Third Run House With a First Run Style

Gore's Capitol Theatre, Los Angeles, is a third-run house, but it was felt that with all the fuss made about the first and second runs there should still be a chance on a third run, and the mother-play moved in for a week, riding on the previous exploitation.

The Capitol has a large lobby and believes in plenty of paper. A six and a three for the Goldwyn play were flanked by a three for the comedy and three sheets, stills and insert cards were used plentifully all the way down the lobby.

It made a better paper display than the earlier houses, and that was all it had to do, for the story had been sold on the earlier runs and all the Capitol had to do was hold the bag.

"Queen of Sheba" Helps the Marine Recruiting

Hooking-up to the recruiting service is not yet a thing of the past. The Marine Corps is still after recruits and they are still willing to give the theatre its share for anything to get attention to the recruiting idea.

Down in Baltimore the New Theatre had Fox's "The Queen of Sheba," and wanted to put it over to the limit. It persuaded a local actress to dress in about ten times as much clothing as Betty Blythe wears and drive around town with a recruiting sergeant in a torpedo shaped car. Back of the seats was the large sign shown in the cut, all of which went to the theatre, but the "Join the Marines" was lettered across the windshield.

The theatre copy was: "'The Queen of Sheba' came from a distant land bringing gifts to King Solomon. She comes now to show you many of the historical places of the world. You will be showing the wisdom of Solomon if you see her at the New Theatre."

Better copy would have read: "'The Queen of Sheba' is visiting at the New Theatre all this week, giving a glorious picture of her wonderful country. If you want to return her visit, see 'The Queen of Sheba' at the New Theatre now and then join the Marines and visit her in her native land."

Something New

J. T. Bowser, of the Lyric and Plaza theatres, Sheffield, Ala., worked a new one. He had "The Kid" and worked the usual boy parade, but he marched them out to the ball park, paying for the privilege with screen advertising, which also enabled him to have a Charlie Chaplin to take tickets at each gate to the ball park. The ball season is almost over, but it is a good stunt to remember.

Buckingham's Diamond Was a Window Exhibit

The Grand Opera House, London, Ont., hooked in a jeweler on a window for "The Three Musketeers" when Fairbanks came to that Canadian city. The store was known to possess a diamond valued at $37,000, and this was placed in a casket and labeled, "This is the diamond the Duke of Buckingham gave to Anne of Austria in 'The Three Musketeers.'"

In a furniture store was a display of a period set supposed to be the sort they had when Louis XIII was ruler, and a drug store expressed a belief that the musketeers would still be alive had they used certain patented preparations.

"JOIN THE MARINES," PLEADS "THE QUEEN OF SHEBA"

The New Theatre, Baltimore, hooked in on the Marine Recruiting Service by supplying a real live queen as an attractor for the Navy car, and the recruits agreed that she was "Some Jueen" as they signed on the dotted line. It helped the Fox feature, too

Had Mark Twain Week for the Fox Comedy

Persuading the mayor to proclaim a Mark Twain week was one of the simplest things James Rourke did to put over "A Connecticut Yankee" at the Empire Theatre, Bridgeport. It was not altogether simple, at that, for Rourke had to get the Chamber of Commerce to back him in his efforts and sell the idea to them first.

What helped was the fact that Hartford claims the humorist as her own and the entire state feels a proprietary pride in him. It was a holiday week in the schools, so the mayor issued the necessary proclamation.

As soon as that was done and the newspapers had put the announcement over, Rourke told that he would contribute to the celebration by booking in the Fox production. That was the first intimation that he had the picture booked, and it looked as though Rourke were merely trailing popular opinion and not creating it.

Donation to Library

That was good for a paragraph in the papers, and before that got cold, the manager donated ten copies of the story to the public library because those already in stock were being overworked. The papers always record donations to the library, so they used that.

For the ballyhoo Rourke used three knights in full armor to ride the streets in procession, each with a card announcing that "Here's one of the Jazz Knights in Mark Twain's 'A Connecticut Yankee,' Empire, next week." This supplemented a net banner in four lines used on the principal street "because it was Mark Twain week."

Then the papers printed in the want ads five names selected at random from the city directory, each lucky person getting a ticket, and a 12 by 18 inch proclamation in red and black on buff paper was sent to 2,000 names on the mailing list.

KNIGHTS IN ARMOR MANOEUVERED MOTORCYCLES

It was part of the intensive campaign used by Manager James Rourke to put over the Fox production of "A Connecticut Yankee at King Arthur's Court" as a supposed adjunct to a self-created "Mark Twain Week"

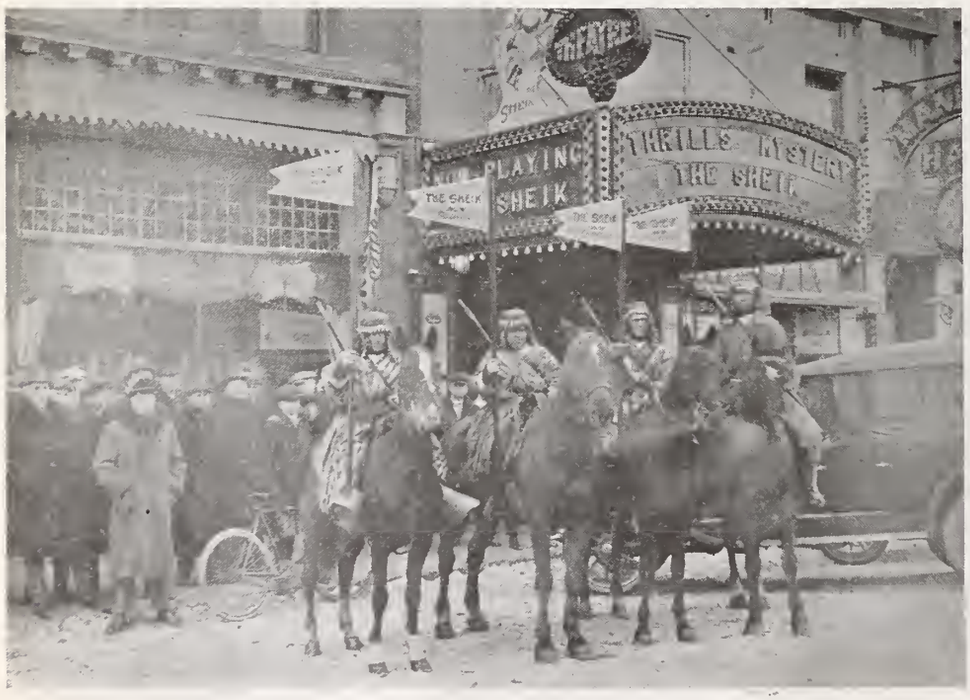
Worked Four Horsemen for "Sheik" Engagement

Having read that the horseman exploit was working well for "The Sheik," Jack Prescott, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Winnipeg, decided to try the effect of four riders. He dug out four pretty fair horses to pose as the Arab steeds, but the Arabs were not a bit like the real thing.

That did not worry Prescott in the least. The stunt was written up and pictured in the newspapers and it helped crowd them into the theatre, and so long as it got him the business, the men might have looked like Chinamen for all he cared. He did not even stop to think that it might be good advertising for "The Four Horsemen," for that production was not in sight.

One thing he proved to his satisfaction. The mass effect of four riders is better than one, and more than four times better, at that.

The riders were dressed in red and white striped material, which the Paramount press agent says "is common to awning makers and the Mystic Shrine." That is all one piece with his seventeen foot golems which are nine feet high. The Shrine colors are red, yellow and green.



THESE "ARABIAN" HORSEMEN LOOK LIKE PIUTES

But that does not matter, since they brought business to the Capitol Theatre, Winnipeg, when Jack Prescott exploited "The Sheik." They looked more like Indians than Arabs, but the Peg doesn't know any different, and the papers wrote up the stunt

Good Newspaper Angle Found for "The Sheik"

Boise, Idaho, seems to have found the newspaper contest angle for "The Sheik."

The Pinney Theatre tied up the Capital-News to a contest on the question of whether women love masterful men. Ten dollars in cash was offered for the best 100-word story with a box party as the second best bet. It made great reading for the public and it got a lot of discussion apart from the newspaper publicity, so it worked double time.

If you can get a topic that will serve as conversation, you increase the value of your advertising. People read about "My great moment" or "My most exciting experience," but they talk about cave man love, and you get on the front page and at the dinner tables, too.

Start it off with a couple of heart-revelation letters to give the others courage, and you can bring out some amazing letters along these lines.

Improves with Age

The Century Theatre, Baltimore, used the bag stunt on four pictures hand running, "The Affairs of Anatol," "Experience," "The Sheik" and "Ladies Must Live," and reports that the cumulative effect makes the stunt better the longer it runs.

The Century gives a variation, however, in that the bags are given the furnishing stores and the women's shops, for the enclosure of small purchases. It reaches a better class of trade than the usual grocery store bags. It takes the bag out of the kitchen and puts it into the hands of more likely prospects.

PICTORIAL WINDOW PLEASED THE BANK OFFICIALS

They might not have let in a card, but "Little Lord Fauntleroy" in the wax, if not in the flesh, was something else; so Ascher's Merrill Theatre, Milwaukee, got a window of real value for the second time in a few weeks

Plan Book Ballyhoo Worked in South

Plan book stunts are sometimes something to shoot rocks at, but the Goldwyn books are proving helpful to the exhibitor. The bridal auto for "Dangerous Curve Ahead" has been widely copied in all sections of the country and here is another stunt from the same book.

HOW IT REALLY LOOKS

This adaptation was worked by C. A. Crute, of the Lyric Theatre, Huntsville, Ala., and might be called the post-bridal car stunt. An ordinary baby perambulator was tricked out with a headlight and a horn and a man in evening dress trundled it about the streets for two days, bringing an increase of about 15 per cent. in the business.

Tied Up Bank Window to "Little Lord Fauntleroy"

About the best test of a stunt is the come-back. If the merchant will take in a second display, it is a pretty certain sign that he was pleased with the first.

Lately Ascher's Merrill Theatre, Milwaukee, tied up the First Wisconsin Trust Co. to a window display for Fairbanks in "The Three Musketeers." They wanted to come back for Mary Pickford in "Litle Lord Fauntleroy." This time the hook-up was not so direct, but the display promised to gain attention and the bank let it in.

Just Two Cards

The only advertising is two cards which do not show in the illustration, but which are placed close to the glass just in front of the dog. One is for the play and the other for the savings department of the bank, and it worked as well as the other in spite of the less direct application.

The house painted the scenery and borrowed the clothes and dummy from one store and the Victor dog from another.

The exploitation man also got a good window in a drug store with a cutout set within a frame and backed by fabric. This was made the center of a display of hand mirrors and puff boxes, and made a strong bid to the women.

Another Old Timer

The ten dollar raise stunt is still working for "The Ten Dollar Raise." It will be remembered that it has Los Angeles stirred to its foundations. Now it is working through the Southern Enterprises, being started off by A. L. Snell, of the Imperial Theatre, Gadsden.

Mr. Snell arranged with a large department store to give one clerk a "ten dollar raise" for one week only, the clerk to be selected by means of letters written by the patrons.

Miss Lotta Noah was awarded the prize on the strength of a letter written by a minister, but there came in another letter from the car works making it so plain that Velma Hazen was elected by the trade union, that as a matter of policy the second award was made, for the car works' crowd were closer to the opposition house, and Mr. Snell wanted their trade, and counted it cheap at ten dollars.

Put "Anatol" Display with News Bulletins

One of the by-products of a newspaper hook-up is the chance the exhibitor gets to use the paper for other stunts. The Union-Leader, Manchester, N. H., was one of the sixty odd New England papers to hook to the Paramount Identification Contest, recently reported in these columns.

Just for that it permitted Al Couture to put in a window display for "The Affairs of Anatol" at the Paramount-Crown Theatre. As the window was used for news bulletins, and since the football season was then at its height, the value of the location can be understood. It was the livest window in town on Saturday afternoon, and good all of the week.

But you do not have to wait to hook to a contest to get into the good graces of the newspaper. If you put some attractive stills on your cards, you will find that the average live newspaper will always be glad to oblige a generous advertiser, particularly since it also helps the window.

HORNING IN A THEATRE DISPLAY ON NEWS BULLETINS

The Manchester, N. H., News-Leader was one of the papers to take up the Paramount identification contest, so it let in a card for "The Affairs of Anatol" into the window with the constantly changing news bulletins

Green Lighted Lobby for "The Lure of Jade"

All green lights were used in the lobby of the Majestic Theatre, Memphis, for the run of Pauline Frederick in "Lure of Jade," and with similar draped walls and a thatched box office, with cutouts from the paper at the corners of the opening, a very good tropical effect was obtained by Manager J. S. Hursey.

The banner had the letters cut out, with green tissue pasted behind the openings and lighted from behind by green lights, which served to help light the rest of the lobby.

Mr. Hursey made his thatch on beaverboard instead of the regular thatch, which should have been easier as well as cheaper, though it might have taken more material, but he worked a very inviting lobby that lured business and he did it at a cost of only $20.

Captured the College by Inviting the Team

College towns are all for the college, and the Strand Theatre, Iowa City, put over "Over the Hill" by the simple expedient of inviting the football team to attend the opening night show. The college paper gave publicity to the fact that the team had accepted the invitation and all of the college and most of the town people tried to get into the Strand at the same time. It couldn't be done, but those who had to wait took in the second show or came back the next night.

There had been a special private view for the college faculty and the ministers and school teachers, but all of the educators, plus the divines could not put it over to the students the way a big winning team did.

Football is over, but there are basketball and hockey teams, and later will come the baseball and rowing season.

LIGHTS OF GREEN FOR "LURE OF JADE" WORKED

J. S. Hursey, of the Majestic Theatre, Memphis, used green lights and tropical props to put over Pauline Frederick in the Robertson-Cole production, and it built a sizeable addition to the average business

Made His Sales

Just how well exploitation pays was recently proven by W. P. Stevenson, who is supposed to sell the Arizona district out of the Goldwyn Los Angeles office.

Arizona is in a bad slump and it looked like a waste of carfare going after the territory with "The Old Nest" and "Dangerous Curve Ahead," but Pat knows the game, though he is now a salesman instead of an exploiteer.

He knew about what each exhibitor would be willing to pay for the two features and he offered to play on this certainty plus a percentage, engaging to help exploit the picture.

He kept his word and so far the receipts from Arizona have mostly been in excess of what the flat rentals would have brought in normal times. Exploitation does pay. The houses made the extra money and also revived the theatregoing habit.

Tickled the Mayor

For "Three Word Brand," A. L. Snell, of the Imperial Theatre, Gadsden, Ala., used a hundred cards reading, "Go to hell," "You're a liar" and other three-word phrases less violent, with "At the Imperial Thursday and Friday" in small lettering at the bottom.

The mayor was so tickled with the idea that he put one of the "Go to hell" cards over his desk in the police station in City Hall, where it probably did a lot to cheer up the accused who came before His Honor.

Tableau in Lobby Cost Three Dollars

F. J. Miller, manager of theatres for Southern Enterprises in Augusta, Ga., got a big flash on Realart's "Morals" at a cost of only three dollars, for most of the material used in the big flash were either old stock or borrowed.

The play, which is based upon "The Morals of Marcus" has some harem scenes, and one of these is illustrated in the poster. This pose of May McAvoy was cut out and placed upon a rich divan, set into a cabinet, lined sides, back and top with blue plush from some old house decoration. There were two lamps, with globes dipped blue, and innumerable cushions and a rich oriental rug.

The front was faced with blue scrim to enhance the illusion and during the day one had to come rather close in to see what it was, but most persons changed their course to get an eyeful and the result was merely to enhance the value of the display.

The lobby was lighted throughout in blue to match this display, and made an inviting appearance. The special display was of particular value as the opposite side of the street had been destroyed by fire a few days before and people were still coming to see the ruins. After they had looked they were pulled across the street by this tableau and either went in or came back later with others.

CUTOUT RESTED ON A REAL DIVAN IN AUGUSTA

Most of the material was borrowed and the Rialto Theatre, Augusta, Ga., had one of the best displays of the season at a cost so small that it scarcely figured in the account. It sold a lot of tickets, for it looked interesting

Kid Sized Locomotive Beats Out Toy Trains

Toy railway systems have worked well for "The Iron Trail," but Frank Lacey, of the Majestic Theatre, Portland, Ore., has that beaten off the boards. When he played the Bennett-United Artists' feature, he decorated the side of his corner lobby with an Alaskan scene with a railroad bridge and tunnel, and just clearing the mouth of the tunnel was one of the diminutive locomotives used in amusement parks. It was something so different from the usual that it attracted all sorts of attention.

Lacey is a genius at lobby display, and he reaches some unusual effects. He has one advantage in that he is located on a corner with one long unbroken side wall, which permits the use of a painting without having to allow for doors, but he would do things if he had only a ten foot opening, for he is that sort of an exhibitor.

After you have admired the engine, take a look at the front display and note how the banner is painted on a girder and the enclosure of the corner post is also in simulation of structural ironwork, to match the theme of the play. He looks after the little things as well as the great to get harmonious displays.

LACEY HAD A REAL ENGINE FOR "THE IRON TRAIL"

The Portland master of lobby display got out an unusual lobby for this Bennett-United Artists' production, with a real engine small enough to be carried in a shawl-strap working into the painted background of an Alaskan scene

Personal Notification Comes to Fore Once More

Harry Goldberg, R-C exchange manager at Pittsburgh, booked Pauline Frederick in "The Lure of Jade" day and date at the Blackstone and East Liberty Cameraphone, and then called Eddie Carrier, R-C publicity man, in to put over the joint engagement.

Carrier used the laundry cards for the Cameraphone and for the Blackstone he used the personal notification, in which children are given a free admission when they return to the house a circular signed by ten different persons to the effect that they had been told that the Blackstone would have the picture.

Both stunts are old, but both are good, and it's about time to try the personal notification if you have never used it.

The laundry card was out in the packages with the reverse showing on which was printed, "Do not turn this card over," with the result that everyone promptly did.

Two Good Examples from Crandall's, Washington

Nelson B. Bell, of the Crandall theatres, Washington, sends in some recent examples, including a very good display for Chaplin in "The Idle Class," remarking that he was as wordy as it seemed necessary to be for a star who sells himself. The printer is still sticking fists all over Bell's spaces, from which we gather that Bell must like them. We don't. We think that the black detracts from the value of the line. Outside of this the space is attractive and well balanced; better proportioned than most of the recent Crandall spaces, for Bell is dropping down the column to put over the orchestra, which is good advertising, though it does not make for appearance. At the same time he cannot go across another column and shorten the space, for he has to go down to get in all he wants to say. This is 155 lines across four, and it looks better than some of his deeper displays. But this is not saying that he is wrong in dipping deep, for with what he is trying to get over he has to drop down. The Chaplin cuts he had made, as none of the stock cuts were just what he wanted, but the title is a mat and works in nicely. He does not tell a lot about the play because he knows that he does not have to and that the white space will sell better than a lot of fluff. They know it's Chaplin and they know it is his newest. That is all they need to know. They'll go as quickly on that as they would on a 500 word selling talk. Bell's record length is shown in the other example we reproduce, a 220 across three for "One Arabian Night." He was selling this to the Disarmament Conference crowd, offering a star known to the scores of secretaries and assistants and experts and whatnot. He was also selling on the pictorial value of the production, and he needed a lot of room to tell all about it, so he spread himself. About four-fifths of the selling is done with the text inside the crescent, but he gets the rest on the italic bank below. The corner cuts were made from a single photograph. He had one cut made straight and one with the negative reversed, then electros were made of each to give him the second pair, with the result that he has a very effective frame at comparatively small cost. He gets a good result on "Why Girls Leave Home" by mortising a rather poor cut and setting the title in with type. The cut is not worth much except to frame the type title, but it does that to the limit. He surely wrestles with the language on this, for his concluding punch reads: "with New York's frivolous gayeties as a nocturnal background for its tremendously moving pivotal scenes which, without exception, are lavishly staged, wonderfully acted, realistically presented." That ought to be worth sixty cents of any man's money. Bell could get with a circus on the strength of such lines, and that is just one of a lot. "A Man's Home" was sold on pictures of the six principal players and an eight line lettered title. He had two unusual pictures to fight as opposition and he made a big splash to offset the fact that the Hearst paper was giving entire pages of reading notice to a Cosmopolitan production. He put it over.

THE BELL CHAPLIN AD

Made a Twenty-four Basis of a Banner

The Rosemary Theatre, Ocean Park, Cal., used a cutout from the 24-sheet for Griffith's "Way Down East" the basis of a banner. It took the rural characters from the sheet and made it a cutout, giving a backing of foliage which may have been stock stuff. This builds the stock paper into an original and attractive banner, and the paper might have been designed for this express purpose, so nicely does it fit into the general scheme. Ability to make use of the material in a new way is one of the most valuable assets an advertising man can have, and this display from the Rosemary is above the average for adroit use of what is to be had. It gives the house an unusually effective display at a comparatively small cost, and it permits the front to hook-up to the other displays around town without disfiguring the entrance with straight paper. A poster or banner up there would not have looked half as well, nor would it have sold as many tickets. The poster was not planned for lobby work, but for use on the boards, and to convert it to a lobby display is something of an achievement. The photography is too flat to show the perspective, but if you use the design, cut the figures out even though you may be able to set the cutout only a couple of inches in front of the backing. Even that will permit you to put light effects back of the cutout screen and raise the display value of the outfit. It will also permit you to accumulate a series of backings that in the course of time, will give you a regular scene dock for the lobby front. The Rosemary seems to be doing more than its share of the work and getting its full share of publicity. Some managers affect not to care for trade paper publicity, but the wise manager wants it because it is an assurance that he is working along the right lines, for the trade papers do not waste space on poor ideas, and if his ideas are good, he knows that he is selling to his capacity for getting business. It is not egotism which leads the house manager to try and make the grade. It's a desire to know how his work sizes up, in comparison with others; to know if he is doing all he can. We'll say the Rosemary is.

Stanley Theatres Are Coming Into Old Form

The Stanley theatres, Philadelphia, are coming back into form once more and doing things in a big way. This display for Pola Negri in First National's "One Arabian Night" is the best thing the house has done in the past six months. It had a good subject for illustration, for one thing, but it has had others as good and has not given the same results. The picture is sold on the title, the star and the cut, for there is little argument since little is needed to supplement that trio of appeals. There was a time last spring when the Stanley was leading the line in Philadelphia, but there was a slump during the summer and the houses seem to be just lately coming back to their own with dominating advertisements. Advertising like this means business, if there is business to be had in Philadelphia.

ONE FROM THE STANLEY

How Hustling Won for Philadelphia Theatre

The Carman Theatre, Philadelphia, had an anniversary on Thanksgiving that was a real thanksgiving. A year before the house opened with everyone phophesying failure. It was right in between two other houses more advantageously located and in the radius of four large houses. George T. Gravenstein was the manager and he opened on a three change a week policy, because it looked as though the house could not hold business for more than two days on an attraction. But soon it was found that a good show was worth three days, and in two months they put in "The Last of the Mohicans" for a week and sold 6,000 school tickets alone. Now the house runs all week on a feature and will go longer on a really big one. It is not surprising that the anniversary announcement is a very sincere thanks to the patrons who have made the advance possible. Originally intended as a neighborhood house, it now appeals to all of North Philadelphia and pulls business past other and better located houses. And it did it all on hustling advertising plus a good selection in the matter of features. It merely goes to show that it is the man, rather than the house, which makes good.

THE VANCE THEATRE, ASHEVILLE, N. C., OPENING WITH NORMA TALMADGE IN "THE SIGN ON THE DOOR"

Made Talmadge Sisters Mascots of New House

Norma Talmadge has been selected as the star to open a number of new houses holding the First National franchise, and this illustration shows the new Vance Theatre, Asheville, N. C., with the initial attraction on the banner and portraits of both Norma and Constance Talmadge prominently displayed. The flowers are not part of the lobby decoration, but are holdovers from the brilliant opening night when the mayor delivered the dedicatory address and then stuck around to see the show free. "Dinty" followed in as the second attraction.

Bubar Still Can Letter Without Wriggly Lines

Here is a display from the California Theatre, San Francisco, which proves that Jewett Bubar, Roth and Partington's artist, still can letter with clean lines. This display for Bert Lytell in "A Trip to Paradise" is clean cut and forceful and the lines are all clear. He leaves plenty of room for the type announcement, with a panel for the Sunday concert, and it is all neat and attractive, like the Bubar stuff used to be. One nice touch in this display is the use of a circle back of the woman's head. This is in line and not cross hatching, and it provides a good background for the sketch. It might have looked bare in that corner of the space without something, and white would not have given the usual result, so he put in the panel and broke the space without detracting from the drawing. One thing we like about Bubar's drawings is the way he puts two figures over. He handles his lights and shades so as to make the two figures distinct where so many artists get a puddle of black ink instead of a figure. Put a glass on the cut and note how the ornamentation of the woman's dress is so set as to serve as a background to define Lytells' hair, then note how the white cuff and the vest band outline the remainder of the front figure while the high lights on his back hold him from butting into Heller's orchestra, over on the right. Bubar knows how, and can do it when he wants to, and this time he wanted to. This is 125 lines across three but it would look almost as well as in a double column.

Disguised Marquise for "A Connecticut Yankee"

With a minimum of work the Strand Theatre, Perth Amboy, N. J., with the aid of a Fox publicity man, made a battlement above the entrance for the recent engagement of "A Connecticut Yankee at King Arthur's Court." There was not much to the display save forming the towers at the ends of the display, but there was enough to suggest the castle and it worked almost as well as a full built in front, because it kept the work where it would show to the best advantage. It accomplishes practicaly the same result at a fraction of the cost, but this is practicable only when there is a marquise. It would cost more to build this out on a flat front, and make it sceure than it would to build in an entire front. It would help a little to mount a sentinel at showing times, and if he hapens to be a bugler, so much the better. You can always find a bugler in a boy scout troop who can do well enough. Doll him up a little and put him to work.

—P. T. A.—

Put the News Appeal on the Theatre Front

Although the sensation seeker will be appealed to by the title of "Why Girls Leave Home," a majority of the prospects are more surely reached through the news appeal supplied by the Warner Brothers in the question raised. Appreciating this fact, the Blue Mouse Theatre, Minneapolis, put the "65,000 girls lost in year" on a sign above the marquise and then added in electric lights "The Most Vital Question confronting mothers and fathers." This landed the class of patrons most apt to stay away from a sensational title and made the story 100 per cent. effective. The manager who trusts to the title alone is the sort of man who would leave a couple of perfectly good drinks in the bottom of a bottle that looks empty. He does not get all he has coming to him unless he uses the provided publicity. Most managers have used it all, both on their house fronts and in the lights as well as in the newspaper specials, but the Blue Mouse provides a simple model others will have no difficulty in following, and this can be more easily done than some of the displays which reproduce elaborate paintings of newspaper headings. These latter are good, but they are difficult and the Blue Mouse gets the same result with less painting.

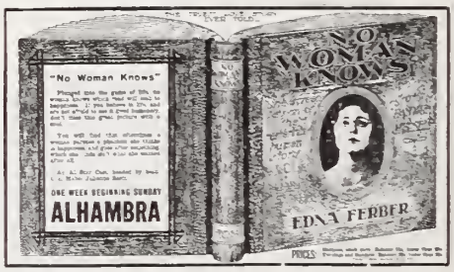
Book Origin Feature Suggested by the Ad.

Suggesting the book origin of "No Woman Knows," the Alhambra Theatre, Toledo, used a picture of a book back for its Sunday announcement, taking a space 100 lines across six columns. It gets over the idea of the book, but at considerable cost, for only the type matter in the mortise really gets over. On the right hand side you have to look closely for other text than the title, because the lines cannot fight through the color of the cover.

THE CASTLE FRONT ON THE STRAND, PERTH AMBOY, FOR "A CONNECTICUT YANKEE"



THE BOOK ANNOUNCEMENT

At that the advertisement is a good one because the picture makes a strong atrtactor and the announcement on the back cover is ample to sell the idea of the story. The artist seems to have been in some uncertainty as to the portrait vignette. If he squared it with column rules it would look out of alignment on the cover, and if he made it square with the cover it would slant on the page, so he made it on an angle with the border, which suggests that the cover artist was a bit off in his drawing. The advertisement is effective, but we think that much the same result could have been gained from a smaller space in which book covers served as corner pieces. This would not have been as striking, but it would have gotten the same idea over and probably would have done just as good business.

News of the West Coast

By A.H.GIEBLER

W. P. Milligan advertising manager of the Moving Picture World, arrived in Los Angeles last week to look over film conditions on the West coast. Mr. Milligan made the tour of the studios while here, and visited with the numerous friends he has made during his many years connection with the motion picture industry.

Mr. Milligan was a guest of the Wampas at a dinner held at the Hollywood Tea Rooms on Monday night, and listened to little talks by other guests and leading members of the motion Picture Advertisers Association, then made a short address himself. On another evening he attended Movie Night at the Ambassador Cocoanut Grove, and again renewed acquaintance with old-time friends.

When Milligan arrived the sun was shining bright in true California style. Coming from the cold wintry atmosphere of the east at this time of year, and being set down among the roses, green grass and waving palms of Southern California, seemed to Wen like being suddenly transplanted back into last June, or forward into Next June.

But alas! the next day it rained! And how it rained! In the same manner that the California sunshine cannot be compared to any other sunshine, so with the California rain. It rained for four days without stopping. And now Milligan, who has experienced the two extremes of climate in Los Angeles, and has concluded his business in the West, is on his way back to New York carrying with him the good wishes of all Filmland.

Elliott Howe, just after completing the B. B. Hampton picture, "Wildfire", in collaboration with Jean Hersholt, died last Saturday night of heart failure. Mr. Howe had just recently been promoted from the ranks of assistant director to that of full-fledged director by Mr. Hampton, for whom he assisted in directing such productions as "A Certain Rich Man", "The Mysterious Rider", "The Grey Dawn", and others. Editing and titling of the new film, "Wildfire," was to have been begun by the two co-directors, Howe and Hersholt, on Monday, but that work was postponed until after the funeral. Carl Gantvoort, star of "Wildfire" and formerly an opera singer, rendered two hymns at the funeral of his late director.

The lower part of Universal City Studio property, through which runs a small picturesque stream in normal times, was flooded last Tuesday, following heavy rains that lasted several days. A lot of debris from old sets near the stream floated down into the river bed and formed a sort of dam that had to be broken up and removed before the water could be carried away. Studio employees used dynamite to blow up the debris, and saved the film plant from further damage than that caused to the sets on that part of the property.

Ferdinand Earle, whose spectacular production of "The Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam", is being held up through a litigation between the financiers and the producer of the picture, has announced his intention of beginning soon on another art film, that is a film with backgrouds of paintings representing settings and locations. This time Mr. Earle has selected a story of modern times and although all the details have not all been completed, he expects to begin the picture ealy in the new year.

The Screen Writers Guild of the Authors League of America met last Saturday night in their clubhouse in Hollywood to give a send-off party to George Ade, who has been visiting in Los Angeles for several weeks. Practically all the noted writers, film and otherwise, now in Los Angeles, were present at the Guild party. George Ade has been preparing an original story for filming, in which Tom Meighan will star for Paramount.

Buck Jones, Fox star, who was severely burned a few weeks ago, necessitating his having to remain in hospital for some time, is now able to be about, and expects to resume his work in the studio shortly.

Bert Lytell left this week for a six weeks trans-continental tour of the principal cities of the country, to make personal appearances in leading theatres of those cities.

Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford, who have been away from home since some time last summer, arrived from points east in time to spend Christmas in Los Angeles. The pair have not announced their plans for future films as yet, having only just got home at this writing, but it looks as if their forthcoming productions would be filmed on the west coast, instead of in Europe, as was feared when they left California.

Special Photoplay Edition of "Miss Lulu Bett" for Film Play

As a part of Paramount's exploitation campaign for William deMille's production, "Miss Lulu Bett," copies of the photoplay edition of the novel by Zona Gale, from which the picture was adapted, are now being distributed to book stores. D. Appleton & Co. have arranged with Paramount advertising department for a special jacket for use during the run of the picture.

The jacket is in two colors, with both the outside covers tying up with the photoplay. The front cover is featured by a character photograph of Lois Wilson, who plays the title role. Underneath is the billing of the photoplay. Stills from the picture are used on the back cover and flaps.

Appleton booksellers have been requested by the firm to co-operate with exhibitors showing the picture, and Paramount suggests to exhibitors that they take advantage of the offer.

Other Aids

Paramount also recommends that exhibitors start rhyming contests, such as the one used in New York when Miss Gale's play was running at the Belmont Theatre. Have it stipulated that contestants not only must incorporate the title but must in some way in their verses advise people to read the book and see the picture. Tickets may be offered as prizes for the best verses, and it will be easy to secure valuable co-operation from newspapers as well as booksellers.

Selznick Booking "Man's Home" at a Rapid Rate in New York

Henry Siegel, manager of the New York branch of the Select Pictures Corp., is rejoicing in the effects of the showing of "A Man's Home," Selznick special, at the Capitol Theatre, New York City, the week of December 18. The big Ralph Ince Production made a most favorable impression upon the rank and file of theatregoers throughout the greater city, it is stated.

Bookings are being rapidly listed in some of the foremost theatres in New York, Brooklyn, Newark, and other large communities served from the New York offices.

Buys Rights to Hughes Story

Goldwyn has purchased the screen right to another one of Rupert Hughes' humorous short stories. It will be remembered that "Scratch My Back" and "Hold Your Horses," two of Goldwyn's biggest comedy successes, were adapted from short stories by Mr. Hughes, while "The Old Nest" was made from his novel of that title, and "Dangerous Curve Ahead" was an original scenario written directly for the screen.

"Bitterness of Sweets" has to do with an ambitious but poor young girl who often does not have enough to eat. The compensation for not always having enough to eat is that she has a very slender and graceful figure. And when she goes upon the stage her lithe figure is a help toward advancement and final success.

Consensus of Published Reviews

Here are extracts from news available at press hour from publications of the industry boiled down to a sentence. They present the views of Moving Picture World (M.P.W.); Exhibitors' Herald (E.H.); Motion Picture News (N.); Exhibitors' Trade Review (T.R.); Wid's (W.).

Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford

(Featured Cast—Cosmopolitan—7,381 Feet)

M. P. W.—Cosmopolitan production of George M. Cohan's stage success is vastly amusing.

W.—Popular Cohan stage play offers good comedy entertainment.

T. R.—This screen adaptation of the successful George M. Cohan comedy bids fair to win an even greater degree of public favor than the stage production.

N.—This is going to please them.

E. H.—Translates George M. Cohan's stage play of the same name to the screen in masterful fashion.

Vendetta

(Pola Negri—Howells—5 Reels)

M. P. W.—Pola Negri interprets vivid drama in her latest feature.

W.—Star's name has gained a reputation which should bring them in. "Vendetta" goes to prove that Pola Negri is best suited to roles which permit her to be demonstrative, and for that reason she finds it difficult to hold herself down to the more subdued part of Marianna Paoli, an Italian girl.

N.—On the heels of such successful pictures as have made the name of Pola Negri indicative of productions worthy of embodying the fine acting with which the star is credited, it is regrettable she is now presented in an inferior offering.

Miss Lulu Bett

M. P. W.—Widely popular novel and play made into excellent picture by William C. DeMille.

T. R.—One of the best film productions of the year.

N.—Splendid picture made from prize play. The champions of this book and play (and they are legion) cannot carp over this treatment of their favorite story.

W.—William DeMille from a scenario prepared by Clara Beranger, has made a quite delightful entertainment that consists mostly of characterization, though there is a constant plot that is developed smoothly and interestingly to an effective climax.

E. H.—Represents William DeMille's most effective endeavor directorially to date.

What No Man Knows

(Clara Kimball Young—Equity—6,200 Feet)

M. P. W.—A novelty that will appeal to the women. There is plenty of red-blooded action, however. The scenario is well handled and the settings are true to the life they depict.

N.—Clara Kimball Young displays her talent in heart interest story.

W.—"What No Man Knows" is one of those stories in which the ending is inevitable and obvious all the way. Star's name will attract.

Sky High

(Tom Mix—Fox—4,546 Feet)

M. P. W.—Scenic grandeur and romantic story exploit Tom Mix's talents in Fox feature.

T. R.—Everything that lovers of Westerns like to see is shown in this picture.

N.—This Mix picture is there with the scenery and action.

W.—Regardless of improbabilities and coincidence that makes up the plot, Tom Mix's current production is the best he has ever offered.

Stardust

(Hope Hampton—First National—5,600 Feet)

M. P. W.—Features Hope Hampton in a drama with a great popular appeal.

T. R.—Personally, we are sold on Stardust.

N.—Splendid comedy-drama — excellently constructed.

E. H.—A Hope Hampton starring vehicle that will receive the approbation of every lover of good, clean screen stories.

The Fire Eater

(Hoot Gibson—Universal—4,341 Feet)

M. P. W.—Spectacular fire scenes the high spot in Universal special, starring Hoot Gibson.

T. R.—It is strictly up to the standard set by its forerunners of the series.

W.—Sure to be a big hit with admirers of "Meller."

Associated Producers

A THOUSAND TO ONE. Bosworth hardly seems to fit in a dress suit. Business rotten, as high school had their first "movie" that night. Advertising; usual. Patronage; small town. Attendance; poor. W. Ray Erne, Arcade Theatre, Charlotte, Michigan.

First National

ALF'S BUTTON.—Another foreign business killer. A few more of these and I will be out of business. Patronage; small town. C. S. Bovee, Florence Theatre, Elk Point, South Dakota.

BLIND HEARTS. One of the season's best pictures. The whole cast was good and the plot was immense. Advertising; posters and papers. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. J. Carbonell, Monroe Theatre, Key West, Florida.

COURAGE. This is an extra good picture, a little bit sad at times, but O. K. and just what the public needs sometimes. Advertising; nothing extra. Patronage; A-1. Attendance; fairly good. H. C. Neale, Princess Theatre, Mayfield, Kentucky.

GOLDEN SNARE. One of the best Curwood pictures yet. Wonderful locations and scenery ideal. Good drawing card, action from the first. Advertising; billboards. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. L. O. Davis, Perry Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

GO AND GET IT. Good picture to put over big. Pleased 90 per cent. You'll do good on this one. Advertising; ones, threes, lobby and mail list. Patronage; town people. Attendance; good. C. R. McCown, Alhambra Theatre, Cornerville, Tennessee.

HOMESPUN FOLKS. Here is a picture that no exhibitor should pass up. It is full of humor, pathos and suspense and is worthy of extra run. Advertising; thoroughly. Patronage: general. Attendance: fair. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minn.

THE KID. Return engagement. Didn't draw so well. Newspaper gave it good write up. Personally we can never see Chaplin as anything but vulgar and the picture got very few laughs. Jackie Coogan saved it. Advertising; as usual. Patronage; high class. Attendance; fair. E. W. Large, Strand Theatre, Ithaca, New York.

MAMMA'S AFFAIR. A piece of cheese for me. If they don't give Constance Talmadge better pictures she's going to lose out. Advertising; regular. Patronage; average. Attendance; good. S. H. McNeil, Rideau Theatre, Smith's Falls, Canada.

MAMMA'S AFFAIR. This picture did more business here than any picture I have played in two weeks. Not as good as some of Connie's previous pictures, but pleases majority. Advertising; billboards and newspapers. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. R. H. Hightower, Crystal Theatre, Dublin, Ga.

THE OLD SWIMMIN' HOLE. Probably the best Ray picture to date. Everybody liked it. Advertising; program, lobby and slides. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. W. H. Pike, Majestic Theatre, Las Vegas, Nevada.

PECK'S BAD BOY. We stepped on this one to the limit and had two good nights on it, but had to raise to double admission to come out of it. A very pleasing picture (pleased 100 per cent.), except for the price. The small exhibitor does not make anything on this kind of business. Rentals of First National are prohibitive for me. Advertising; extra newspaper, 24 sheet, six sheets and painted up every sidewalk in town. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. Jno. W. Joerger, O. K. Theatre, Enterprise, Oregon.

Fox

THE RIDER OF THE PURPLE SAGE. A very wonderful picture, with a good star and a good story. Book it, you cannot disappoint your patrons. See that you get a good print on this one. Advertising; 24 sheets, six sheets, three sheets and single. Patronage; all kinds. Attendance ; extra good. F. Fera, Victory Theatre, Rossiter, Pa.

THE MOTHER HEART. Excellent and pleased 100 per cent. Star (Shirley Mason) seems to be better in every picture and draws excellent crowds. Advertising; slides, one sheets and monthly cards. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. John C. Mape, Knights of Pythias Theatre, Chester, N. Y.

Goldwyn

BEATING THE GAME. Dandy good picture; best thing Tom Moore ever did. Did not think it was in him. Let us have some more like it. If this fails to please, close up the shop and put out the "for rent" sign. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Okla.

DANGEROUS CURVE AHEAD. A nice picture with a good lesson to everybody, however, Goldwyn wants too much money for it, for me. Everyone liked it. Advertising; posters, mailing list, heralds, window cards. Patronage; very best. Attendance; good. Herman Adam, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss.

THE MAN WHO HAD EVERYTHING. Excellent, good photography. Advertising; usual advertising. Patronage; best. Attendance; fair. Anna Frankle, Strand Theatre, Leon, Iowa.

SONG OF THE SOUL. Wonderful work of Vivian Martin stands out in this one. One good picture; pleased everybody up here. Advertising; single sheets and banner. Patronage: manufacturing people. Attendance; good. Howard James, Union Theatre, Voluntown, Conn.

WET GOLD.—Wonderful picture. The underwater scenes were great, while the story is an interesting one. Advertising: two daily papers, heralds, window cards. Patronage: mixed. Attendance: good. G. H. Rardin, America Theatre, Longmont, Colo.

Hodkinson

EAST LYNN. Very good picture, we need more like this. Advertising; extensive, newspaper, lobby. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. Mr. Solomon, Bijou Theatre, Clarksburg, West Virginia.

THE MAN OF THE FOREST. A real honest to God feature. The thrills raised them right off the seats. Contains plenty of heart interest and pleased my patrons 100%. Brother exhibitors don't let a few dollars keep you from playing this one. Advertising; played up the animal stuff, used bears and a cougar in front of the theatre. Patronage; home loving people. Attendance; wonderful, seven days. Frank Lacy, Majestic Theatre, Portland, Oregon.

Metro

CINDERELLA'S TWIN. Well liked. Advertising; as usual. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; fair. Edw. W. Werner, Windsor Theatre, Canton, Ohio.

CINDERELLA'S TWIN. One of the best Viola Dana has played. Pleased 100%. Advertising; list, 11x14, mail. Patronage; town people. Attendance; fair. C. R. McCown, Alhambra Theatre, Cornersville, Tenn.

FATAL HOUR. A fairly good picture, but only received about 60% of film and "only part of the film" does not please the people. Advertising; slides, 1 sheets, cards. Patronage; small town. Attendance; poor. John C. Mapes, Knights of Pythias Theatre, Chester, New York.

FOUR HORSEMEN. Indeed a wonderful picture; will please everyone. Patrons said it was the best ever run in the city. You can't lose on it. Advertising; very heavy. Patronage; general. Attendance; fair. U. G. Replogle, Grand Theatre, St. Marys, Ohio.

FOUR HORSEMEN. Best picture I have ever seen. Story, cast, settings and photography simply wonderful. Everybody highly pleased. Advertising; extensive. Patronage; high class. Attendance; fair. L. M. Zug, Rialto Theatre, Jerome, Idaho.

MADAM PEACOCK. Very poor. This one is some lemon for me. Never heard one good word for it. Advertising; 1-3 photo slide, 2,000 programs. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; poor. T. E. Loomis, Cozy Theatre, Schenectady, New York.

THE MAN WHO. Did not please here. A shame to waste Lytell's splendid powers on so silly a theme. Advertising; usual. Patronage; high class. Attendance; poorest in weeks. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Ark.

POLLY WITH A PAST. A very clever little picture, gave general satisfaction. Did not draw because star (Ina Clare) was unknown. Advertising; usual. Patronage; high class. Attendance; poor. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Ark.

Paramount

THE BONNIE BRIAR BUSH. Very well acted picture, but somehow or other these English productions lack the punch of American productions. Advertising; regular. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House, Belvidere, New Jersey.

BRONZE BELL. Absolutely rotten for me. Six reels too long. Mr. Zukor, if you want them to believe that "Line" stands for a good picture, you'll have to cut it out and back it up. Patronage; small town. Attendance; average. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, DeQueen, Arkansas.

DECEPTION. Exceptionally good from a production standpoint. Pleased majority of patrons although some did not like it. Advertising; cards, billboards, newspapers, etc. Patronage; better class. Attendance; very poor. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greeneville, Ohio.

ENCHANTMENT. The best Cosmpoolitan since "Humoresque" and the best picture in which Marion Davies has appeared. Don't pass this up if you don't like the star, because she is entirely different in this one. She proves she can act. The production is extravagantly produced and the photography is especially fine. A comedy-drama which pleased everybody. Advertising; lobby, slides, program and circus dodgers. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. W. H. Pike, Majestic Theatre, Las Vegas, Nevada.

FORBIDDEN FRUIT. Very good picture with a good moral and will make people think. Advertising; extensive, newspapers, heralds, cutouts. Patronage; best. Attendance; fair. Mr. Solomon, Bijou Theatre, Clarksburg, W. Va.

THE GHOST IN THE GARRET. The one and only five reel comedy. Better than anything in the comedy line we have shown in a long time. You can boost this one for lots of laughs. Advertising; regular paper and bill posting. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; very poor. Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ills.

THE GREAT IMPERSONATION. An excellent picture with a real plot, something seldom seen nowadays. Kept everybody guessing and pleased them all. James Kirkwood is excellent and the supporting cast satisfactory. Advertising; lobby, cuts, posters, as usual. Patronage; high class. Attendance; good. E. W. Large, Crescent Theatre, Ithaca, New York.

THE HELL DIGGERS. Very good picture. Reid pictures always have a punch about them that puts them across. Advertising; regular. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House, Belvidere, New Jersey.

THE MYSTERY ROAD. Personally enjoyed it very much, but not a picture for children. The scenery grateful relief from California's much filmed beauties. The picture did not please, however. Advertising; regular, posters. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; poor, due to business conditions. O. V. Drew, Acme Theatre, Vinalhaven, Maine.

PAYING THE PIPER. A good production, but not up to Fitzgerald's standard. Did not do business expected. Advertising; newspaper. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. L. T. Carskadan, Music Hall Theatre, Keyser, W. Va.

SAND. Good. Bill Hart a great favorite. Advertising; large banner across building, banner on horse (delivery wagon). Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. Anna Frankle, Strand Theatre, Leon, Iowa.

DICE OF DESTINY. This star is rather new with our patronage, but he surely made a hit. A very good story of the crook type and H. B. Warner can handle it very cleverly. Should make money for any exhibitor. Cutting the cuss-words out of the titles would help it. Advertising; usual. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. Jno. W. Joerger, O. K. Theatre, Enterprise, Oregon.

LIVE AND LET LIVE. One of the poorest of the season. The patrons sure got tired sitting through six reels of this, waiting for Clyde Cook in "Toreador" one of the best comedies of the year. It saved the show. Advertising; regular. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; very poor. Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Illinois.

THE MISTRESS OF SHENSTONE. A well played picture, pleased everybody. Miss Frederick is well liked here. Advertising; lobby, newspaper, billboards. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. G. E. Shilkett, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Okla.

SALVAGE. Best Pauline Frederick since "Madame X" and just as good. Pleased 100%. Clyde Cook in "The Toreador" on same bill pleased fine. Advertising; usual. Patronage; high class. Attendance; good. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

STING OF THE LASH. Picture very good, well liked by all that saw it. Business poor on account of conditions here. Advertising: newspaper and billboards. R. H. Hightower, Crystal Theatre, Dublin, Ga.

FIGHTING BILL. (Western Feature Prod.) A good Western, lots of "pep." This is second picture of Wm. Fairbanks. Business increased on this one. Advertising; newspaper and billboard. Patronage; all classes. Attendance; good. W. L. Landers, Gem Theatre, Batesville, Ark.

ISOBEL. (G. H. Davis). I noticed several reports on this one which said that it was not up to Curwood standard and was afraid to boost it, however my opinion is that it's just as good as, if not better than, "Nomads." It did not need much boosting. I got the money and everybody was pleased. W. F. Harding, Princess Theatre, Mt. Doro, Fla.

LOGGERS OF HELL ROARIN' MOUNTAIN. (American Films). Excellent Western Railroad drama. Will please an audience that likes plenty of excitement. Full of suspense. Advertising; as usual. Patronage; middle class. Attendance; fair. J. A. Bailey, South Side Theatre, Greensburg, Indiana.

LONE HAND WILSON. (Federated). One of the best Westerns I have run for some time. Good story and thrills. Business poor on this. Star not known, but he's there with the goods. Patronage; middle class. Attendance; fair. Wm. Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

THE RAIDERS. (Canyon). A Western, that's all. Not enough action or incident to place it above average. Advertising; posters and local papers. Patronage; usual. Attendance; fair. Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Theatre, Grand Gorge, N. Y.

SEALED ORDERS. (Pioneer). Good little two reel detective. Have run five of them and they are all good. You can't go wrong on these Nick Carter series. Good on any program. Everybody likes them, they are different. Wm. Thatcher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

WESTERN ADVENTURE. (Pioneer). An exaggerated Western that patrons just ate up. They all want to see him in his next picture. Plenty of good paper on this picture. Use it. Patronage; middle class. Attendance: good. Mr. Oppenheimer, Empire Theatre, New Orleans, La.

Comedies

CLYDE COOK COMEDIES. (Fox). A number 1 good comedies all of them. Much better than average comedy. Will please 100%. You'll make no mistake in booking them. Advertising; usual. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. J. A. Bailey, South Side Theatre, Greensburg, Ind.

HIGH AND DIZZY. (Pathe). Very good comic. Should draw wherever Harold Lloyd is liked. Advertising; regular. Attendance; good. W. F. Pease, Centennial Theatre, Lowell, Wisconsin.

THE KID'S PAL. (Universal. I want to go on record as saying this is the most wonderful dog I ever saw in pictures or anywhere else. It's good to see animals act like this. Only two reels but was more enjoyed by entire audience than my feature picture. Keep it up, Universal, we need more of this type of comedy. Attendance; good. W. F. Harding, Princess Theatre, Mt. Doro, Fla.

NEVER WEAKEN. (Associated Exhibitors). Cannot compare with Lloyd's other feature comedies. Lloyd only could put this picture over. Advertising: fifteen one-sheets, two 24-sheets, cutouts, lobby advertisements, two newspapers. Patronage: mixed. Attendance; fair. H. B. Barr, Rialto Theatre, Enid, Okla.

THE PLAYHOUSE. (First National). First new Keaton comedy went big. New ideas and stunts all through the two reels. Advertising; all sized posters and photos. Patronage; general. Attendance; good. R. J. Reef, Star Theatre, Decatur, Iowa.

WE'LL GET YOU YET. (Federated). Very good comedy, but have seen them make better ones. Business off, weather bad. Advertising; one-sheet, photos. Patronage; middle class. Wm. Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

PLAY HOUSE (First National). Buster Keaton good in this; all new stunts. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. C. S. Bovee, Florence Theatre, Elk Point, South Dakota.

THE VAGRANT (Mermaid-Educational). A comedy that made them rock with laughter, from start to finish. I've found all Educational's comedies good, but these Mermaids can't be beat. Patronage; general. Attendance; fair. J. C. Rowton, Victory Theatre, Shawnee, Oklahoma.

TORCHY IN HIGH (Educational). Rotten for me, simply a vulgar attempt at comedy. Advertising; regular. Patronage; small town. Attendance; poor. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, De Queen, Arkansas.

Short Subjects

BURTON HOLMES TRAVELS. (Famous Players). We have used one Burton Holmes travel reel each week for six years and regard it the best educational reel on the market. Our people demand it. Patronage; best class rural. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

"The Little Minister"

Penrhyn Stanlaws Makes Extraordinarily Fine Picture From Barrie Material —Paramount Release

Reviewed by Fritz Tidden.

Restraint is much to be desired—in dealing with pictures as well as in the pictures themselves. But when one enters upon a consideration of such quality in motion picture production as exemplified in this instance by "The Little Minister" he runs into extreme difficulties if he wishes to keep both feet on the ground and not soar up among bursting verbal fireworks. Penrhyn Stanlaws' production for Paramount of Barrie's novel and play presents a most aggravating temptation to slop over and gush. This goes for both the artistic angle and the financial possibilities. But restraint is much to be desired.

"The Little Minister" is another masterpiece, in a season of masterpieces. It embraces all the qualities that go for the heights of effective motion picture achievement. And, not omitting a decidedly important viewpoint, the picture will prove a box-office attraction of value limited only by a theatre's repeated capacity.

If, for instance, a picture house has the average seating capacity of one thousand persons, it is not too much to say that the exhibitor will have one thousand enthusiastic word-of-mouth advertisers for his attraction, which will be augmented with every showing. Sight means shout. "The Little Minister" embraces the essence of what is conveniently known as "human appeal;" for the obvious reason that it plays upon the emotions of the spectator with a direct simplicity that cannot help but meet with universal response. It is this simplicity that makes the film translation of one of the world's best liked romances the great thing it is. It deals with simple people. Its humor is simple—and natural. And its drama is the simple drama of placing the emotions of its protagonists in conflict, evolving its situations therefrom. There is no straining for effects, and because the exposition of the plot presents many opportunities for lack of restraint, as much should be said for what is not done as for what is done. What more can be said than it is real Barrie on the screen?

Another difficulty arises when an attempt is made to concentrate all the individual credit due the numerous contributors to "The Little Minister's" excellence in an allotment of space that forbids the extended mention these people deserve. To omit special consideration of Penrhyn Stanlaws, who directed the picture, would be a serious oversight, however. But the result of his work upon a scenario that contains flawless dramatic construction can be expressed in one word. It is exquisite; and in the full meaning of the word. Also not to call particular attention to the performance of Betty Compson as Babbie would be inexcusable. She not only plays Babbie but is Babbie, and as the footage of the film progresses the sheer artistry of her portrayal increases apace, making her apeal crescendo. The other members of the cast are perfect types and do exceptional work, especially George Hackathorne who makes Gavin absolutely live.

The box office possibilities of the picturization of one of modern literature's most popular books that has the added advantage of having been made into one of the most popular plays in the generation need not be mentioned. It should be said, however, that the translation is as faithful as necessary and will please those drawn into a theatre because they wish to see their favorite on the screen.

The Cast

Babbie.....Betty Compson
Gavin.....George Hackathorne
Lord Rintoul.....Edwin Stevens
Capt. Halliwell.....Nigel Barrie
Dr. McQueen.....Will R. Walling
Tammas Whamond.....Guy Oliver
Peter Tosh.....Fred Huntly

John Spens.....Joseph Hazelton
Nanny Webster.....Mary Wilkinson

Adapted from Sir James Barrie's novel and play
Scenario by Edfrid Bingham
Directed by Penrhyn Stanlaws
Length, 6,031 feet.

The Story

When the weavers of Thrums, enraged by a reduction in prices for their products, rise against the manufacturers, Gavin "the little minister," intervenes with the constables in their behalf. Babbie, a supposed Gypsy girl, is suspected of having notified the rioters that the police were coming so they might be prepared to fight, and a price is placed on her capture. But when Gavin questions her, her beauty and appeal charms him and he aids her to escape. A romance between the pair impends, much to the dislike of the elders of the Scotch kirk and Gavin is about to be unfrocked when the Gypsy girl is brought into the meeting and discloses that she is in reality Lady Barbara, daughter of Lord Rintoul, the baron-magistrate of the district. In aiding the girl to escape Gavin had told the constables that she was his wife, which in Scotland constitutes legal marriage if admittance is made before witnesses.

Advertising Angles: If you can play this day and date with the Vitagraph productions, invite comparison and you both can get extra business from the patrons who will want to see both. If you play it alone sell the star, but sell her on the book and play.

Contrary to what might be expected, this scenic which Bruce has made for Educational will have an appeal for men as well as women. The title is a misleading pleasantry, offering more amusement than fashion hints, as the picture describes some of the unique styles of headgear that prevail with French market women of the more menial class. There are a number of interesting types among the aged folk of this village and some remarkably picturesque shots of the town as a whole, from a distance. This subject would be an attractive addition to any program. M. K.

"My Boy"

Jackie Coogan Wins His Way in a Role That Has a Perfect Balance of Pathos and Humor. First National

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

For team work, Jackie Coogan and Claude Gillingwater form one of the most efficient and picturesque combinations that we have been favored with for some time. Each one is happily fitted to accentuate the personality of the other, and in each case, what a personality. Jackie Coogan has never more indisputably asserted his right to be starred than he does in "My Boy." Regardless of any trend that the story may take, and regardless, even, of whether Jackie is right or wrong (that he happens to be right) he is possessed of so adorable a personality that he wins everyone. Claude Gillingwater has that admirable talent of staying in character. If he starts out to impersonate an embittered old sea coptain, he continues without weakening obviously as there might be a temptation to do when he comes under the ingratiating influence of the child. In due course of time, however, Jackie's presence has its effect upon him, and the change, when it does come, is real.

The first sympathetic thrill is when little Jackie, who has come over on the steerage and who is too young to realize what his mother's death on board ship will mean to him, stands alone on Ellis Island, a shabby little outsider in a preoccupied world. From then on, when he persists in following the captain home, despite all the latter's rough objections, the story has been cleverly planned to make Jackie a pathetic and ofttimes-amusing figure. If this tendency toward making him too much of a martyr is too pronounced, it is overshadowed by the child's irresistible appeal. The last scene where the policeman, the inspection officer, the old sea captain and the newly found grandmother want the boy at the same moment is an example of great drama. The direction is splendid.

The Cast

Jackie Blair.....Jackie Coogan
Cap'n Bill.....Claude Gillingwater
Mrs. Blair.....Mathilda Brundage

Directed by Victor Herman and Albert Austin.
Length, 4,967 Feet.

The Story

Jackie Blair's mother dies on the trip over to America from France and he is left an orphan. His grandmother learns of his arrival too late to meet him. Alone on Ellis Island he gets past the officers by pretending to be one of a large German family. He follows an old sea captain home, despite the latter's vigorous objections and wins a place in the old man's hovel, if not in his heart. He gets involved in a theft in trying to get food for the sick captain and is arrested and found by his grandmother all at once. The captain and he find a good home with Jackie's grandmother.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines:

A Little Lone Orphan Immigrant—Nobody Wanted Him—He Was Afraid of No One. Not Even a Policeman, and He Smiled His Way Into Good Fortune.

Exploitation Angles: Sail in and sell this story strongly, for it will make good for your praise if you do not sell it too extravagantly. But don't hang it all on Jackie, for Claude Gillingwater should get a share of this publicity. Give him a line on all the advertising. Try for some of the tie-ups, with the Jackie Coogan goods. They will help you.

"Pardon My French"

Vivian Martin Star of Goldwyn Picture That Has Irvin Cobb Titles

Reviewed by Fritz Tidden.

In "Pardon My French," an accumulation of talent has accomplished much with an almost hopeless task. It has built up an antiquated theme into a fairly acceptable farce-comedy, which has the box office advantage of Vivian Martin's name as star and Irvin Cobb's as title writer. The picture, however, has definite entertainment possibilities where the audiences are not over-critical concerning the stories that are offered them. And the fact must not be lost sight of that this particular story has been improved as far as possible by highly expert treatment.

But the original tale by Edward Childs Carpenter and called "Polly in the Pantry," from which the picture was adapted, contains one of the most banal and over-hackneyed combinations of plot and theme. The work of writing a screen script was done by Harry O. Hoyt, who has accomplished all that was humanly possible considering the material with which he had to deal. The continuity is in excellent shape and that is saying a good deal as the story calls for a skipping about of incidents that is most startling. Sidney Olcott's direction is just adequate.

The entertainment value of the production is greatly enhanced by the titles, which were written by Irvin Cobb in his best and familiar manner. What they do to the trite story is astounding. And the performances of the individual members of the cast are other gleams of inspiration, notably that of Miss Martin, who has to battle with a colorless role, which she gives life and distinct personality by her familiar ability and charm.

The Cast

Polly ..... Vivian Martin
Bunny ..... George Spink
J. Hawker.....Thomas Meegan
Mrs. Hawker.....Nadine Beresford
Zeke Hawker.....Ralph Yearsly
Countess Carstairs.....Grace Studiford
Marquis de Void.....Walter McEwen
MacGillicuddy ..... Wallace Ray

Story by Edward Childs Carpenter.
Scenario by Harry O. Hoyt.
Directed by Sidney Olcott.
Length, 5,500 Feet.

The Story

The story, in brief, is that of a young actress who, unable to obtain work, is forced to become a maid in the household of a newly-rich family. Part of her duty is to guard the etiquette of the nouveau riche household, but as she says at one point, "I was hired to teach you manners, but that is impossible." The plot is complicated by the entrance of a fake count and countess, who are after the wealth of the Hawkers, the family which Polly is serving, and the attempt also of the ill-bred son to make love to the chic Polly.

There is also an additional element in the situation in the presence of a neighbor known as Mac, a famous actor, who in the end makes Polly his leading lady for life, while the Hawkers awaken to the idiocy of their social ambitions and return ruefully, but happily, to their old home in Kansas.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines:

The Hawkers Were Blown Into Society by a Kansas Cyclone and a Texas Gusher. Their Adventures in Etiquette Under the Direction of a Masquerading French Maid Make a Jazzy Jollity of Laughter.

Exploitation Angles: Play this on names, then go on to sell what you can on the experiences of the newly rich in society, which generally is found to be an acceptable theme. Make a special play on the Irvin Cobb titles. You will recall that he wrote in the titles for "Peck's Bad Boy."

"Trailin'"

Fox Production, Starring Tom Mix; Star Puts Virile Acting Into His Role

Reviewed by T. S. daPonte.

"Trailin'," the Fox production starring Tom Mix, has a rather more intricate plot than the usual "Western" and its entertainment value is enhanced thereby. From beginning to end the spectator is kept undecided as to the certain identity of several of the chief actors in the drama, but the denouement unravels the mystery, and the plot stands out clear-cut and plausible.

Mix has unusual opportunities to demonstrate his excellent horsemanship and all-'round ability. He is quite up to his usual mark in this picture, and no chance has escaped the director to keep Mix in the forefront with his dare-devil exploits and thrilling escapes from danger. There are several scenes, too, in which the star takes desperate chances. For instance, in one he is seen to be plunged into a swirling stream astride his horse, when a bridge across which he is riding is precipitated into the water.

Eva Novak plays well the part of Sally Fortune, proprietor of a Western eating-house, and Steve Nash takes good care of a role that requires a lot of strenuous action. The whole cast, in fact, gives the star commendable support.

The Cast

William Drew.....Jay Morley
John Bard.....Cecil Van Auker
Piotto.....J. F. McDonald
Joan ..... Carol Holloway
Anthony Woodbury.....Tom Mix
Sally Fortune.....Eva Novak
John Woodbury (Name assumed by John Bard) ..... Bert Sprotte
William Drew.....James Gordon
Steve Nash.....Sid Jordan
Deputy Glendon.....William Duvall
Butch Conklin.....Duke Lee
Sandy Ferguson.....Harry Dunkinson
Lawlor ..... Al Fremont
Doctor Young.....Bert Hadley
Joan ..... Carol Holloway

Story by Max Brand.
Scenario and Direction by Lynn F. Reynolds.
Length, 4,355 Feet.

The Story

John Bard steals William Drew's infant son from his Western home and takes him to a large Eastern city. Years later Drew finds them and kills Bard. The young man, believing his rightful father has been murdered, trails the man who killed him, only to find out that he had been seeking to revenge himself upon his own father. There is a reconciliation, and the young man then marries Sally Fortune, a Western girl, with whom he had fallen in love.

Exploitation Angles: Play is all for Mix, telling that it holds its own with the others he has played. You do not have to do more than that with this star. They'll come to see what he does that is new, and won't care particularly about the story. You might get some extra pull out of the fact that this has more plot than usual, but the stunts will sell the picture.

"Chums"

There are so few short subjects distributed that have exactly the same high entertainment value for both children and grown-ups that "Chums" should be recorded as an event. It is a two-reel Century Comedy, featuring Baby Peggy and Brownie, the wonder dog, and provides some of the most delightful humor that has been seen in this sort of production in some time. The plot is so designed that the comedy seems to be natural and unforced and many of the situations the remarkable dog and the little star, who in this picture plays the role of a boy, are ingeniously contrived. But the chief feature of the comedy is the fact of its being perfectly suitable for a youthful or adult audience.—(Century)—F. T.

"The Roof Tree"

Fox Melodrama, with William Russell, Has Strong Sentimental Strain

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

A sentimental melodrama with a number of strong situations and with unusual emphasis on the love motive for this type of subject, is "The Roof Tree." A murder offers the startling opening, and as this is left unexplained until the latter part of the picture, there is some suspense throughout. The symbol of the roof tree, which chances to mark the spot of several dramatic occurrences, is rather forced, but accomplishes the purpose for which it was no doubt introduced, in adding a touch of poetic sentiment to an otherwise pugilistic drama. More attention has been given to driving home the punch at certain big moments than toward getting a smooth effect in knitting together the scenes, and making them plausible as well as entertaining.

William Russell is successful in a romantic, rugged role, showing the type of man who will give up his home and the wife he loves so as to save his sister from a prison sentence. He has a very good supporting cast in Sylvia Breamer, Robert Daly and Arthur Morrison.

The Cast

Ken Thornton.....William Russell
Sally McTurk.....Florence Deshon
Dorothy Harper.....Sylvia Breamer
Caleb Harper.....Robert Daly
Bass Rowlett.....Arthur Morrison
Jim Rowlett.....Al Fremont

Story by Charles Neville Buck.
Scenario by Jules G. Furthman.
Directed by Jack Dillon.
Length, 4,409 Feet.

The Story

Ken Thornton, escapes after the murder of his sister's husband, and goes under the name of Cal Maggard. His close resemblance to the Thornton family is recognized by Dorothy Harper and her father, who receive him as one of the family and grow to love him. Bass Rowlett, a neighbor, is jealous of the girl's love for Maggard and attempts to have him killed. Cal is seriously wounded and challenges Bass to a good fight as soon as he is strong enough. He tells the truth about his past to Harper and marries Dorothy. Shortly after the ceremony which has disclosed Cal's real name, Bass has his history investigated and bringing the sheriff, has Thornton arrested for murder. Thronton's sister, who had killed her husband in self-defense, confesses, after her brother has been sentenced, and both of them are released. Thornton settles his score with Bass and the latter is disgraced in the eyes of all.

Exploitation Angles: After you have sold the star, try to make interest in the question as to whether a sister or a wife has greater claims upon a man. Don't spill too much of the story, but give the general situation and put the question. You may be able to sell this as a contest idea.

"The Messenger"

This is the slappiest slap-stick comedy that has been exhibited in many seasons. But it is rough without being in no way vulgar, nor does it in any way contain anything objectionable. The knockabout comedy is fast and furious and the picture will meet with unqualified approval where audiences like their comedy rough and tumble.

"Morals"

Decidedly Worth While Picture, With May McAvoy the Star—Paramount Release.

Reviewed by Fritz Tidden.

"Morals" is an especially fine picture from any angle that interests you most, but from the standpoint of the exhibitor it can be said that its chief feature is its real human appeal. It embodies this quality to such a strong degree that it is no snap judgment nor over emphasis to state unqualifiedly that "Morals" will meet with success wherever shown. It is the sort of picture that meets with general response.

The original source of the story interpreted in this Realart production distributed by Paramount is William J. Locke's eminently popular novel "The Morals of Marcus Ordeyne," which also was dramatized for the speaking stage and was a popular play. The book has been used before as the basis of a picture, which was released under the benefit of a title more nearly like the original. But comparisons are unnecessary, as the sole concern in this instance is the entertainment value of the present adaption, which is sure fire.

The qualities that go to make up this last fact embrace every department from the story all through the entire course of production to the editing. The plot resembles a silk thread, thin but thoroughly strong enough to hold up the interest; but it is the manner of treatment that has enhanced its power, just as it was in the original novel. It contains genuine sentiment without being sentimental.

William D. Taylor has staged the production with extreme good taste and an eye for all the possibilities to bring out the human appeal. However, much of the charm of the picture rests in the piquant appeal and exquisite (if such a qualification may be used) performance of Mae McAvoy in the leading role. And she receives highly efficient support from a competent cast, among which William P. Carleton should be singled out for special mention because of the prominence of his part if for nothing else. Also it should be mentioned that the dramatic construction is expert.

Sir Marcus Ordeyne.....William P. Carleton
Sebastian Pasquale.....Wm. E. Lawrence
Judith Mainwaring.....Kathlyn Williams
Antoinette.....Bridgeta Clark

Hamdi.....Nicholas de Ruiz
Mrs. McMurray.....Marian Skinner

Adapted from William J. Locke's novel and play.
Scenario by Julia Crawford Ivers.
Directed by William D. Taylor.
Length, five reels.

The Story

Carlotta is an English girl who has been reared in a Turkish harem. To escape a distasteful marriage she escapes with an English adventurer, and finally reaches London. Here the man is killed and the girl is destitute. She attaches herself to Sir Marcus Ordeyne in a park and begs his protection. He takes her home out of pity and finds no way of disposing of her. Her naive charm and utter innocence soon win his staid bachelor heart and he plans to marry her. Judith Mainwaring, a woman of the world who has long loved Sir Marcus, tells Carlotta he merely pities her and is marrying her to stop unpleasant gossip. Carlotta then runs away with Pasquale, one of Sir Marcus' friends, though she loves Sir Marcus. Months later Mrs. Mainwaring meets Carlotta in Paris, and ashamed, tells the girl the truth, that Sir Marcus is distracted and still searching for her. Carlotta then goes back to the kindly benefactor who has wakened her soul and taught her what love means.

"Daughter of the Night"

Foreign Production Dealing With Tyrannical Russia Is Picturesque

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

L. & H. Enterprises several months ago announced the acquisition of a new foreign subject that they entitled "A Daughter of The Night." The title has box-office value, but there must be something more than a good title to satisfy the patrons of today. And in this respect this picture is not lacking, although the cutting is not quite up to the standard. However, there are numerous honest-to-goodness thrills. Dealing with a theme that recalls days when "Darkest Russia" was at the height of its popularity in America's 10-20-30-centers, this production tells a story equally as fascinating, but a trifle more up to date.

While the photography at times is blurry, as a whole this feature is picturesque and unfolds some particularly beautiful scenes. The interiors are elaborate and luxuriously furnished. We would not say that this picture was recently made, but if your audiences like good melodrama with plenty of adventure and enough romance to give the picture a heart, you can afford to overlook this, although the price asked for rental must be reasonable. It's not a high class picture, but it has good entertainment value and that is what the public wants. The players, all unknown here, do good work throughout, particularly the young woman assuming the titular role.

The Cast

The Daughter of the Night.....By Herself

Length 7 reels.

The Story

A young Russian is taken into custody by the brutal Czar's soldiers and imprisoned. In prison she makes the acquaintance of many radicals who are subjected to punishment that has crippled most of them. The girl serves as sister and mother to most of them. Finally, unable to endure the treatment any longer the prisoners conspire to escape, but this plot is discovered. In time, however, the girl is freed. She locates an old friend and meets many radicals who are planning a revolution. Her beauty attracts the attention of members of the Palace household. A Grand Duke makes love to her. She encourages him. Finally, she induces the latter to destroy warrants for the arrest of her radical friends and later learns that the Grand Duke has set a trap for the revolutionists who are about to strike.

A meeting between the girl and Grand Duke is fixed for a later date. On that day the revolutionists mobilize their forces and start their attack. As the Grand Duke is making love to the girl, the revolutionists attack the palace and demand the lives of members of the royal family. Meanwhile, the Duke is making violent love to the girl and is about to attack her when several radicals rush in. A fight results.

Outside the revolutionists mistake the inactivity of the girl as traitorous and threaten her. But it is too late for the girl, falls down dead, a suicide, as her friends tell the howling mob that only because of the patriotic work of the dead woman was the successful attack made possible and Russia freed.

"Playthings of Destiny"

Anita Stewart in Role With Great Emotional Depth Released by First National.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

An entertaining theme, a lavish production, and a sufficient play upon the emotions to remind one constantly that the story is intensely human, afford great selling possibilities to "Playthings of Destiny." If the appeal to the sympathies impresses some as being too poignant, too protracted, it is equally certain to find a response with the majority and particularly with women, as the subject is primarily a wonan's problem, handled with understanding.

From the standpoint of the spectacular there are many splendid effects. Two examples of this are the two storm scenes, the blinding blizzard which ushers in the drama, and the tropical hurricane which concurs with the big climax at the end. The scenes in the "Jamaica" residence are conducted with much pomp and ceremony and the settings are especially sumptuous.

Anita Stewart has probably never before sounded the depths of emotional sincerity as she does, as the unhappy mother of "Dicky," played delightfully by Richard Hedrick. At times it seems as if more minute direction might have featured her personal attractiveness with improved effect. An error regarding the parentage of the child lends such absurdness to certain situations that it is liable to criticism. The cast has been chosen with fine judgment, and no one more fittingly, than Walter McGrail who in addition to being a perfect type is a very good actor.

The Cast

Julie Laneau.....Anita Stewart
Geoffrey Arnold.....Herbert Rawlinson

Length, 6,200 feet.

The Story

Alice who believes herself married to Geoffrey Arnold is told by some one that another woman is his wife. Hoping never to see him again, she flees from the cabin which they have been occupying while up in the Canadian woods, and is lost in a blinding snow storm. She is found and sheltered for several weeks by Hubert Randolph, a Canadian officer. He falls in love with her and when he offers to marry her and take her to Jamaica, she accepts. He grows so absorbed in his political ambitions that his wife and her small son soon become of secondary interest. Presently when he expects to entertain a celebrated guest who can assist him in becoming governor, he asks Alice's assistance in making his visit a social success. Alice learns that the guest is none other than Geoffrey and refuses. They are brought together however and she learns that she is really married to Geoffrey. Hubert accepts her explanations and gives her up.

"Shams of Society"

An R. C. Picture of Average Interest, With a Surprise Ending.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Unique and unexpected is the ending of "Shams of Society," the Walsh-Fielding production distributed by R-C Pictures Corporation. The story is a variation of the neglected wife theme, as in this case the husband is not too engrossed in business or interested in other women, but fails to provide his wife with cash although he pays the bills.

Aside from the ending, which shows in a favorable light the character previously painted as a villain, the production is of only average interest. The production is not well directed as there is in a number of scenes a lack of definite action, and considerable inconsequential matter, not of vital instance to the story, has been introduced. For instance much footage has been given to showing in detail a "bar-mitzvah" party, the ceremonial when a young Jewish boy is confirmed.

The story while teaching a moral lesson is not forcefully told and is not as all-embracing as the title would indicate, the "sham" being narrowed to practically one instance. There is considerable Jewish atmosphere to the production, and by contrast the Jewish characters are shown in a more favorable light than the others.

There is a capable cast headed by Barbara Castleton, Montagu Love and Macey Harlam, and including Lucille Lee Stewart and Julia Swayne Gordon.

Length, Six reels.

The Story

Herbert Porter believes that if he pays the bills, his wife has no need for cash. This places his wife in an embarrassing situation with her friends and she seeks to secure ready money by visiting a gambling place. Losing, she pawns her jewels and sells some of her gowns, and finally steals a ring from a visiting Indian Prince. Milton Manning, a young Hebrew loan broker, whose wealth has admitted him to the same social set, to whose establishment she takes the ring, confronts her and agrees not to tell on her if she will accede to his wishes. He takes her to a lonely house and the surprise comes when he brings in his sisters and fiance and has Helen Porter tell them of the sham and mockery of the social circle in which they aspire to move. The husband who has followed, sees the error of his ways and all ends happily.

"In the Fog"

Ingenious Detective Yarn Interpreted by Good Cast—Released by George Kleine

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

One of the most fascinating detective stories that has been screened for some time is George Kleine's "In the Fog." It gets a magnetic hold on the spectator from the start, and has an ingenious method of unfoldment, introducing and dropping various clues at the psychological moments so that the interest is profound from beginning to end. The acting is dignified and fine, and while typical of the old school in being somewhat more deliberate than the modern style carries a certain weight that adds rather than detracts.

A good example of how to handle a story within a story without losing realism, the picture has an atmospheric opening showing four unacquainted gentlemen at an English club who pass the time away listening to a thrilling detective yarn, told in two installments by two different members of the party. The reason for telling it is saved until the end when it is aptly revealed. Skillful photography and lighting add greatly to the effect of mystery.

The Story

Sir Andrew, one of several distinguished men present at an English Club, is in favor of a Naval Increase bill which the rest are opposing. His presence, as head of the House of Commons, at Parliament that evening will mean the passage of the bill. Lieut. Ripley Sears startles all present by relating some thrilling occurrences of the night before during which he was involved in a sensational murder. He escaped in the fog and reported what had happened to the police. From this point on, a young attorney who is present takes up the story and draws it to a thrilling close. At the unexpected moment, however, it is revealed that it was all fictitious, just a pretext to keep Sir Andrew from attending Parliament. Hereupon Sir Andrew remarks that he had already made his speech and that the bill had already passed.

"The Chauffeur"

Clyde Cook finds a generous outlet for his particular style of humor in this recent Fox release, "The Chauffeur." As employee of the "Put-and-Shake" Taxicab Company, he finds some difficulty in getting a passenger. The first part of the film is taken up with his attempts, violent and seductive, to inveigle some one to ride in his car. There is much spontaneous comedy in this and what follows, including primarily the antics of the flivver when he does finally get someone to occupy the back seat. As the picture progresses he contracts the usual flock of enemies that are wished upon the screen comedian, and when they assume the guise of the Ku Klux Klan, action becomes screamingly funny. "The Chauffeur" is a picture that should amuse any type of audience.—M. K.

"Country Chickens"

Louise Fazenda, Baby John Emmerich, Jr., Chester Conklin, Jack Duffy and Teddy, the Sennett Dane, all contribute toward hilarious, slapstick fun in "Country Chickens," second in the series of Punch Comedies, released by Educational, the first of which was "The Love Egg." Such a cast practically guarantees plenty of fun—and the fun is forthcoming. Without the limitations prescribed by a plot, the comedy supplies a great number of enjoyable "gags," some of them new and all amusing. Just for example, one of the most mirth-provoking is where Louise Fazenda, as cashier in a country store, works an improvised carrier consisting of clothesline and a jug. Another is where Conklin, as a nut inventor, devises a method of stealing chickens by picking them up while running his automobile at full speed. It's great fun.—S. S.

"A Movie Trip Through Filmland"

Dealing with any other subject, this would be an advertising film for the Kodak Company, but because it does deal with the making of film it is accepted and acceptable. The picture shows the manufacture of raw stock at Kodak Park, ending with the statement that the annual output of film would six times girdle the earth. Then follows a panoramic picture of the earth's surface with the six strands of film, like telegraph wires stretching eastward from Kodak Park to Los Angeles, where the panorama is interrupted to give a picture of the panorama being made. Then the trip is taken up until the park is again reached. At the Rialto Theatre, New York, the film closed to a good round of applause and should be of interest to any audience.—E. W. S.

"Torchy Takes a Chance"

Trying the lottery to win an automobile proves a good subject for continuous comedy in Educational's latest release starring Johnny Hines. Getting the lucky card only to lose it again, and to chase it through all its difficult wanderings, always being just one step behind it, the hero of this active tale is about to drown his grief in the ocean, when, behold, he finds the fateful ticket in a fish's mouth. While at no point hilarious, the subject is a good example of the type of comedy that has a plan with a definite objective. M. K.

"Out of the Inkwell"

Warner Brothers' Max Fleischer animated cartoon novelty, "Out Of The Inkwell" is one of the most vividly interesting subjects "The Fish," The Dresden Doll" and "The Mosquito"—were shown the writer and all were cleverly put together. These one-reelers entail considerable efforts in producing, for certainly the antics of the clown are realistic, even to the movements of muscles. The "stunts" are originally diversifying. They should find a happy audience at any house.—R. F.

"Willing Captives"

That wild animals are often content in captivity is evidenced in the Kineto Review, "Willing Captives," where denizens of the wilds are shown playfully amusing themselves behind bars. But among those whose temper gets the best of them in confinement are shown the gorillas, which are seen gnashing their teeth and striving to bend the bars of their cage.

However, the bears, the leopards and the lions are seen taking their imprisonment in happier mood, playfully pawing at each other with sheathed claws.—T. S. daP.

"The Guttersnipe"

Universal Production Starring Gladys Walton Combines Satire With Melodrama.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

A satire on the type of romantic stories appearing in a certain type of popular magazines, combined with the love story of an Irish girl of the tenements is "The Guttersnipe," the newest Universal production starring Gladys Walton. It is a picture of ordinary program quality and its strongest appeal will be to romantic young girls, and there is a question whether it will appeal strongly to this class as the magazine story has been treated as broad satire.

There are really two parallel stories, as the magazine story is visualized, the girl picturing herself as the little milk maid and soda clerk hero as the English Lord. The two stories have the effect of dividing the interest which never rises to any great height and the manner in which the little Irish girl gets pointers from the novelist which aid her in helping her lover is not altogether convincing.

The production is of the vehicle type, presenting Gladys Walton as a tough little girl from a fighting family, who gets into several scraps herself and is always ready to fight. Although the star is cast in a congenial role and makes the most of her opportunities, the production as a whole is below the standard of several of Miss Walton's previous vehicles.

There is a well selected cast headed by Jack Perrin, who portray their roles satisfactorily.

Dennis O'Day.....Walter Perr.
Mrs. O'Day.....Kate Price
Tom Gilroy.....Jack Perrin
Sam Rosen.....Sydney Franklin
Lady Clarissa.....Carmen Phillips
Lord Bart.....Ed. Cecil

Clarence Phillips.....Eugene Corey
Sally ..... Lorraine Weiler
Gregory.....Christian J. Frank

Directed by Dallas Fitzgerald.
Story by Percival Wilde.
Scenario by Arthur Clifton.
Photography by Milton Moore.
Length, 4,225 Feet.

The Story

A shop girl of New York's "Little Ireland," Maisie by name, dashes into a street fight to aid a young man in dress clothes. Though badly beaten, she pictures him as Lord Lytton, the hero of a story which she is reading by instalments. The young man turns out to be a soda clerk. Maizie permits his attentions and together they read the yarn of English nobility. When her beau is arrested as a counterfeiter, Maizie turns to the latest episode of the tale for advice and through this step the ending of their own love epic is achieved.

Exploitation Angles: Concentrate upon the star, sell her as a star and let the story slide. If they like Miss Walton, they will like the story. If you sell the story they may not care so much for it.

"Pardon Me"

In this Fox feature Johnny Salvo as a romantic laundry boy and puts him through a series of slapstick stunts, not especially different from what has been seen before. The best angle for comedy is offered by "Gwendolyn," his horse, who has a jealous habit of following her master at an intimate distance while he is on his various social pursuits. Johnny makes a swift metamorphosis from wagon driver to Count, upon discovering a dress suit in his wagon, and meets the lower four hundred at a ball that evening. The affair ends when one of the guests recognizes his suit. M. K.

"Rent Free"

Wallace Reid in Lighthearted Paramount Comedy.

Reviewed by Sumner Smith.

Anxious seekers of apartments—and there are many of them these days—won't find a practical solution of the home problem in Paramount's "Rent Free" but they will find an hour's relief from their perplexities. This picture provides comedy of the sort easiest to follow, for at no time does it tax the well-known gray matter, depending on a number of highly amusing situations and the clean, wholesome good looks of the star. Wallace Reid isn't even called upon to act, it seems; he's merely a lighthearted chap taking daring chances with convention.

The picture gets under way slowly, but with such promise of the most unconventional complications that a suspense is created and maintained. In about the middle, things really begin to happen and the rising action is fast and furious until the final clinch.

There's no depth to "Rent Free," but a lot of laughter, and so it admirably fulfills its sole intention—that of amusing. The star's support is good. Lila Lee, like Reid, isn't called on to express any particular emotions and so she merely looks satisfactorily charming. Gertrude Short, a chubby person, makes the most of her comedy bits as the girl with an insatiable appetite. Lucien Littlefield scores by burlesquing a whiskered Blue Law gent persuaded to pose in an emergency as a butler. The subtitles are excellent. The picture is the first directed by Howard Higgin, for many years production manager for Cecil B. DeMille.

"Desert Blossoms"

Likable Role of the Typical American Hero Assigned to William Russell in Fox Feature.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Quite unlike what the title suggests, "Desert Blossoms" is a hard story of a man's battle for a successful business reputation without many romantic touches, and with scarcely any apparent relation to the title. As with most of William Russell features, it is a man's picture and has a certain strength and enough intrigue to insure its success with admirers of this star. The story of an honest man's struggle to live down a false reputation always calls for the qualities of courage and real manliness that accompany every first-rate hero, and it has been interestingly presented in this feature.

The irrigation construction works on the desert have been staged with realistic effect and another striking feature is the sand storm. This culminates in the cabin scene where the two men and the girl meet, the cabin finally being wrecked to the ground through the violence of the storm. This is good melodrama but might have been made more credible if the violence of the storm in other quarters had prepared for this final smash. As it is, the collapse of this particular shack seems a little far-fetched. The acting is convincing, the star as usual dominating the scene, and attractively assisted by Helen Ferguson.

"The Original Golfer"

The gentle art of swatting the golf ball as it was supposedly demonstrated by very old-timers is cleverly and laughably illustrated by Tony Sarg in his Almanac, "The Original Golfer." The artist goes back to the days of dinosaurus and other such mammals, and we see them serving as caddies and wavers of the flag on the greens. Modern followers of the pastime will learn from the picture that, while styles in golf clubs have changed, human nature hasn't so much, for Sarg shows the "golf widow" and, oh dear, the nineteenth hole. The animated drawings are extremely effective—some of the most artistic the artist has yet shown. There's novelty in every scene.—S. S.

PROJECTION

By F. H. RICHARDSON

The Transverter

About six years ago this department made the first announcement of the Transverter, manufactured by the Hertner Electric Company, Cleveland, Ohio, which appeared in any trade paper. It was then a good machine, and we said so. Its operating plan was a new one, as applied to projection, and a good one and we said so. Since that time its manufacturers have gone to great pains in perfecting the machine, and with such effect that the demand has steadily grown through the years until it is now but justice to say they are used in theatres scattered all over the United States and Canada, and very many are used in other countries.

Since the introduction of the Transverter, we have, from time to time, described various changes and improvements, but it seems to us, a general re-description of the whole machine would now be of at least sufficient interest to justify the use of space, so here goes.

When the Transverter first came into the field there was a strong demand for a single arc machine. This was because of the fact that at that time the general practice was to operate, or rather to connect, the two projector arcs in multiple, "stealing over" at the time of change-over.

This was an undesirable practice, because almost always there was some evidence of the act on the screen, and many times the dimming and discolorations were very bad indeed.

True a double arc motor generator was being used, but until the advent of the Transverter the double arc machine of the series type was unknown, at least in motion picture work. Another objection to the double arc machines previously used was that they generated at from 70 to 110 volts (mostly 70), and resistance had to be employed to reduce the voltage, which meant waste.

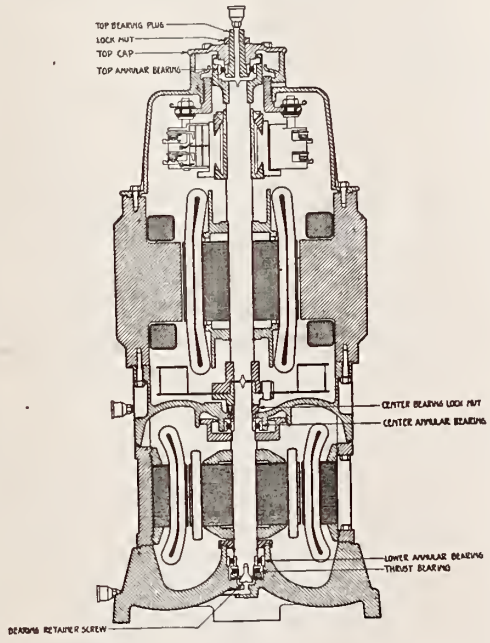
In Response to Strong Demand

The Transverter appeared in response to what was a very strong demand for a double arc machine which would carry two arcs during the period of change over, and do it economically. The Hertner folks thought the series type was the answer—the Transverter was evolved, and be it said that its general design and construction remains unaltered after six years of existence, which speaks well for the knowledge of its designer.

The machine is of the vertical type, meaning that the unit comprising the bipolar D. C. generator, its commutator at the upper end, is mounted above the A. C. motor, the two shafts being joined by a coupling having a limited capacity for self alignment.

Ball bearings are used throughout. Instead of the armatures being mounted on, or carried by two bearings, one at either end, as is the case with most close-coupled machines, there are three, all annular ball bearings. Two of them are on the motor shaft and the third at the upper end of the generator shaft. The lower end of the combined shafts rides on a ball thrust bearing, which carries both armatures and their shafts—in fact the entire rotating elements of the machine.

There can be no question as to the excellence of the ball bearing. That it will stand tremendous overload and abuse is amply proven by even the most superficial examination of automobile bearing practices. They are perhaps the most, and certainly are one of the most efficient mechanical devices yet evolved.



HERTNER TRANSVERTER
Illustration shows structural details

Proper mounting demands that the inner ball race be held rigidly in place on the shaft, but that the outer race be so mounted that while it permits of no radial play, still does allow the race to slide sidewise on the shaft to compensate for unequal expansion, vibration etc. This allows of the outer race to so position itself with relation to the inner race that all possibility of end thrust is avoided. The outer race being a free, or "sucking" fit, it will also creep, or slowly revolve, which has a beneficial effect on the life of the bearing.

A Big Advantage

To best accomplish these desirable results the inner race, instead of depending on friction with the shaft, is held between a shoulder on the shaft on one side and a collar or nut on the other, the race being tightly clamped between the two. Another advantage found in this construction is that the average repair man outside the construction factory will be better able to handle a bearing mounted in this way, than a bearing which depends on a fit which must be accurate within two to three ten thousandths of an inch.

As will be seen by examining the illustration, the bearings are all well protected from dust and dirt.

In the bottom of the motor shaft a screw is set, which serves to hold the various parts of the ball thrust bearing loosely in their correct position in assembling, and until the shaft is finally set into position in the bearing, whereupon the bearing will rest on its seat and relieve the screw of all pressure.

A Panel With Each Machine

A panel goes with each machine, and if it be a "panel A" it carries a voltmeter and an ammeter, also a field regulator with which to control amperage at the arc. The ammeter and voltmeter are connected to D. C., hence show arc voltage and amperage. The field regulator has sufficient range to enable the projectionist to reduce arc amperage down to as low as one half normal flow.

Panel B, in addition to the regulator, the voltmeter and ammeter, also carries a pair of special quick-break switches with which to open the arc lamp circuits.

Reverting to structural matters, examining the illustration you will see that the top bearing is seated on a steel plug, the upper end of which carries a grease cup. This plug is hollow and is threaded so that the bearing is held in place by firmly tightening down the nut above.

The center bearing is held between a shoulder on the armature shaft and a nut above the bearing. The bottom bearing is held between a similar shoulder on the rotor shaft and the thrust bearing below, so that the weight of the rotating elements (armature and rotor) secures the annular bearing. Grease cups for each of these bearings will be found on the side of the machine.

Centrifugal Type Fan

The propeller type of ventilation fan has been replaced by a fan of centrifugal type, which has greatly increased the air circulation; also instead of drawing the air through the machine from top to bottom, it is drawn in at top and bottom and exhausted at the sides. This has the advantage of drawing fresh cool air through both motor and generater.

Electrically the machine design has not been changed. The generator is shunt wound and fitted with interpole fields for commutation. The brushes are rocked to a position where the magnetic effect of the armature on the field is such that the current will remain practically constant over the entire working range of voltage, and that is a very wide range too. The interlopers can be shifted, and are so located as to secure sparkless commutation once the brushes are set for proper performance. These adjustments are, of course, made at the factory, and are permanent. THEY SHOULD NEVER BE THEREAFTER ALTERED.

After the Transverter had been introduced, the growth of theatres brought about a demand for increased projection current. The general demand was for 75 amperes, with many asking 100 and a few even as much as 125 amperes, the filling of which demand was arranged for by the manufacturer.

The Transverter today is an unqualifiedly successful machine of the motor generator type. It has stood the test of time, and this department is glad to again give it its indorsement and approval, just as we are glad to give approval and indorsement to any piece of theatre equipment which is of PROVEN WORTH.

Genuine merit is what counts with this department and its editor. Adverse criticism is always an unpleasant, though sometimes a necessary task, and the approval of worthy things a real pleasure.

In the Game

Dabney C. Jones, Projectionist Capitan Theatre, Roswell, New Mexico, writes:

Dear Mr. Richardson: For some time I have been wanting to write a few lines concerning the theatre of which I am Chief Projectionist.

Have been in the game nearly a year, and like the work fine. Our theatre is not very large. Only seats 500.

We have had a lot of trouble with our screen. It has spots all over it which show up badly. It was installed last July. We want your advice concerning it. Mr. Trieb, the Managing Director, has written the manufacturer about it. They want him to send it in to be repaired, but it is up in a way that would require much labor and time to take it down.

What we want to know, is there not some way we can work it over without taking it down?

I am using two Powers 6B projectors. Just got through installing a Martin converter, which is working fine and giving plenty of light. My distance of projection is 131 feet, with a 12 foot picture. We have a photoplayer, which was installed after the theatre had opened. Have one of your handbooks, which has helped me out several times. We take the Moving Picture World and I always look at the Projection Department for something which will help me. Have had trouble with glass in lamphouse port holes. Smoked a piece of clear mica with a match and my troubles are all over. This, I believe is a little trick which may help others.

Thanks for Mica Hint

Backing up on your remarks, on the principle that the last shall be first and the first shall be last, many thanks for the smoked mica hint. It is passed along for others to consider.

As to the blank you sent in, it is none of mine, and I most emphatically do NOT believe in it. That a projectionist should take the best possible care of film he receives—yes. That he should pledge himself to do exchange inspection work free of charge—NO.

As to the screen: No, there is no way you can get a satisfactory job by trying to renew the surface in your theatre—and get the same type of surface, I mean. What I would advise might not suit you at all. If you do try it, do so absolutely on your own responsibility, and NOT because of my advice.

Under the circumstances, were the screen mine I would have a painter there when the show closes at night, with a ladder so constructed that he can reach the screen surface without leaning the ladder against it. I would have him previously examine the surface and determine whether it should be seized with shellac. In fact I think I would take no chances, but would so size it. I would then give a tolerably heavy coat of paint mixed as follows: white lead and white zinc half and half, mixed to a consistency which will "cover" fairly well, with one third boiled linseed oil and two thirds turpentine, adding just enough ultramarine or cobalt blue to give it a slight shade of blue when in the pot.

Keep Theatre Warm

Keep the theatre warm and the paint should be dry enough to allow of a second coat before the show opens next day, though it will be better to wait one day if you think you can get by with the screen in that shape.

Next coat should be one third white lead and two thirds zinc, and one quarter boiled linseed oil and three quarters turpentine, with the same tint of blue. This will be dry enough for a third coat in twelve hours. The third coat should be all white zinc and very nearly all turpentine—just a dash of boiled oil for a binder. Some tint of blue.

Probably three coats will be plenty. If a fourth is needed, give it, but that should be decided before the third coat is put on, because if there is to be a fourth coat the third should have a bit more oil, though not much.

There, friend Jones. That is what I would do, under the circumstances, if the screen and theatre were MINE. You made a mistake in installing a screen in that way. No screen is a permanant institution, insofar as its surface is concerned. They must all be renewed after a time. The surface I have described will give you a better difusion than your present surface, which will be desirable if your theatre is wide and not so desirable if it be a narrow house. The surface should be thoroughly scrubbed and re-painted at least once a year. If it were mine I would do it once every six months. A DULL SCREEN SURFACE IS NOT GOOD. It does not pay to have one. The necessary expense of sharpening the screen surface is, in my opinion, far more than justified, and once in six months is about right for most surfaces.

Very likely the Managing Director will not feel inclined to view my advice with favor. Well, it don't cost him one blooming cent, and he can therefore feel perfectly free to—take the screen down and send it to the factory to be resurfaced. That is THE alternative.

Are You Working by "Guess" or Do You Employ Up-to-Date Methods?

You demand that your employer keep his equipment in good order and up ot date. He owes it both to himself and to you to do so, but you owe it to him to keep abreast with the times in knowledge and in your methods.

The lens chart (two in one, 11x17 inches, on heavy paper for framing) is in successful use by hundreds of progressive projectionists.

Duluth Men Do Well

Some time ago I said that inasmuch as Duluth local union, 509, was composed of progressive men who had done what they could to advance themselves in knowledge of their profession, I would watch what, if any effect it might have on conditions in Duluth when it came to making a new contract with the exhibitors.

I also said that if it had no effect there and in some other places I named, I would be obliged to agree that the exhibitor did not appreciate an endeavor of men to fit themselves to give high-class service.

The following letter comes from Local 509:

Brother Richardson: At our last regular meeting it was the wish of the men that you be informed how Local 509 made out with the 1921-1922 wage scale, so I am sending you the facts. Our reason for sending it was the article in the department in which you said you would watch our local.

The scale for 1920-1921 was as follows: In ten and fifteen cent houses, $42.50 for seven hours. For 17 and 25 cent houses, $45.00 for seven hours. For vaudeville houses, and all houses charging more than 25 cents, $47.50 for seven hours. For suburban houses running six or seven nights and not to exceed two matinees, $37.50. All overtime pro rata.

The 1921-1922 scale is forty-five dollars ($45.00) for all houses, seven hours a day. Overtime 92 cents per hour.

Well, Duluth, considering that you have obtained this, and obtained it without a fight, in times when bread lines are long and suffering more or less acute all over the land, certainly you have done well. Just how much the progressiveness of your local, or its members, rather, had to do with the matter, I do not know, but surely and certainly the facts that you have been progressive, and that the exhibitors of Duluth know you have, helped your cause. To deny this would be, it seems to me, equivalent to disputing the fact that water is wet.

I am obliged to you for sending the scale. I would appreciate a statement from your local as to exactly what you believe the effect of progressiveness was. May be hard to estimate, but surely you have some views on the matter. May I be favored?

Not New

R. O. Hardin, projectionist, Bijou Theatre, Greenville, South Carolina, arises to say:

Have read with considerable interest the discussions in the department regarding signals for change-over. We have a projectionist here in Greenville, named George Bohlen, who has worked out an idea, which to my notion has solved the problem of change-over signal. His play will be effective and will not in any way damage the film.

The instrument, or device is a small affair. It consists of a single cell dry battery, a "buzzer" and a hard steel roller, all of which are attached to a compact base. It is attached as a whole, to the magazine. on the left side, with the roller in posltio.1 on the back side of the film, between the sprocket and the magazine valve rollers. The electric buzzer is made to sound at the proper time by affixing a strip of contact tape to the edge of the film, which makes electric contact between the roller before named and the magazine valve rollers. The contact strip is cemented on the film before the run.

I have written because I am sure you will be interested in this new idea, which I regard as excellent.

Yes, but, Brother Hardin, that is just it. It is NOT new. If I had time to search the department files I could find it described therein as long ago as eight years—or maybe even a year earlier than that.

Also it has been described once or twice thereafter. It works, yes, but was not popular. One objection is that the inspectors will not, as a rule, approve of any make and break contact at the magazines—or approve of any sort of electrical connection with the magazines at all, for that matter.

Sorry, Friend Hardin, but while I thank you sincerely for the good intent in sending it in, those are the facts in the case.

Ready—

EASTMAN FILM CEMENT

Cut where you will, splice with Eastman Film Cement and for all practical purposes the reel's original resistance to strain both in projection and re-wind is restored. The splice is secure against break or buckle.

Eastman-made and Eastman-tested as the presence of this seal on the container testifies:

Eastman Film Cement is the only cement that may be used successfully with either Regular or Safety film. It may be obtained in 1 oz. and 16 oz. bottles, and gallon containers.

St. Louis Contemplates Expending Over $12,000,000 for New Picture Theatres

WITH General Prosperity in the wings awaiting his cue to take the spotlight, a building survey of St. Louis indicates there are picture and vaudeville theatres and other buildings for the film industry in contemplation valued at from $12,000,000 to $15,500,000. The majority of these structures will be started when construction costs reach a near-normal basis and general industrial conditions improve.

In the Greater St. Louis region, including East St. Louis, Edwardsville, Granite City, Clayton, Kirkwood and St. Charles, there are other structures under consideration valued at almost $1,000,000.

$2,500,000 Since October, 1920

Since October, 1920, picture theatre improvements costing $2,500,000 have been made in St. Louis, including the Missouri, Delmonte, Criterion, New Capitol and Wellston Theatres, while in Greater St. Louis there was such handsome additions as the Grand Theatre, Alton; Erber's Theatre, East St. Louis; New Lincoln, Belleville; Oh Gee, Edwardsville, and the Ozark, Webster Groves, representing an investment of $775,000.

St. Louis, a city of more diversified industries than any in the country, has already shown distinct signs of recovering from the industrial depression.

The development of the Mississippi River as a great inland canal, the Roberts process of converting Illinois soft coal into metalurgical coke, and the "discovery" of St. Louis by the automobile industry, indicates a phenomenal development in the Mound City within the next few years. With hundreds of thousands of new inhabitants the city naturally will need new amusement places, as it is already short of high class picture, vaudeville and dramatic theatres.

The Shubert interests contemplate two new theatres for St. Louis. On a recent visit Lee Shubert announced that he would open a new vaudeville house here next year. If present plans are completed it would cost $1,250,000 and adjoin the Jefferson Hotel, across Locust street from the Shubert-Jefferson Theatre. It is an open secret the Shuberts are considering a $750,000, 3,500-seat theatre for the Grand avenue-Olive street district. The downtown place would seat 4,000 persons.

Recently the Orpheum Circuit management announced that the Mississippi, a 4,000-seat house costing $1,500,000, would be erected on a downtown site already selected. It is stated on good authority that a Junior Orpheum house may grace an ideal corner not far from Grand and Olive street. This house would seat 3,500 and cost $1,000,000 to $1,250,000.

Recently Charles H. Thimmig, owner of the Mid Way Theatre, Grand and Washington avenues, announced plans for a theatre-office-apartment structure costing upwards of $1,250,000 to occupy the Mid Way Theatre site. If plans mature, a picture house with accommodations for 4,000 persons would be operated in Thimmig's structure by a local company affiliated with a leading eastern producer.

For a Million-Dollar House

Marcus Loew many months ago purchased a site at Eighth street and Washington avenue for his State Theatre, to cost not less than $1,000,000 and seat 4,400 persons. Several days ago, on a visit here, Loew stated this building would not start until construction costs come down.

The Famous Players Missouri Corporation plans to go forward with the completion of the Missouri Theatre building, a thirteen-story hotel-apartment structure. Work was stopped shortly after the Missouri opened because of high wages and materials.

Other structures under consideration include, a film exchange building at Beaumont and Olive streets, costing upwards of $500,000 by Isaac Hedges of Washington University, a 2,500-seat house on the south side of Chestnut near Eighteenth street, costing $500,000, Central Union Amusement Company, owners; and John Karzin's new 2,400-seat house near Sixteenth and Market streets, to cost $225,000. Karzin announced his plans several months ago.

The Trocadero, modeled after the famed amusement palace, will be erected on the Delmar Theatre site at Delmar and Euclid avenues if Hector M. E. Pasmezoglu's plans are carried out. It would cost $1,000,000 to $1,200,000. He already owns the Congress, Delmar and Criterion Theatres.

William H. Green recently requested the City Plan Commission to permit a twenty-story film exchange office building on the triangle at Olive, Lindell, Channing and Theresa avenues. He plans to spend $1,000,000.

Koplar to Build Big House

West End houses contemplated include a $100,000 house by Sol and Nat Koplar near Hamilton and Easton avenues, seating 1,600; another house in the same vicinity to be owned by a syndicate headed by George R. Hart of the Hamilton Airdome, to cost $150,000 and seat 2,000; also a house for 1,500 persons costing $100,000 by Sam C. Gossom, president of the Hodiamont Bank, at Bartmer and Hodiamont avenues, and the Aubert Theatre, Aubert and Waston avenues, adjoining the Aubert Airdome. The Aubert Photo Play Company plans to spend $250,000 on this theatre. It would seat 3,000 in a balcony and parquet floor.

It is rumored that Universal may erect a $250,000 first run house in the Grand avenue district. William Sacks, a local banker, represents an eastern picture concern that plans a downtown house to cost upwards of $600,000. Business men in the vicinity of Grand and Meramec street have $100,000 to spend on a theatre there when costs come down. Plans for the Highpointe Theatre, Clayton and Skinner avenues, to cost $100,000, have been announced.

Recently minority stockholders in the company owning the Hippodrome informed the Circuit Court they had an offer of $12,000 annual rental for that showhouse, which has been dark for several years. The prospective tenant plans to spend $70,000 in improvements.

Construction of the Manchester Theatre, Arco and Manchester avenues, and Sam Hamburg's new film exchange building near Leonard avenue and Olive street, are progressing rapidly. The Manchester will seat 1,700 and cost $100,000. The film structure will represent an investment of about $100,000.

New theatres are also planned for East St. Louis, Clayton, University City, Kirkwood, Edwardsville and Granite City.

REST ROOM OF BILLINGS' LIBERTY

Wicker furniture, bird cages and a fountain filled with gold fish renders this room uniquely comfortable

Two Simplexes Furnish the Projection of Billing's Fine New Liberty Theatre

THE new Liberty Theatre recently opened in Billings, Montana, is the pride of the city, and contains many features which Jensen and Von Herberg, the owners, consider improvements over those of any of their fine theatres in Seattle, Portland, Tacoma, or Yakima.

The architect of the house was H. Ryan, who plans all of Jensen and Von Herberg houses and who drew the plans for the Blue Mouse, John Hamrick's Seattle theatre.

All in Good Taste

The building is finished in gray brick trimmed with ornamental tile, and the flatness of the facade is artistically relieved by windows cut in the Roman style. A huge marquee extends the full length of the building, and above it is the "Liberty" sign, which operates on a flash system. At either end of the marquee is an announcement sign.

The foyer is broad and extends the entire width of the building. It is decorated with plastic relief work and mirrors. Two ramps lead to the balcony and the cove and retiring rooms.

The auditorium is finished in Louis XVI style. Greek columns in old ivory has relief from panels on the walls, which are decorated in rose tapestry with a medallion at the top of each. Rose and fawn are the predominating colors in the decorative scheme. Carpets and hangings are fawn.

There are two stage curtains, the outer one rose, the inner one fawn. The former drapes, the latter disappears by the barn door effect.

There are 1,535 Heywood-Wakefield opera chairs of mahogany with cherry end standards and with full upholstering in red muleskin. A feature of these chairs is the Marshall No. 9 special spring seat. The loge chairs, 480 of them, are of wicker with gray velour upholstery. The aisle carpets are in tile effect, fawn with a brown line making the squares.

Gay with Wicker

The cove or general rest room, which is just back of the balcony, is gay with wicker furniture upholstered in cretonne and with singing birds. In the center on a carved marble standard a fountain bubbles over green ferns. At one end of this room is the men's smoking room and at the other the women's dressing room. The former is furnished in wicker, the latter in wooden furniture of a mottled burnished gold finish.

A Fountain and Goldfish

The fountain idea is amplified in a nook off one of the ramps. The base is of old Dutch design, and the water trickles over cascades of rocks and ferns into a pool in which goldfish disport themselves. Colored lights showing through the water add to its beauty, and a series of mirrors are so placed as to extend the vista, thus giving the effect of a large waterfall seen at a distance.

The lighting of the entire house is controlled by one master switch in the operating room. Every light is on dimmers, and the house is wired for three different colors so arranged that by blending them almost any color effect may be obtained. The stage is equipped with a special lighting equipment for blending in different stage settings to harmonize with the picture on the screen, the effect being heightened by the black velour border for the screen.

The projection room equipment consists of two Simplexes, an automatic rewind cabinet, W. T. E. Company's special stereopticon and stereopticon spot, W. T. E. arc controls, two double 75 ampere Hertner transverters. A velvet gold fibre screen and an Automaticet machine completes the equipment.

The Western Theatre Equipment Company, of Seattle, furnished all the equipment and the furniture, which William Hartford, the company's installation engineer, installed in the record time of three days.

Ed. Myrick, formerly manager of one of Jensen and Von Herberg's Portland houses, is manager of the Liberty, and he features the fine projection in his advertising.

The projection room is in charge of Bert Jollef, who made a special trip into Seattle to obtain instruction from the Western Theatre Equipment Company in handling the different lighting effects, controls, etc.

Seattle's Four Hundred and Fifty Seat Paramount Uses Two Powers

A HEALTHFUL indication of the attention which projection receives today from the progressive exhibitor is the frequent notice given in this department of the installations of batteries of two or even three projectors in houses where a few years ago, one would have been considered ample.

And these signs of progress are not confined to theatres of large seating capacities. One of the most recent examples of this is furnished by a four hundred and fifty seat house of the Northwest, in which two Power's projectors are features of the projection room.

One of Seattle's handsomest neighborhood theatres is W. F. Code's Paramount Theatre, at Forty-sixth avenue and Meridian street, in the University district. The building is of fireproof construction finished in concrete. Its dimensions are forty by ninety feet, and it seats four hundred and twenty-five.

The interior walls are finished in gray with four scenic panels painted on either side. The draperies are rose colored, and the chairs are of gray wood, upholstered in rose leather.

A Distinctive Lighting Feature

The lighting system is a distinctive feature of the house. All light is distributed in the auditorium from a central dome so sunken into the ceiling that it is impossible for any of its rays to reach the screen, and yet the auditorium is fairly well lighted throughout the showing of the picture. The system of dimmers and colored lights makes it possible to throw the house into any color desired.

The architect was George Purvis, of Seattle, who has also just completed the Dixon Theatre in Ellensburg.

The house boasts a women's rest room and a men's smoking room, which heretofore proprietors of local neighborhood houses seem to have considered unnecessary.

The heating and ventilating system is that regularly installed by the Washington Sheet Metal Works and consists of a hot air furnace and a big fan, which drives the fresh air through the furnace and into the house through grilles just over the exit doors on either side of the stage. The foul air is forced by a slight pressure constantly maintained in the house through grilles in the walls near the floor.

Mr. Code is very proud of his organ, and many of his patrons have voiced their appreciation of it.

Two Power's Projectors

Projection is furnished by two Power's machines, and the screen is a velvet gold fibre. The Western Theatre Equipment Company, of Seattle, sold Mr. Code the screen and the Heywood-Wakefield, chairs.

Mr. Code has long been a well-known figure in motion picture circles in Seattle, having operated the Code Theatre in Nome, Alaska, for the past eight years. He still retains his Nome house, but felt that he needed something to do while spending his winters in Seattle.

He goes to Nome each summer, and in the winter his interests are looked after by his partner, N. H. Clark.

Mr. Code is also associated with Capt. A. A. Lathrop, of Anchorage and Cordova, in buying film for Southeastern Alaska and the interior

Northwestern Notes

Missoula, Mont.—Northwest Theatres Company has sold all its Idaho houses to W. A. Simons, former president of company. This gives Simons control of houses in Wallace, Mullen, Kellogg and Cocur d'Alene. Northwest Theatres Company retains control of Missoula houses, the Liberty and the Empress. E. K. Taylor is manager.

Ellensburg, Wash.—The Isis Theatre, closed for some time, has been re-opened by Ed. Whitesel.

Walla Walla, Wash.—R. W. Cram, former owner of the Arcade, and more recently manager of the Colonial, Seattle, is now manager of the Liberty.

Billings, Mont.—Strand taken over by O'Keefe and Duncan. E. C. O'Keefe will be manager.

Philadelphia Regent Opened December 21

The opening on December 21 of Pete Magero's new Regent Theatre, a handsome structure, was attended by a large Philadelphia contingent of prominent motion picture men headed by Jules E. Mastbaum, Al Boyd, Frank W. Buhler, Wm. Heenon, Felix M Mendelssohn, Robert Lynch, John Clark, George Dembow, Max Milder, Charles Henchell, Ben Amsterdam and John Bethell.

The Regent has a seating capacity of 1,800 and is built of stone and brick with a main floor of solid concrete. The building is 50 by 200 feet. The interior is finished in Adam style, in old ivory and gold with silk damask hung on the walls. There are two beautiful marble staircases that lead to the balcony where retiring rooms handsomely furnished, are located.

The floors are carpeted with azure blue velvet, furnished by Lit Brothers, and have leather seats furnished by the American Seating Company.

Indirect lighting system and the Typhoon blower ventilating system have been installed. The stage is fully equipped and a large organ will supply the music. A handsome marble booth stands in front of the theatre. The projection room is equipped with two Power's B machines installed by the Motion Picture Equipment Corporation.

Two More Baltimore Houses Simplexized

N. C. Haefele & Company, of Baltimore, dealers in Simplex projectors and a complete line of projection equipment, recently removed from 412 East Lexington street to more extensive quarters at 228 North Gay street.

They report the opening of the new 1,200 seat Columbia Theatre, 709 Columbia avenue, Baltimore, of which The Eureka Amusement Company is the owner.

The Columbia projection room measures fifteen by sixteen feet and is equipped with a General Electric motor generator set of seventy ampere capacity, arc controls, Safe-T-First enclosed film cabinet, motor rewinder and two Type "S" Simplex projectors, which are in charge of Harry Schanne, projectionist.

A sixteen foot picture is projected with Snaplite lenses on a Minusa screen, at a distance of one hundred and ten feet.

Haefele and Company also recently equipped the Lyceum Theatre, Sparrows Point, Baltimore, which has a ten by twelve foot projection room. The Lyceum equipment, which is in charge of B. Gregory, projectionist, consists of a General Electric generator set and two Type "S" Simplex projectors which project a twelve foot picture with Snaplite lenses on a Minusa screen at one hundred and ten feet.

DRAMA

No more dramatic situation has ever been conceived than this—in which the poor blind youth thinks he is a famous poet, married to a famous dancer. And when he finds that his book of poems is only a cook-book—and his wife a common woman he loathes—what then?

THRILLS

Into the crocodile pit, swarming with fifty horrible, man-eating reptiles! And to save his rival and enemy! His fight with the savage monsters is the most thrilling scene ever seen in a motion picture. No fake about this—it was filmed at the risk of the actors' lives!

ROMANCE

A penniless youth in a Mexican oil town. A dancer with all Europe at her feet! How could he hope to win her? Yet he travelled around the world to find her, won her—and then tossed her aside for the woman he had scorned. A love story that fulfils the deepest dreams of romance.

HEART THROBS

In malice and hatred she had ruined his life. Now in love and pity she would give him happiness. She would slave for him, die for him. And with tears streaming down her cheeks, she started the strangest masquerade since time began. No heart is too hard to be moved by it.

Sword in ~

BEAUTY

The marvelous ice-ballet, the snow-queen's palace, the shimmeringly alluring tropical lagoons, the riotous temple dances of Siam—beauty of women, beauty of sets, beauty of gowns—in all of these it excels, as a feast for the eyes, anything DeMille has ever done before.

SPLENDOR

Here you will see settings so massive, that you will be overawed by their stupendous grandeur. You will see the most lavish investiture that has ever been given a picture. You will gasp at the incalculable sums that have been spent—to make incalculable sums for the world's exhibitors!

"Fool's Paradise"

"FOOL'S PARADISE" is the picture of the century.

It has a dozen different points of appeal—any one of which would make a record-breaking picture.

Read over these two pages. Consider the situations outlined. Look at the stills. Think of the stars in it, the sets in it, the thrill of it all.

Think of Cecil B. DeMille's past productions. In every one he has been working steadily forward, climbing greater heights.

In "Fool's Paradise," you will see the culmination of his genius.

It is the greatest entertainment ever devised since the world began.

New York Times:
There are really some irresistible scenes in "A Connecticut Yankee." The picture has been made on a lavish scale, and, incidentally, it achieves some striking scenic effects.

London Daily Graphic:
All lovers of Mark Twain—and I should advise all who love a good humorous story to do likewise—will be in their element at the Alhambra. For the cinema season there the picture is "A Yankee at the Court of King Arthur." It is a wonderful production worthy of the book.

Los Angeles Express:
Retaining all the satire and subtle humor that made Mark Twain the prince of American humorists, embellished by sets so stupendous as to be almost bewildering.

New York Commercial:
The cleverest picture yet shown in New York. All the dry humor, the quaint charm of the Twain story has been captured for the film. The characters live anew and the result is an exquisite photoplay.

Alan Dale in the New York American:
Certainly a lively picture. Something doing every minute, and something worth doing, too. I never closed an eye—which is a record for me. In fact acute insomnia seized me as I sat through the long film, that didn't seem a bit too long.

Birmingham (Eng.) Mercury
All of you are going to laugh at "A Yankee at the Court of King Arthur," adapted from Mark Twain's famous novel. The scenery and costumes are exceptionally magnificent.

London Pall Mall Globe:
Magnificent production of Mark Twain's masterpiece. All who desire to see kinematography at its very best make a point of seeing this film.
It will not matter whether one has read Mark Twain's book or not, the result will be the same—i. e., two hours cram full of interest and mirth.

New York Evening Telegram:
William Fox has outdone himself in the production of the much heralded film. The play is stupendous. Hardened movie goers paused between laughs last night to applaud willingly and spontaneously. The scenes are marvels.

New York Evening Journal:
The picture is hilariously funny. You begin to grin, then when the gay Yank puts his slang into high, you laugh, and before the picture is much more than half through you are roaring with the rest of the people.

New York Sun:
It has some great big scenes, some very effective ensembles and a couple of thrillers. It has an abundance of clever comedy work. Kept the audience in a merry uproar most of the evening.

Wid Gunning's Next Big Money Maker

A Drama of White Heat Passion

Exhibitors right now are combing the market for big pictures that enable them to clean up a nest-egg and wipe off losses from others that didn't "go over."

"White Hands" will do it. It is the story of a woman alone in a nest of crime on the edge of Sahara. Romance, mystery, melodrama, thrills and red-blooded action in every reel—the very elements that draw dollars at the box-office and bring wild bursts of applause from every class of patron.

"White Hands" is a melodramatic triumph! A big picture for big handling by big showmen! See it at the nearest Wid Gunning exchange now! It's the biggest clean-up on the New Year's calendar.

C. Gardner Sullivan wrote it.
Lambert Hillyer directed it.

White Hands

Will Set New Box-Office Records

A nest of vice on the edge of Sahara, a beautiful girl surrounded by leering men who rule friend and foe by the power of an iron hand, and a pretty little desert waif—the saviour of all.

This—in a nutshell—is the telegraphic story of "White Hands," the next big Wid Gunning special that will break many box-office records in the New Year.

"White Hands" is "exhibitor's meat"—a clean-up picture that combines every big element that makes for box-office success. To neglect booking it now is to pass up one of the biggest money-makers ever produced. Seven good reasons why "White Hands" will be a sensational success are listed right here. Read 'em carefully:

Story by C. Gardner Sullivan.
Directed by Lambert Hillyer.
A Graf Production.

Featuring Hobart Bosworth with these Screen Favorites that mean bigger business:

ROBERT McKIM, ELINOR FAIR, FREEMAN WOOD and BABY MURIEL.

Prints of "White Hands" are in the Gunning exchanges now. Arrange for a screening without delay. Once you've seen it, we know you'll book it for immediate play dates. It's a big picture—another example of Wid Gunning determination to make money for exhibitors.

That's the unanimous verdict of the trade experts on viewing this picture.

ONE OF SEASON'S FINEST PICTURES

"We are sold on 'Stardust.' It is one of the season's fine contributions to the screen. It does not require a great deal of credulity to accept the characters and their environment that we see pictured so faithfully. We've met these folks in our own home town, many of us. The people who pay admissions to motion picture theatres, strangely enough, like to pay to see themselves on the screen. The romance of talent that is at last recognized overshadows the romance of two lovers, occasionally it is refreshing to see something that does not begin with an introduction and end with a wedding ring.

"The realism of situations and characters is accentuated by the faithful reproduction of an old horse car such as they used to run on the old 'Belt Line' in Manhattan and the furnishings of the home in the opening episodes of the film.

"In order to make this review of proper length it is not possible to expatiate on the merits of all the players. Little Edna Ross as the pigtailed musical prodigy is true to the life. Hope Hampton, the mature, lonesome girl of later years, who eventually blossoms forth into a member of the Cosmopolitan Opera, is not only beautiful, but she really acts. If she registers a real success in the story, she must also be credited with a sublime portrayal on the screen. James Rennie, playing opposite Miss Hampton, and arriving late in the sequence of the tale, makes his character live and talk."—Exhibitors' Trade Review.

SPLENDID DRAMA AND EXCELLENTLY CONSTRUCTED

"'Stardust' commences to shine in a small town the author has named 'Paradise.' Its successful terminal is Broadway.

"A delightful photoplay, designed especially to bring the versatile abilities of a comparatively new star, to the foreground. In viewing 'Stardust,' it is interesting to note that it is but the fourth picture in which Hope Hampton has appeared in the leading feminine role. In 'Stardust' she has been given an opportunity to command recognition and to score in a difficult undertaking. Her improvement over anything she has ever done is most emphatic.

"Obviously, in the construction of 'Stardust,' no expense has been spared. It required costly sets, an unusual number of interiors necessitating accurate detail, the consideration of which register noticeably. The cast are to be congratulated upon excellent interpretations of their several roles. Indeed, the 'types' are artistic characterizations, which could not be improved upon. Superiority of the photography earns commendation. A completely satisfactory production is 'Stardust.' Anthony Paul Kelly can write the kind of scenarios that makes them.

"Among the highlights—the scene of the wedding, close-ups of Miss Hampton being exceedingly beautiful, and the train wreck which eliminates the masculine obstacle so that there may come a happy ending."—Motion Picture News.

ellent Construction!"

Newspaper critics in every town in which the picture played all unite in its praise.

SHOULD PROVE BIG BOX OFFICE PICTURE

"An excellent picture from every angle. Well acted, well directed, and given a good production. 'Stardust' should prove a big box-office attraction. Miss Hampton again proves that she is capable of really good screen work.

"Adapted from Fannie Hurst's novel of the same name, this Hope Hampton-First National production offers pictorial entertainment of the highest class.

"It was written with fine understanding and Miss Hampton imbues the character of Lily with a sympathetic appeal that is free from mawkish sentimentality or obtrusiveness. Certain liberties have been taken with Fannie Hurst's story, but these make for a clearer understanding of the plot and reduce the number of characters involved to the minimum. The characters are all well drawn.

"Hobart Henley's direction is well nigh faultless and he has made the most of his artistes and the possibilities of every scene. There is a rich vein of humor and sentiment running through the story, but the sentiment is never stressed for effect."—Exhibitors' Herald.

IT WILL ENJOY GREAT SUCCESS

"The popular angle of sympathy has been so well pointed in 'Stardust' that the picture will undoubtedly enjoy great success. A serious theme, developed seriously on the whole but relieved by touches of the most welcome sort of humor, the production relies for its appeal on the situation of a young girl's struggle for self-expression. The subject of parental tyranny and its detrimental effect on the development of children has had enough agitation recently to awaken an interest whenever it comes up.

"There is a keen human interest and a smooth construction that will insure its hearty acceptance. Hope Hampton has a role which calls for real acting in its demand for self-expression, an impassive exterior which is only a cloak for a truly emotional nature and her personality is a great factor in establishing this desired impression. The small town types offer an interesting study and delightful humor. James Rennie is attractive in a romantic leading role."—Moving Picture World.

Co-operation Has Been Achieved

TO the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce of New York and the F. I. L. M. Club of the same city we extend the hearty hand of congratulation. They, each and severally, have committed themselves to a program of sane, sound business in their mutual dealings, and the agreement which provides for the arbitration of all differences is now in effect. The board of six voting members, three from each organization, and a chairman, who is without a vote, save in the event of a tie, has set an example for the entire industry, and the example, we are informed, is to be followed wherever organizations are functioning in the business centers.

The arbitration board already has begun its work, sitting as a business tribunal and dispatching business with celerity and satisfaction to all concerned. One of the first problems with which it had to deal involved a sum approximating $8,000, and the matter was settled to the entire comfort of of the exhibitor and the exchange manager in something like fifteen minutes. Other cases of similar importance but of different financial size were gone through with and adjusted fairly, calmly, with no fireworks, no bitterness, no unseemly personalities and no accusations of bad faith from either side.

So important is this agreement that we reproduce it in full in this issue for the information and consideration of all the industry.

We are advised that the document was jointly drawn by the exhibitor organization's representatives, led by William Brandt, president of the Chamber, and the F. I. L. M. Club members headed by I. E. Chadwick, their president. Concerning its several provisions, time will demonstrate their practical value, and if any of the clauses prove unworkable it is to be assumed that they will be changed in the interest of fair play.

The great and important principle of co-operation has been established. For many months this publication has been urging practical business cooperation along the very lines followed by this agreement. We felt that the best interests of the exhibitors would thus be served and that trials by uproar and propaganda and oratory would profit the exhibitor least of all and work harm to the industry as a whole.

To have this confidence justified so early is a source of profound satisfaction to us and to all others who have the best interests of the exhibitor and all the industry at heart. William Brandt and his able associates have worked on facts, while other less wise leaders have gone in for the picturesque and the sensational. Mr. Chadwick and his associates have met their problems face to face and the result is the greatest step toward stabilizing our business that has been taken in ten years.

No fancy salaried attorneys, no politics, no red fire, no class hatreds and no misrepresentations found place in the deliberations. Those concerned, acting as grown men, men of business, men of affairs, and realizing their opportunity for service to themselves and their brethren, sat down, talked the problems over, drew their agreement, discussed it, revised it and signed it. After it was signed it was put into effect and the result is bright with promise for all save the hoorah hobgoblins who will be disappointed in not being able to claim credit for this really notable achievement.

Although dated in the final week of the old year, the agreement practically begins a new year. It is in effect for six months and even if changes are made later and a new agreement drawn to cover new conditions, the great big get-together step has been taken. We regard this as a real start for the new year, and the industry, all of the industry, should be glad.

Rupert Hughes Sits Up with the Critics

Holds Their Pulse, Notes Fever and Diagnoses Their Unhappy Malady— Incidentally the Movies Do Move

(That which follows is a talk by Rupert Hughes at a luncheon given by Samuel Goldwyn in Keen's Chop House, Friday, December 30, 1921, on "The Critics of the Motion Picture." It is in our opinion the finest analysis, or shall we say vivisection, of the critics that has been made. We commend it to the entire industry.—Editor's Note.)

THE best definition of a gentleman that I have ever seen was Beerbohm Tree's statement that "a gentleman is a man who doesn't care whether he is a gentleman or not." And I think that this is true of a true artist since he is so much interested in expressing what is in his heart that he doesn't care whether he is an artist or not.

The moving pictures should not be frightened or humiliated or bullied by those critics who say that the moving pictures are not an art. One fanatic recently wrote a ferocious attack in which he made the final announcement that the moving pictures are an industry and not an art, and that the censorship could do them no harm as they had nothing important or artistic to deliver. Even if he had known the difference or had been qualified to decide just what an art is, what difference does it make whether you call moving pictures an art, an industry, an amusement, a merchandise? The main thing is that they fascinate almost everybody. Their first duty is to make their own rules, to be moving pictures, to be pictures and to move.

There are two schools of critics: one that thinks a thing is a great art because it appeals to very few people; another that art is greatest when it comes from the great common people. So some musical critics admire only the new and eccentric and some admire the folk-songs.

What differences does it all make? When Shakespeare was writing his plays there were numberless critics who bewailed the fact that the English drama was limited in merit and that there were no first class English poets. There were plenty of people who said that Shakespeare was only a commercial manager who appealed to the low-brow public. An English critic has recently declared that "Romeo and Juliette" is pure movie stuff. "Hamlet" is also a blood-curdling melodrama and many of Shakespeare's comedies are pure Pollyanna stuff. This does not prove that Shakespeare was an artist; it proves that melodrama and pink romance are as good art as anything else.

Doing Big Things

Three centuries from now a certain kind of critic will be roasting the life out of the moving picture producers of his time and referring to today as the golden age of motion pictures when people devoted themselves to high art of principles and wrote the great successes of the screen.

I think that the motion pictures are doing marvellous things; that there are great geniuses at work producing, writing and acting magnificent pictures.

I think that Tom Mix is a heroic figure. Cowboy exploits in which he rides a horse down the side of a mountain or dashes across the desert contain epic qualities as glorious as the adventures of Homer's heroes or the heroes of the picaresque novels that literary critics praise so highly. They also contain landscape art of the noblest beauty.

Critics Late As Usual

The tide is about to turn and is already turning. A number of critics who a few years ago used the name of Charlie Chaplin as a by-word of contempt are now speaking of him with reverence as the greatest artist of his time. It is amusing to realize that these critics do not realize that the great public found out Chaplin's genius for itself years ago without being told. Charlie Chaplin is no greater artist now than he was then. The critics are simply too late as usual. There are other artists on the screen who will one day be similarly greeted by high-brow critics as classics and as great personalities, whom the public has been for years flocking to enjoy.

I predict that in a few years there will be critics thinking themselves the most artistic of the artistic who will make fun of novels and plays and poems and essays and sculptures and paintings as cheap and clumsy devices in comparison with the magnificent charms of the motion picture.

What Critics Will Criticize

They will laugh at the sculptor who pounds away at a block of marble trying to chop out a beautiful image; and they will point to the motion picture director who can select from thousands of beautiful women and reveal them in motion; posing them and lighting them at his divine pleasure; grouping them in friezes and giving them all the magic of life.

There will be critics who will laugh at the novelist who ransacks his thesaurus and his dictionary hunting for unusual adjectives, which anybody can find who will look for them, and pitifully trying to express with stupid words the beauty of a youthful face; the pity of a lip that trembles with grief; the ache in a heavy heart; when the moving picture geniuses can make all of these emotions live and breathe with a vividness that brings forth real tears, real laughter and real sobs and present them to the public with a vividness that cannot be resisted.

These critics will laugh at the poor little author-dramatist who makes a few actors parrot the same lines night after night in the same narrow quarters, with the same cheap make-shifts of scenery.

Critics Wrong Again

Of course these critics will be wrong and cruel and futile; but they will be no wronger, no crueler and no more futile than these peculiar persons who despise the moving picture and despise it because they do not understand what the moving pictures are really trying to do and really succeeding in doing.

The moving picture of today is at its best not only great drama and fiction and landscape art but also living sculpture, living painting, psychology of the most searching importance, philosophy, history of manners, everything in fact that any other art is, and some things that no other art can be.

When I praise the motion picture as an art or whatever you want to call it, I do not mean that all pictures are good, or that I like all of them. I hate lots of them and lots of them bore me to death. But that may be my fault, not theirs.

Nobody is expected to like every line in "Hamlet," every line in "Paradise Lost" or in "Vanity Fair," and nobody should be expected to like every moment of every moving picture. But I maintain that if a six-reel picture contains one great moment, one flash of extraordinary beauty or emotion, that picture is thereby a great work of art. I maintain that Wild West pictures are of the epic school; that the pictures of the underworld have great traditional authority; that pictures of young love with their kissing fade-outs have the very highest right to exist.

I wonder what some of these critics of today would say of Shakespeare and his "As You Like It" or his "Twelfth Night." They have all the qualities of the so much despised cheerful happy-ending school of fiction and film.

and Tells Our Case Better Than Before

We All of Us of the Movies Will Read, Remember and in Turn Tell Others of it

Many of the critics do not do the motion picture justice because they do not really know what motion pictures are all about. These critics may know something about novels and essays and poetry, but they may know nothing of the film. The man who has no acquaintance with sculpture or with music or with painting has little value as a critic.

One great trouble with the motion pictures is that they are being harassed and bullied by any number of critics whose advice it would be futile to follow and whose ignorance is as profound as their own contempt.

They say frankly that they don't like them and don't go to them. But that proves only their own narrowness.

Above all things the motion picture people should not be scared to death or driven out of their senses by the use of this terrible word "art." Nobody knows what art is. No two people agree on the definition. What difference does it make?

Among those who admit the right of the pictures to exist as an art, there are the usual differences of opinion.

In the matter of titles there is great debate. Some people think that a picture is the better the fewer its titles. This school reminds me of the school of critics that believes in "absolute music" and finds something divinely superior in the symphony to a great opera because the grand opera has scenery and words, acting, calcium lights and a lot of things that do not belong to music.

The only answer to these people is to say that if their advice were followed the masterpieces of Wagner and the other great opera composers would never exist. The soliloquy in "Hamlet" could easily be cut out and never missed. The soliloquy is considered nowadays bad dramatic art, but the world would be much the poorer if Shakespeare had been scared off.

A title is of value only when it is of value. This is also true of any scene in any picture. Theoretically, nothing should appear in any picture that has no value. There are things that titles can get across which cannot be otherwise given to the public. To ban the titles altogether would be to deny the motion picture all comment on character, all philosophy, all delicious terms, all dialogue and dialect and all the beauty that words alone can convey. I believe in cutting titles down to the minimum; but I believe also in cutting pictures down to the minimum.

My main feeling is, in short, that we movie people should not be afraid of what people will say of our work. We should not allow a word or a theory to drive us into anything or away from anything without some strong inner reason. Most of all, we should not be afraid of popularity and of financial success. Success is like posterity brought within our immediate vicinity. To have pleased millions of people with comedy, pathos or a well-constructed story is to have done a glorious thing. You can call it art, merchandise, trash or wooden nutmegs, but you cannot rob it of its noble mission—to cast light into dark places.

Roach Pays Brunet Annual Visit; Says Studio Resources Utilized to Limit to Keep Pace with Pathe Distribution

HIGHLY encouraging reports of picture production activity arrive from the Pacific Coast with Hal Roach, who is in New York on his annual visit to Paul Brunet. Accompanying Mr. Roach are Mrs. Roach, Harold Lloyd, and Mildred Davis and her mother. The visit will be a brief one, Mr. Roach said, owing to pressure of work involved in keeping pace with Pathe distribution. Lloyd and Hal Roach comedies and the new Ruth Roland serial are calling upon all the resources of the Hal Roach Studios, although they have been much expanded during the last year and supplied throughout with the latest and best equipment and accessories.

"While in some instances," said Mr. Roach, "some remaining signs of over-production may be apparent, nothing of the kind affects us. On the contrary, we are, and have been constantly, kept on the jump in order not to be caught lagging behind our schedule. The degree of public favor extended to all of our productions never was greater than at the present time. I can't conceive of any better augury for the new year, either regarding pictures or general business."

Mr. Roach's expectations of the new Ruth Roland serial, at present called "The Timber Queen," bear out Pathe home office impressions gained from projections of the first three episodes. He believes it will prove to be the finest and most appealing picture in this form ever distributed by "the house of serials," that is to say, Pathe.

Harold Lloyd's trip, and the days spent in New York, afford him little relaxation from the star's responsibilities in connection with the Lloyd comedy that is to follow "A Sailor Made Man." The new production, now under way, shows a sharp departure from elements which have given its immediate predecessor such prompt and generous public acceptance.

As the Roach party left the Culver City studios, the one hundred and fourth comedy featuring Harry "Snub" Pollard was in production. Harold Lloyd's old partner in one-reel comedies which insistent exhibitor demands have caused Pathe to re-issue with results quite transcending anticipations, is reported to have started on his second "century" filled to the brim with "pep."

The only members of the Hal Roach visiting party who apparently have not brought their picture studio activities with them are Mrs. Roach, Mildred Davis and her mother.

Bill of Particulars in Smith-Chadwick Suit

A bill of particulars secured on an order of the court by Isaac E. Chadwick has been filed in the New York County Clerks' Office by Guy Croswell Smith. Suit has been brought in the New York Supreme Court by Smith against Chadwick for alleged damages sustained by Smith in a transaction concerning the production of the motion picture "The Chastened Woman." Smith alleged Chadwick, as vice-president of the Rialto de Luxe Productions contracted to assign to him the exclusive right to exploit and distribute the production for a period of five years. Smith charges that the rights to the picture were not owned by the Rialto concern at the time the deal was made.

Proctor-Stoll Suit to Go Before a Trial Jury

The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court has handed down a decision sustaining a decision of Justice Vernon M. Davis of the New York Supreme Court, which denied the motion of Ralph O. Proctor, that certain chapters of the answer of the Stoll Film Corporation of America to his suit for breach of contract be stricken out, and that the court decide the action on the briefs of both sides to the controversy. This means that Proctor will now have to go to the trial of his suit before a jury, which will decide the contentions on their merits and evidence adduced.

Censorship, Alleged Bribes and Attempt to Bar Minister Cause Excitement as Legislature Opens

MOTION picture censorship, alleged attempts at bribes and an effort to bar the Rev. O. R. Miller of Albany, of the New York Civic League, who has fought for censorship in this state for years, were outstanding features at the opening on January 4 of the New York State Legislature. A spade was called a spade. Senator James J. Walker, who fought tooth and nail in the fight to prevent censorship last spring, came out today and asked first whether or not Clayton R. Lusk, Republican leader of the Senate, had ever been offered the sum of $100,000 if he would reverse his stand on censorship, and secondly, that the Rev. Miller be barred from the legislative chambers.

The whole thing got under way within thirty minutes after the session had opened. Senator Walker started by saying that the Rev. Miller was marked today in the records of the Senate as a liar and a bad sport. He said that the Rev. Miller had not had a congregation since 1905. Reading then from a copy of the Reform Bulletin, of which Mr. Miller is one of the editors, Senator Walker said:

Miller's Article

"The underworld elements of the state are making frantic efforts to drive Clayton R. Lusk out of public life. He introduced a moving picture censorship bill and pushed it through the Senate, notwithstanding all the tremendous influence and money of the movie men against it. Senator Lusk has been most bitterly opposed by all the wet newspapers and the moving picture men. The movie men were unable to buy him although they apparently bought everything else in sight. Undoubtedly Senator Lusk could have sold out to the movie men for $100,000 or more, not to have pushed this movie censorship bill through the Senate. He knew this as well as anyone, but he is not for sale."

Calling upon Senator Lusk to tell his associates whether or not he had ever received any offer from the motion picture interests of $100,000 or more, for which he would relax his efforts, Senator Walker declared that he hoped that there would be found some method that would for all time silence what he termed as charlatans and fakirs and who came dressed up in God's livery to prey upon men.

Senator Lusk's Reply

To this Senator Lusk replied:

"I was never asked to conduct myself in other way than I did, and whether I could have got $100,000 or any other amount of money, I do not know. It is not necessary for me to state here that no one ever offered me anything to influence my vote on censorship, because if they had, you would have known it at the time."

Senator Walker called upon the sergeant-at-arms to remove the Rev. Miller from the floor and to deny him the privilege of the floor at future sessions. It was finally agreed to let the matter rest for the time being.

That session was the first time that any mention of any bribe in connection with the passage of the censorship bill last spring, was ever made. Whether or not Mr. Miller will be called to the Senate chamber and asked to explain his editorial and the slur upon the motion picture interests, will be determined later on. There is no one in the Senate who believes that any attempt was made at any time during the session to influence by money either Senator Lusk or anyone else, in taking a different attitude on the censorship bill.

The Daddy of Them All

Wanette, Okla.,
Dec. 27, 1921

Arthur James, Editor Moving Picture World:

Do Moving Picture World ads produce results? They don't do anything else!

Last week I had a forlorn little ad stuck over in the classified section, yet it was seen and read by many, judging from the answers I have received. The ad in question was an application for a position as theatre manager or for a theatre to lease with purchase privilege.

Do Moving Picture World ads produce results? Obviously they do! World subscribers have a world of confidence in World advertisers!

Therefore, there can be only one verdict regarding trade publications—the Moving Picture World is the daddy of them all!

With all good wishes, I remain

Cordially yours,

L. E. BREWER.

New York Capitol to Show "His Nibs"

Sam Rothapfel, of the New York Capitol Theatre, this week closed a deal with Alexander Beyfuss, president of Excetpion Pictures Corporation, whereby the Charles (Chic) Sale special production, "His Nibs," will be shown at that house in the very near future. L. L. Hiller, president of "His Nibs" Syndicate, Inc., which is distributing the feature, co-operated with Mr. Beyfuss in closing the deal.

In selecting "His Nibs" for a showing at the world's largest picture theatre Managing Director Rothapfel has paid a distinct honor to the art of Chic Sale. The Capitol showing will mark the world premiere of the picture.

Prejudices and Customs of Old World Make U. S. Best Locale for Producing

Rome, Italy, Dec. 9.

By W. STEPHEN BUSH

A SCRUTINY of film productions on this side of the water and a comparison with American pictures has long been needed. Such a survey and comparison has a very definite practical value. We have been hearing much of late concerning the coming competition of foreign films with our own product, and considerable attention has been given to a plan of producing in European countries for the American market. It has been pointed out that the cost of production in Europe is lower than it ever was, and easily from ten to twenty times lower than in the States.

It has been claimed that with an American director, with an American cast and with an American play, pictures may be made in Europe with which the American made production can be undersold. In theory, and far away—say, at a prolonged luncheon on Broadway — the scheme sounds plausible enough. The difficulties begin to appear when you start to translate your theories into action on this side of the water. Everywhere you run up against deeply rooted prejudices and practices in European studios. It is next to impossible to build a bridge of international understanding. You may have your American director and even your American cast all ready to set up their tents either in England or France or Italy or Germany, but you cannot create the American atmosphere, you cannot transplant American conceptions and American traditions into the unresponsive soil of the Old World.

Made Best at Home

An American scenario does not work well anywhere outside the U. S. A. A thousand trifles betray the alien atmosphere and displease the American audience. The American picture is made best on American soil. The reasons for all this go rather deep and I only wish that our high-beat critics of the motion picture would come over here and study conditions as they exist on this side of the water.

Perhaps we are a good distance away from the millennium of the screen, but I will say we are appreciably closer to it than the producers of Europe. The magazine writers and amateur philosophers, who speak unkindly of our pictures and even more unkindly of our audiences, may not know that American pictures supply a new and better standard of art and ethics to Europe, and if given the proper range and sweep will make for better taste and cleaner and more wholesome ways of living.

The Morbid Note

A morbid note pervades the average film here. Among the many pictures I have seen in Northern Italy and in Rome, there was just one which might have passed muster on our screen, a short comedy called "The Lost Woman," the sort of picture of which we have an abundant supply at home and which it would be folly to import. I only mention the picture here because it has a lighter touch and a bit of subtelty which as a rule are not found on European screens.

In the dramatic productions the plot, the "motif," the characterization, and the atmosphere are unhealthy and unnatural. Humor, either in what we call "comedy relief," or humor for its own sake, are really unknown. Melancholia of various grades and types and often degeneracy saturates their film plays from beginning to end. The silly optimism of Pollyanna has here found its counterpart in the silliest sort of pessimism. Everybody in the dramatic films is profoundly—one might say aggressively and provokingly —unhappy.

Weak Acting and Horror

The actors and actresses do nothing but pose from one scene into another, and hard, heavy breathing passes for emotional acting. There is so much needless cruelty shown, so much gratuitous horror. Crime, crime, crime and human depravity wind their shiny trails across these screens. Even the men who aim at the higher things are under strange spells and delusions—they seek what we would consider the horrible and repellant things of life, delving into sewers and exploring the hideous sides of human nature. Their characters look and act as if they had been picked out of sanitariums and penal institutions.

Let me cite a few instances. Thus, in a recent release, in which that able artist, Franasca Bertini, is featured and which is called "The Last Dream," the two principal characters commit suicide within a few feet of each other. In another picture bearing the title, "The Critical Age," one man commits suicide, another man goes blind and the rest of the cast have nothing to live for when the last title is flashed on the screen. Another popular film based on a recent stage success ends with the suicide of the only fairly decent person in the play, while the wanton and the villain marry each other in the last act. A sickly, fetid atmosphere envelops film productions in Italy, or at least a great deal of it.

Open Worship of the Male

Another feature in all European films which is decidedly offensive to American tastes is the open worship of the male of the species. And the male of the day, let it be remembered, does not always remind one of those glorious statues of Apollo and Antinous one finds in the Vatican Museum. If there is any Italian hero who can graduate into even the second class of our matinee idols, he is being kept under cover. Nevertheless, woman here accepts the lowly part assigned to her on the screen with meekness and humility.

Americans who go to see motion pictures may be too optimistic, they may exhibit an undue fondness for the lighter vein, they may reject the unhappy ending, their wayward taste may even incline toward the melodramatic, but their notions and feelings are sound and wholesome indeed compared to European or at least Continental audiences.

It has been said that Italy furnishes marvelous historic and scenic backgrounds, and that judiciously used this advantage is very important, other things being equal. True, there can be no doubt about the glorious historic and scenic backgrounds of this country. Indeed, no one is more thoroughly aware of the fact than the Italian producers and directors. They play it "for all it is worth." The finest backgrounds, however, can after all be never more than an incident. The faults of plot and acting are never cured by charming scenery or historic monuments or beautiful churches. I think our directors made some such discovery long before the war.

Failure of Censorship

And what about censorship How can all these films exist under censorship? Evidently our friends the censors will suggest censorship for Italy. They are late. Censorship flourishes in Italy. They have two varieties of censorship here—a preventive and a repressive censorship. The producer really has to consult the censors before he starts on his picture. He must get a censorial opinion on the subject he desires to film, and if the censors do not think the subject is filmable from an ethical point of view, he has to look around for another subject.

In other words, there is a censorship of scenario, such as one advocate of national censorship proposed some years ago. If the censors approve of the subject the producer may go ahead and when he is through he must show the finished picture to the censors, who then get busy with their scissors. The censors, when their attention is called to the morbid and criminal films, say they never sit in judgment on mere matters of taste—— And there you have the complete failure of all kinds of legalized censorship in a nutshell. At best a censor can do no more

Editor Boynton, or The Curse of An Aching Heart

WE appreciate the hearty words of praise from the emotional lips of Mr. Boynton, of the Trade Review. If we were of the other of the two well known sexes we would hesitate to meet him for fear he might want to give us a kiss.

We have a native modesty which makes us decline his appointment as a tutor for his primary editorial development. We realize that the job is one for a corps of journalists who are also good bone specialists. We couldn't make an editor out of Boynton any more than he could make a lawyer out of us. We're not half smart enough to be a lawyer. But we want to be helpful, especially to those who need it most, so we'll draw out of the drawer of experience a few homespun things for Boynton to paste in his hat—provided there is room.

Be no man's office boy either to gain circulation or to secure advertising.

Don't wait until starvation stares you in the box office before deciding that honesty is the best editorial equipment.

Don't put on a lion's skin unless you are prepared to fight a lion's battles.

Don't figure that the moving picture business is ripe to be plucked by outsiders who know nothing about it and who care less. Remember that the only worthwhile editorial success comes from square, unselfish service, backed up with the courage to tell the truth as you see it without dictation from any man.

Don't write funny stories when the Lord never builded you for a comedian.

Don't charge advertising rates to print the other side of a controversy even if you need the money.

Don't try to straddle issues. There's only one editor in the field who can do it and he's had years of experience and was born to the role. His name is Bill.

And above all don't let the green chemical of jealousy corrode your editorial pen.

Be of stout heart. If the moving picture industry does not respond to you remember there are many other attractive fields. A man of your physique, for instance, would make an excellent brick layer.

ARTHUR JAMES.

F. I. L. M. Club and Exhibitor Body Sign Amended Agreement to Hold Six Months

MOVING PICTURE WORLD herewith presents the amended text of the agreement between the New York City F. I. L. M. Club and the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce:

It is mutually agreed between the F. I. L. M. Club of the City of New York and the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce of the City of New York, that a Joint Arbitration Board shall be created to hear and determine disputes between exchanges, members of the F. I. L. M. Club of the City of New York, and exhibitors in the Metropolitan District; that is, Greater New York, Long Island, Northern New Jersey, Western Connecticut and that part of the State of New York served by New York exchanges.

The Joint Arbitration Board shall be composed of seven; three members and a chairman appointed by the F. I. L. M. Club of the City of New York and three members appointed by the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce. The chairman, however, shall have no vote except in case of a tie. But any case decided after such vote by such chairman, shall, ipso facto, be submitted to the Appeal Board hereinafter described.

Rules of Board

The following rules and principles shall govern the Joint Arbitration Board:

The right of the home office or office of the exchange to reject any application for a contract, or a contract, within fourteen days, shall not be abridged or denied.

The terms of a written contract shall be binding on all parties as to protection and as to price, but oral evidence may be introduced and considered by the committee in all cases where the committee finds that oral evidence is necessary to explain the terms of the contract, but not to change the price of protection, except in case of fraud or duress, and except that the Board of Arbitration may accept the principle that the clause with respect to protection specified in a contract may be deemed to cover any new theatre erected after the date of the contract and which is situated at a distance not further than is the distance of any theatre listed in the protection clause.

Any involuntary breach of a contract with respect to one picture in a contract for several pictures, shall not be deemed to constitute a breach of the entire contract.

Breaches of Contract

The Board of Arbitration shall not deem it a breach of contract for an exchange to fail to deliver a motion picture to any exhibitor in the event said exhibitor has failed to comply with the demand of an exchange made pursuant to the terms of its contract, and to the rule of the F. I. L. M. Club of the City of New York, for additional security not exceeding the sum of $250 to insure the safe return of its film. The F. I. L. M. Club of the City of New York agrees, however, that the enforcement of this provision shall only follow a judgment of the Joint Arbitration Board, rendered after a hearing of the parties or after a default by one of the parties.

It is agreed that the F. I. L. M. Club of the City of New York, on behalf of its members, and the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce, on behalf of its members, guarantees that the decisions of the Joint Arbitration Board shall be carried out, but that an appeal allowed to the Board of Appeals under the rule hereinbefore specified, or allowed by the action of the Joint Arbitration Board, shall act as a stay in any case determined.

Exhibitor to Have Copy

The Board of Arbitration shall deem existing contracts and unpaid accounts binding upon the new owners, assignees of lease or purchasers of stock in a new corporation, operating a theatre, but shall not be binding upon the new owner of a theatre where such sale, assignment of lease or transfer of stock has not been made by the former operator of the theatre.

That the exchange shall leave an exact copy of the application with the exhibitor at the time it is signed.

When an application for film service is rejected in part or as to several of the pictures by the exchange, the exhibitor may at his option accept or reject the balance on such individual application.

Any application for film service which authorizes the exchange, or its officers as the attorney in fact or for an exhibitor, to separate the individual portions of his application into as many applications as there are pictures, shall be deemed, for the purpose of this cause, not to be a single application. This reservation is necessary, owing to the clause contained in the contract of Famous-Players Lasky Corporation, to which specific attention of all exhibitors is drawn.

Six in Board of Appeals

There shall be created a Board of Appearls of six; three of the members to represent the F. I. L. M. Club of the City of New York, and three of the members of which shall represent the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce. The Board of Appeals shall hear and determine all appeals submitted to it by the Joint Arbitration Board, or because the original hearing before said board was determined after a tie vote. The principles herein set forth for the guidance of the Joint Arbitration Board, shall be binding upon the Board of Appeals, and its decisions shall be made by a majority vote. In the event no majority vote is obtainable, the Board of Appeals shall have authority to nominate a disinterested umpire.

This agreement shall be binding upon all parties for a period of six months from the date hereof, subject to renewal from time to time as the parties hereto agree. The principles and rules herein recited shall be subject to amendment or addition or elimination when all parties to this agreement, after a hearing, determine to accept any suggested change, and such suggested change be ratified by the respective organizations, signatory hereto.

In witness whereof, this agreement has been signed and sealed in triplicate, this 27th day of December, 1921.

Melford Discusses Alluring Titles; to Use "The Cat That Walked Alone"

SPEAKING of the title that carries a lure, how's this 'The Cat that Walked Alone'?" said Director George Melford, who paid New York a short visit over the holidays. "This is the title of one of Sidney Colvin's best known famous poems, and it has always been considered largely responsible for the popularity of that particular work. 'The Cat That Walked Alone' is a title that has everything. It has rhythm, humor, originality and, best of all, a touch of the wierd and fantastic that will grab hold of anyone's imagination. We are going to use it as a name for my next production for Famous players, which will be started soon after I return to the West Coast."

Mr. Melford, in explaining the applicability of the title, stated that it referred to a young woman who is married to a man much older than herself and who discovers that his constant jealousy is insufferable. She decides to lose him and from that moment she becomes "The Cat That Walks Alone." The early part of the story is laid in London and the rest of it in Africa. There are many locations in California that will make beautiful and characteristic "African" settings, the director explained.

"The comedy with a touch of melodrama is the picture of the hour," was one of the interesting generalizations which Mr. Melford made. "The success of 'The Sheik' has been largely attributed to the melodramatic splashes which are found all the way through it. Call it 'hokum' or whatever you will, it is the type of action that will always go over, because it is always understandable. A far better example of this than 'The Sheik,' even, is 'The Moran of the Lady Letty' which has some tremendous climaxes on board ship. This is the latest Dorothy Dalton feature, and it has just been completed."

Suit Discontinued

Agreeable to a stipulation signed by the attorneys representing both sides to the controversy, Justice Robert F. Wagner of the New York Supreme Court has signed an order discontinuing the suit brought by the National Film Comporation of America against David P. Howell, well known in motion picture circles. The suit was for an alleged breach of contract.

than reflect the tastes and the public opinion of his country. Public opinion never needing an official reflector, there is no need for censorship. Effective public opinion is embodied in the preventive and repressive laws of a country, which leave no room for arbitrary individual opinions and rulings, and which are enforced in accordance with public opinion.

German Film Makes Debut

Last night at the end of a holiday the Romans love to celebrate, I attended the first performance in Italy of a so-called super-feature, "Lady Hamilton," a German-made film in seven reels. The showing occurred in the Teatro Constanza, at once the most modern, the most fashionable and the largest theatre in Rome. Heretofore this house confined its programs to the classic in the spoken drama and in grand opera. Its audiences were always made up of the best society in the Eternal City.

The owners of the film had conducted a very clever and intensive advertising campaign, and had announced that the proceeds of the sale of tickets would go to the War Orphans' Fund. The show opened at 21.30 p. m.—or in other words. at half-past nine—following the example of all high-class entertainments in Italy. Prices ranged from 250 lire to 40 lire ($10 to $1.50).

Poor Attendance

The response of the general public, for whom the high prices were impossible, was far from gratifying. The boxes and lodges were filled with fashionable people and with the glitter of military uniforms, but the popular sections of the theatre were very poorly attended. The patriotic object of the show, which had the indorsement of the King, accounted for the members in the $5 and $10 seats.

No American exhibitor would have permitted the way the picture was presented. The orchestra was a blaze of light directly in front of the curtain. There was a short intermission after every reel and a long intermission between the fourth and fifth reel. The projection seemed to be in the hands of amateurs.

Direction Jerky, Story Sordid

"Lady Hamilton," made by the S. I. A. C. of Germany, directed by Richard Oswald, had come to Italy after a short and highly successful run in Germany, where it had been shown at advanced prices in the big theatres. The film represents an earnest attempt to reach the standards of production typified in the Du Barry and Anne Boleyn pictures. The attempt is only moderately successful. Here and there one finds splendid work in the spectacular scenes and there are a few strong dramatic moments. Above all, one misses the smooth, swift flow of action, the direction being jerky and uncertain.

The story of the film deals with the love affairs between Lady Hamilton and Admiral Nelson. Lady Hamilton, a girl who began life in most unfavorable circumstances, has completely lost the sympathy of the audience when she encounters Nelson for the first time. According to the story, she had a very sordid past. Indeed, compared with her, Anne Boleyn was nothing less than a blessed saint and the Du Barry just a gay hearted little girl with unconventional notions as to morality. By the time this woman really becomes a factor in Nelson's life, somewhere along the fourth reel, she has been the mistress of half a dozen men.

Obviously German

The details as to her various meretricious adventures are brought out at considerable length and might be offensive to American taste. The woman playing the part of Lady Hamilton is remarkably pretty but wholly innocent of any ability to act. The man who impersonates Nelson is the Armand, who may be remembered by Americans for his good work in the Du Barry film. His work in this picture is good. The rest of the cast is fair enough.

It must be pointed out, however, that the German origin of the film asserts itself with great distinctness. This must be considered a severe handicap, not because of the war, which is over, but because of the inability of these Germans to give a convincing rendition of a British subject with Italian variations. Lord Hamilton, the Prince of Wales, indeed all the British characters are unreal and amusingly unconvincing. The same is true of the Italian characters, notably of the King of Naples and his court. The picture ends with an anti-climax after the death of Nelson. The last named scene, made after a famous painting, is one of the best in the picture. There is an abundance of fine backgrounds but the photography does not always register 100 per cent.

The race between the Italian picture "La Nave," described above, and the American film "Joan of Arc," both still running here, is a walk-over for the Yankee production.

Salesmen Hail Realart Absorption as Example of Economy in Whole Industry

AN example in economy for the whole industry." That's the way the trade is now interpreting the absorption of Realart by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. This is the idea even of those most directly affected by the Realart officers and managers. Several of the latter have been in New York during the past few days and are unanimous in classifying the merger as one of the most spectacular and daring strokes in the new campaign for greater economy.

"As outstanding as a lighthouse in a fog," said one of the former managers. "Honestly, now, why should Famous maintain two separate organizations to sell the output of one production department? The marvel to me, since the thing's been done, is that it wasn't done sooner.

"Times are tight and the past extravagances of the industry—exhibitor as well as producer—are being felt. They've wasted money everywhere—in production, in distribution and in exhibition. They're getting back to sanity. Isn't it natural, therefore, that such a marked tax on distribution as Realart represented should be eliminated?

"I don't know how much money this merger is going to save, but you can bet it will be a barrel. Distribution alone probably cost $1,000,000 and that item is now entirely eliminated. But selling hasn't stopped. That's the beauty of it. Famous can go right ahead with this work because it has an organization that's ample and there will be fewer pictures to market, even counting in the Realarts, than the same organization sold last season."

Zukor's Letter

The manager quoted was in possession of a farewell letter from President Morris Kohn of Realart to which was attached a copy of a letter from Adolph Zukor, explaining the cause of Realart's absorption. Mr. Zukor wrote:

"Because of the general unsatisfactory conditions existing in the motion picture industry at the present time, and in the interest of every possible economy, we have decided to combine the distribution of Realart and Paramount Pictures for the future, effective at once.

"In closing the Realart organization, I want to express to yourself, Mr. Woody, your loyal aides, and the entire personnel of the Realart institution, my deep personal gratitude for the splendid work you have done and for the loyalty and effort you have put behind the successful building up of the Realart organization.

"It is a matter of keen regret to myself and my associates that this step was necessary, and the abandonment of the Realart organization is in no sense a reflection on those who have loyally striven to make of it the splendid institution it developed into, from a managerial as well as a financial standpoint. Would you be kind enough to transmit my personal thanks to each member of your organization for his loyal support in the past?"

Quitting Big Business

According to J. S. Woody, general manager, Realart closed shop with assurances from its managers that January rentals would exceed expectations. February business, on a basis of reports, he says, promises well. "And for all of this we are indebted wholly to the hearty co-operation given by Realart exhibitors."

Mr. Woody sees much to the advantage of Realart customers in the consolidation with Famous. "We are quitting a healthy, profitable business," he says, "but it is quite clear to us that the large value represented by this business can be increased by the economies which eliminate a whole distributing organization. The saving will be large and cannot fail to result to the general benefit of exhibitors. The distributor's alternative in times like the present parallels that of the exhibitor. He either must reduce expenses or increase prices.

A Question of Economy

"It was not a question at all of Realart's profits. It was a matter solely of how much could be saved by consolidation. The revenues we have insured will continue to come in, but the expense we have been incurring will cease. In other words, our rentals will be turned from gross income into net profit. Realart Pictures will be merged with those of Famous and service will continue under even better conditions than have prevailed in the past, because the other organization is larger than ours, has more branch offices, more employes and better distribution facilities than we had been able to provide.

"The finale was one of the quickest in motion picture history. But in spite of this fact I understand that most of the boys have made new connections. And that this is particularly true of the managers and salesmen speaks very eloquently for the ability and reputation of the men in Realart's employ. The co-operation which home office and branch office employes have given Famous Players-Lasky has been a very large and important factor in effecting speedy and orderly transfer. This in itself is an unusual condition, quite different from the customary scurrying from a sinking ship.

Praise for Sales Force

"I know that the elimination of Realart is not going to delay long the resumption of personal friendships which universally existed between exhibitors and our boys in the field. Most of the latter will again come in touch with their old customers as the representatives of other concerns. For all of them, however lined up, I bespeak continued confidence. They are men of high ideals.

"I owe personal acknowledgement to exhibitors as a result of the many favors and courtesies which they have extended to me and to the Realart staff during the existence of this organization. And I speak on behalf of all of us, from president down, when I say that no men ever have had more encouragement and real co-operation from their customers than has been given to us by the buyers of the industry."

Executives' Plans

Plans for the future, it is understood, have not been completed by any of the Realart executives. Mr. Kohn is quoted as saying he probably will continue his identification with motion pictures, but has not yet given serious thought to the future.

Rumor has connected Mr. Woody's name with several prospective deals, but the report most commonly credited is that he has formed a motion picture brokerage partnership with Fred Quimby and will open offices in the film district within the near future. The formal announcement that was expected to have been made this week has been delayed by illness which confined Mr. Woody to his home for several days last week.

Visitors Here

Dario L. Faralla, assistant treasurer of Realart, probably will be busy for several weeks closing the books of the corporation. He states that his plans are undecided. Jay A. Gove, assistant general manager, is making arrangements this week which will continue his identification with sales supervision work in the industry.

W. R. Scates, Boston; Harry E. Lotz, Buffalo; Harry W. Willard, Chicago; James B. Reilly, Cleveland; James S. Hommel, Pittsburgh; Floyd Lewis, St. Louis, and Louis Reichert, Washington, are among the Realart managers who have visited New York within the last few days. All of them are reported to have made satisfactory arrangements for the future.

Canadian Customs Revise Regulations Covering Imported Film and Accessories

THE N. A. M. P. I. has received word that the Canadian Department of Customs has revised its instructions regarding the designation of country of origin which must be indicated upon all film and film accessories shipped into Canada. Section 13 of the "Country of Origin" regulations now reads: "The name of a manufacturer or his trade mark, accompanied by the name of the country or a place in a province, state or other division of a country where the goods have been manufactured or produced, will be accepted as sufficient indication of the country of origin."

The Chief Clerk of the Customs Office at Ottawa advises that insofar as lithographs are concerned, the name of the maker and the city in which they are made on the lithograph itself will be sufficient indication of the country of origin; further, that: "Imported films will be required to be marked with an indication of the country of origin on each reel."

The situation is uncertain as regards printed matter. It would appear, however, that the words. "Printed in U. S. A." or "Made in U. S. A." on each copy will be acceptable; also that under Paragraph 13 a marking such as "Printed by Jones Press, Philadelphia, Pa.," will be acceptable, without leaving the importer liable to the 10 per cent. surtax.

It is believed by the N. A. M. P. I. that the regulations will be rather more liberally interpreted than was at first intended, although it is apparent that the wishes of the Canadian manufacturers will ultimately prevail and all imported goods will have to be marked with the country of origin according to the regulations laid down.

Coroner Blames A. S. Black for Rialto Blaze, But No Arrests Are Expected

ALFRED S. BLACK, president of the Connecticut Theatres Corporation, one of New England's leading exhibitors, was one of the three men held criminally responsible for the death of nine persons at the burning of the Rialto Theatre in New Haven two weeks ago. Mr. Black heads the company which owned the theatre. The others blamed for the blaze by Coroner Eli Mix, following his inquest, are City Building Inspector Joseph E. Austin and Lawrence W. Carroll, manager of the Rialto. City officials of New Haven stated late this week that no warrants for any arrest would be issued until after the findings had been completely investi the findings of the Coroner had been completely investigated by City Attorney Whitaker's office.

The report of the Coroner contained 18,000 words and while it held the three above mentioned persons responsible for the fire, it also contained a bitter arraignment of New Haven authorities, among them being Chief of Police Philip T. Smith and Censor Frank Callahan. The report created a sensation in theatrical circles in New England, as it had been generally believed that the theatre men would be exonerated by the coroner. While the report has been submitted, in circles believed to be close to the municipal authorities the belief prevailed that no arrests would be made, although the findings did pave the way for the institution of civil suits for damages against Mr. Black and his company.

Motion picture and legitimate theatres in New Haven have since the fire been operating without a license. Immediately after the Rialto fire the city authorities revoked the licenses of all theatres, but have permitted them to operate on a weekly permit issued by the police authorities. However, it is believed in political circles that at least one theatre will be closed as the result of the rigid investigation of the theatre structures that is now being conducted. The theatre in question, however, is not a motion picture house.

Taxes Indicate Greater Theatrical Attendance

Increased theatrical attendance throughout the country in November is indicated by reports to Washington, the tax collections for the month of November showing a decided advance over those for the preceding month.

A total of $6,995,338 was collected from the admission tax in November, according to figures just made public by the Bureau of Internal Revenue, as compared with $6,413,426 in October. The November collections from this source, however, were considerably below those of the same month of last year, when $7,982,248 was reported.

The film tax, repealed on January 1, totaled $567,055 in November, as compared with $388,616 in October, while the receipts from the seating capacity tax were $49,933, as compared with $77,178.

Tax collections from all sources during November aggregated $164,684,916, as compared with $153,176,499 in October, and $187,165,985 in November of last year. In addition to the direct taxes on the industry, the producers and exhibitors of the country contributed material to a number of other taxes, reports to the bureau showing that a total of $11,114,999 was collected from the tax on freight shipments, $1,325,695 from express packages, $6,812,548 from personal transportation, $811,546 from seats, berths and staterooms, and $2,326,377 from telegraph and long-distance telephone messages. With the exception of the levy on telegraph and telephone messages, these taxes were all repealed on January 1.

Conservation Needed, Says Crawford

CONSERVATISM is the keynote of success," says Roy Crawford, treasurer of Associated Exhibitors. "Banks and all big-going corporations follow it. There seems to me to be a great deal of waste in the picture business, particularly in the producing end. When this waste is eliminated, and more conservatism shown in this end of the industry, greater profits will pile up both for the distributor and the producer, and it will make for easier financing for future productions.

"The producer who can meet the payments of his notes at the bank is the one who is conservative in his production cost. Likewise, the distributing organization, operating on the same principles, is the one who can give the independent producer quick returns. Banks will be more free and ready to give their financial assistance to producers and distributing organizations when they know that conservative methods are being used."

Mr. Crawford has interests in a number of theatres in the Middle West, and states that he and his associates have always used conservatism in the operation of their theatres. And the result has been that during the period of depression their theatres all operated at a profit. They did not let the cost of operation of their theatres during wartimes pile up to such an extent that when business began to slacken it had any material effect.

Invaluable Co-operation Characterizes Arrangements for the Albany Convention

NO convention of New York State exhibitors has ever brought forth the co-operation which is characterizing arrangements for the one which will be held in Albany on February 14, 15 and 16. Headed by Charles M. Winchester, former president of the Albany Chamber of Commerce and one of the biggest men in the Capital City, a committee has been named by the chamber to co-operate with the Albany Theatrical Managers' Association. On this committee are a dozen of the leading business men of the city.

The New York Central Railroad has come forward and promised reduced fares to all delegates attending the convention. It also has volunteered to use a large number of 24-sheets on all billboards within a radius of fifty miles from Albany. These will advertise both the convention and the ball, which is expected to be one of the leading social affairs of the winter at Albany.

From the top of Capitol Hill a huge electric sign at night will carry a message to all that the convention is in progress. A huge welcome sign, donated by the Albany Chamber of Commerce, will adorn the front of the Hotel Ten Eyck, headquarters of the convention.

George Roberts, president of the Albany Theatrical Managers' Association, and Samuel Suckno, treasurer, spent a portion of last week in New York and returned to Albany brimful of enthusiasm and ideas.

Producers have promised that their stars in the East in February will personally appear at the ball. The contract for decorating the huge State armory for this feature of the convention has been let to a New York concern. Thousands of electric lights will be used in securing the desired decorative effects.

Although the convention is still a matter of six weeks distant, requests for reservations are already beginning to reach Samuel Suckno, who has charge of this part of the arrangements. When Mr. Suckno returned from New York his pockets bulged with requests.

There will be twenty booths for the exchanges. Many of these have already been taken. The booths will be of uniform size, each to contain forty-eight square feet. They will be arranged around the three sides of the room, leaving a large center space available for the crowds which are sure to throng the room. There has probably never been a better arrangement for the exchanges at any convention.

President Roberts has sent letters to all exhibitors and exchanges in New York State, calling attention to the coming convention. In this letter he says:

"You know what organization has accomplished for the exhibitors. You also realize that there is nothing like 'getting together' when it comes to doing things. This convention is going to be a 100 per cent. affair. It will be one of accomplishments. We want you on hand. Don't be a stay-at-home and regret it later. Have a say in bettering conditions. There is too much at stake to be lukewarm. They will all be there from Broadway to Main street.

"Bring the ladies. There will be a special committee on hand to look after their entertainment in the way of luncheons, theatre parties and automobile trips.

"Do this now! Write Samuel Suckno, Albany Theatre, Albany, N. Y., telling him just what you want in hotel reservations, what nights, approximate prices, etc. This is important."

This letter will be followed up with weekly bulletins from now on to all exhibitors and exchanges, calling attention to this or that feature which will be arranged as time goes on.

Exhibitors from Massachusetts, Connecticut and Vermont will be cordially welcomed to the convention. It is expected that at least 300 will be sent up from New York City. The Buffalo delegation will probably come in a special car. Syracuse, Rochester, and in fact all the large cities of the State, will be represented 100 per cent. strong.

Attractive posters will be sent to all exchanges within a week or two, advertising the convention. The exchanges will also receive stickers for all mail matter.

Arrangements for those who will be heard at the banquet will rest largely with Sydney S. Cohen, national president; Charles L. O'Reilly, State president, and State Senator James J. Walker.

President Roberts earnestly desires that all persons planning to attend the convention should arrange their hotel reservations at once in order that there will be no confusion on the opening day. Requests for such reservations should be made to Samuel Suckno.

Two Incorporations

The closing week of the year found only two companies entering the motion picture business in New York State, and filing papers in the secretary of state's office at Albany. These corporations, with their directors and amount of capitalization, were the Jupiter Film Corporation $25,000, H. C. Trewedi, A. H. Goodman, Jane Morgan, of New York City; Just Because, Inc., $40,000, A. G. Scheer, M. C. Berman, New York; M. C. Hicks, of Mount Vernon.

Goes to Paramount

Harry Reichenbach, who has been handling the special exploitation and advertising for Universal's "Foolish Wives," has resigned to take effect immediately after the opening of that picture at the Central Theatre and will immediately join Famous Players-Lasky for special work on "The World's Mistress."

Riesenfeld Agrees with Taylor That Music Must Be Subservient to Picture: Terms It An Opiate

WILLIAM D. TAYLOR, one of the oldest and best known directors, recently protested against the overwhelming quantity of music and the so-called "atmospheric prologues" of the programs in the better class picture theatres. His objections were not merely personal, but were an expression of the Motion Picture Directors' Association, an organization that has on its membership rolls some of the biggest figures in the directorial branch of picture production.

Now Hugo Riesenfeld, director of the Rivoli, Rialto and Criterion theatres, New York, contributes to the discussion. And it seems strange to find the sponsor of music in motion pictures supporting Mr. Taylor's view that the music and all the attending numbers must be subservient to the feature film.

Mr. Taylor insists that the picture is the thing. Mr. Riesenfeld—the man who first turned to the classics to score a picture; the first musician of any prominence to desert the field of opera for the film; the man who made his reputation on his "presentations and prologues"—joins Mr. Taylor in saying that the picture is the thing.

Music An Opiate

"The whole purpose of music with pictures was originally to satisfy the ear so that the eye could give its attention to the screen," explained Mr. Riesenfeld. "It was a sort of opiate, nothing more. That was the fundamental theory upon which music was originally introduced in motion picture presentation, and if the exhibitor will hold to that central idea he cannot go far astray. If he will bear in mind that the work of men like Mr. Taylor and others shall be the center of his program, that the music is merely incidental, he will be safe. If he is led to believe that because his patrons like good music he must give them more and still more music, he is doomed to disappointment, because, primarily, his patrons want pictures.

"Why do we need music with pictures? Because the ear demands it. Nearly every action in life has sound connected with it. And on the stage there is the human voice and color as well as action. When the patron turned to the motion picture for entertainment, it was natural that the human voice should be sought as well as the figures in dramatic action. Without a sound except the whirring of the projection machine or the whispering of the audience, there would be an unnaturalness about the silent drama which would be disconcerting. The players would be seen to speak—their words might even be read upon the screen—but there would be no sound. Naturally, it was found necessary to appease the demands of the ear, and music was introduced.

To Rest the Eye

"In time this musical side of the entertainment was given great study and an effort was made to bring together the emotional force of the music with the appropriate action on the screen. And there was, at the same time, a development in the orchestral side, until the piano and the primitive organ disappeared and fine symphony orchestras were used. And so it went on, progress in music setting and in the orchestras.

"Then there was the problem of the entire program. A motion picture entertainment takes about two hours, yet it is almost physically impossible to watch pictures for that length of time. That is why pictures were made to alternate with stage numbers, a bit of dance, an orchestral selection or a vocal solo. It was to give the eye a rest that these stage and music numbers were introduced. And, of course, the best possible numbers were presented.

The Danger

"This wonderful development of motion picture presentation continued with remarkable strides—and hidden in that fact lies the danger. The public liked fine music settings with its pictures, it appreciated the symphony orchestras, the vocal selections, the dance numbers, and immediately it was presumed that more and more of that side of the entertainment was desired. The original purpose was being forgotten and music and stage numbers were made a fetich. The servant was placed in the master's chair and obeisance was paid to a usurper.

"After all is said and done, the picture is the thing. We know that the public likes music with its pictures. A good orchestra, a properly prepared score and well selected soloists will give the theatre a steady clientele, provided, of course, that the average of pictures is good. Music will increase the attendance when the photoplays are good, but will not draw patrons if the pictures are uniformly bad."

Louis Green, Fox Manager, Dies Suddenly in Albany

Louis Green, 35 years old, resident manager for Fox Film Corporation in Albany, N. Y., died on January 4. Two weeks ago he caught cold and it developed into congestion of the lungs. He was well known throughout New England and New York, having at one time been Select manager in New Haven and later with George Klein in Buffalo. He leaves a wife and two children. The funeral will be held in Roxbury, Mass., but the date has not been announced.

Vitagraph's Production Plans Announced; Jose in the West; Tarkington Novel Is Bought

INTENTLY absorbed in the production plans for 1922, President Albert E. Smith, of Vitagraph, has been in close touch with West Coast production conditions since his arrival in Hollywood a few weeks ago from New York. Together with W. S. Smith, manager of the West Coast Vitagraph Studios, the company president has well under way the schedule which marks the closing of 1921 and which will usher in the New Year.

Among the announcements made this week by Mr. Smith was the item that Edward Jose has arrived from Vitagraph's Brooklyn studios, where he has directed some of the most important Vitagraph pictures of the past year. Mr. Jose arrived in Los Angeles just before Christmas, having completed the work of many months on "The Prodigal Judge," starring Jean Paige. Vitagraph is confident the picture will be classed among the most successful of its products.

Mr. Jose will assume direction of Earl Williams in a new type of story for Mr. Williams, "The Man from Downing Street." The story has to do with a captain in the British secret service who becomes an East Indian Rajah in order to ferret out treacherous individuals responsible for leakage in England's code messages. Production has been commenced.

Another item of news from the West Coast is that Alice Calhoun, who starred so successfully in the Vitagraph production of "The Little Minister," will remain on the West Coast and start immediately upon a picture entitled "Angelface." David Smith will continue to direct her.

President Smith announced this week that he had purchased the rights to the novel, "The Magnificent Ambersons." This story by Booth Tarkington has been proclaimed one of the great American novels. The film will be one of the early Vitagraph specials of 1922. Star and director have not as yet been chosen. An Irish story also has been decided upon for one of the 1922 specials.

William Duncan and his co-star, Edith Johnson, have just commenced camera work on "Man Hunters," a story of the Alaskan Northwest. During 1922 Duncan is scheduled to produce eight pictures of a dramatic nature. Larry Semon is in the midst of his latest comedy. Jimmy Aubrey is just putting the finishing touches to his latest two-reel comedy.

Files Counter Suit

Answer to a suit brought in the New York Supreme Court by the Cinema Distributing Corporation against Joe Horowitz for breach of contract, has been filed. Horowitz asks that the complaint be dismissed and sets up a counterclaim asking for $2,000. He says that on February 21 an agreement was effected between himself and the corporation which gave to him the exclusive right to exhibit "Dollars and Destiny" for a period of five years at a rental of $5,000, with the understanding, however, that the picture would pass every board of censors in the various states. Should it meet with the disapproval of any of the boards it was agreed, he says, that the plaintiff would refund his money.

Horowitz alleges that the picture failed to be approved by the censors in several states, and that in consequence there is no merit to the allegations of the plaintiff, and that there is due him, under this feature of the contract, $2,000.

Saxes Add to Holdings

The Saxe Amusement Enterprises, operated by Thomas and J. E. Saxe, has taken over the Roy Cummings Theatres in Oshkosh, namely the Majestic, Orpheum and Grand. The Saxe organization now controls twenty theatres in Wisconsin, according to information from E. C. Bostick, general manager.

Berinstein Arranging Surprises for Banquet

William Berinstein, named as chairman of the committee arranging the banquet which will be the concluding of the New York State exhibitors' convention in Albany in February, is owner of the Colonial Theatre in that city and has an interest also in the Hudson Theatre. Mr. Berinstein is also interested in the Majestic and Mozart Theatres in Elmira.

He entered the motion picture business about eight years ago, becoming associated first with the Hudson Theatre in Albany, and then securing the larger Colonial, a house which seats about 1,400. Mr. Berinstein promises plenty of entertainment and pleasant surprises in connection with the banquet.

Laemmle Offers to Cut Prices to Enable Exhibitors to Break Even

IN a statement just issued by Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Film Manufacturing Company, the offer is made to cut prices on behalf of any exhibitor in America who can prove that he is really losing money.

Mr. Laemmle calls attention to the fact that this offer does not apply to any exhibitor who is breaking even or making a profit, that it is only intended to prevent theatre failures, and that where an exhibitor proves that he is actually operating at a loss he will authorize Universal's nearest representative to cut film rentals enough to enable the exhibitor to at least break even.

Continuing, Mr. Laemmle states that while some exhibitors complain even when they are cleaning up, for the purpose of hammering down film rentals, that producers realize in many cases the complaints are justified, that Universal feels that everyone in the picture business should have a fighting chance and if by reason of high film rentals any exhibitor is unable to break even he will meet him half way in this respect.

Mr. Laemmle's statement further calls attention to the big improvement in Universal pictures, to the excellent staff of directors and to the manner in which waste has been eliminated.

The only exception made to this offer is in the case of Universal's "million dollar" picture, "Foolish Wives," regarding which he says: "I'm going to get every dollar I can for that production because I've got to. You need no diagram to show you why."

Both Foes and Friends of Censorship Will Speak in New York High Schools

THROUGH an arrangement between the Board of Education of the City of New York and the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, William A. Brady, D. W. Griffith and Paul H. Cromlin, film exporter, will speak against censorship in several high schools in Brooklyn, Manhattan and the Bronx, between January 12 and February 27. At each of these lectures there will be shown a model motion picture program and the speakers will offer arguments of the ineffectiveness of censorship and its menace to the industry, as well as to the fundamental rights of the public.

These lectures will not take the form of debates. Although the advocates of censorship will also speak under the auspices of the Board of Education, the dates to be assigned them will not conflict with the appearance of the motion picture men.

Among the champions of censorship who will seek to justify legalized screen control are Mrs. Clarence Waterman, Canon William S. Chase and Frederick Boyd Stevenson, all of whom figured in the campaign which resulted in the enactment of a censorship law in New York State. Joseph Levenson, secretary of the New York State Motion Picture Commission, will be another speaker.

The double-barrelled censorship discussion under the auspices of the Board of Education is the outgrowth of a recent anti-censorship lecture by William A. Brady in the American Museum of Natural History in which Mr. Brady handled the censorship subject without gloves and made a favorable impression. Ernest L. Crandall, Director of Lectures of the Board of Education, decided then that the subject of censorship was of sufficient interest to warrant a series of lectures in the high schools, but he considered it only fair to have both sides of the censorship controversy represented in these discussions.

Charles Ray Back in Los Angeles

After a seven-week absence from his studio, Charles Ray is back in Los Angeles. The star and his party returned from their Eastern tour on Dec. 29, after having spent the Christmas holiday in New Orleans. In the best of health and spirits and rejuvenated by his interesting and diverting trip through the East and South, Mr. Ray plunged into his production activities the day after his homecoming.

Friends declare nothing else could have proved so valuable a mental and physical tonic as the trip to the East. In his visits to Chicago, New York, Boston and other centers, Mr. Ray was enabled to meet the best minds in the producing and exhibiting end of the industry and the interchange of ideas has not only given Mr. Ray a broader insight into exhibitor needs and audience appeal, but has confirmed him in many of the good ideas which he has long held regarding the creation of photoplays. One of the most satisfying convictions which Mr. Ray brings back to the studio with him, and one which has been endorsed everywhere in his travels is the star's time-honored policy that clean pictures pay.

During his last stop-over in the city of New Orleans, Mr. Ray made only one public appearance, at a large dinner tendered to him by the Advertising Club of New Orleans. Prominent citizens and government officials were among those present to welcome the star.

Cosmopolitan Sales Head Goes on Tour

Hal Hodes, sales manager of Cosmopolitan Productions, will leave New York on January 3 for an extended trip through the United States for the purpose of getting into direct touch with those who distribute and those who exhibit the product of International Film Service Company, Inc.

Mr. Hodes' itinerary will take him to Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Kansas City, Omaha, Denver, Seattle, Portland, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Dallas, New Orleans, Atlanta and Charlotte.

Mr. Hodes will visit all of the domestic exchanges of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, distributor of Cosmopolitan Productions, to get in touch with the selling force so that all concerned may have personal knowledge of the aims of the producing unit and its plans for the future.

Viola Dana and B. Lytell to Tour United States

Bert Lytell and Viola Dana, Metro stars, are about to embark on a get-acquainted tour of the United States that will take one player or the other into practically every big city in the country. The cross-country jaunt has been made possible through a combination of circumstance.

Both stars have received thousands of letters requesting them to appear at various theatres throughout the country. Though the dates of their appearances have not yet been settled, it is proposed that each start at the West Coast and zig-zag to the Atlantic, stopping at the most important cities en route. Lytell will reach New York first because of the necessity of filling an engagement there. Miss Dana, however, probably will visit the South.

Silver Service Is Given J. P. Bickell on Fifth Anniversary of Regal Films

ONE of the most outstanding functions in the whole history of the picture business in Canada took place on Thursday, December 29, when a complimentary banquet was tendered J. P. Bickell at the King Edward Hotel, Toronto, Ontario, the occasion being the fifth anniversary of the establishment of Regal Films, Ltd., one of the greatest film exchanges in the Dominion, and of the Regent Theatre Company, Toronto.

Mr. Bickell is the vice-president of the Famous Players' Canadian Corporation and of the Eastern Theatres, Ltd., as well as being identified in an official capacity with associated enterprises, including Regal Films, Ltd., Famous-Lasky Film Service, Ltd., Hamilton Theatres, Ltd., Regent Theatre Company of Toronto and other organizations. Employes of the associated companies from coast to coast assembled to the number of 300.

A unique feature of the occasion was the presentation to Mr. Bickell of a magnificent service of solid silver, comprising 225 pieces, in an English walnut cabinet, and of a morocco-bound album containing views of the forty-two theatres in Canada controlled by the Bickell interests, the honors being performed by N. L. Nathanson, managing director of the affiliated companies. The name and inscription plate on the album is of pure gold from the McIntyre Mine in Northern Ontario, in the development of which Mr. Bickell has been closely identified.

To remind the guest of honor of the originating point in his success in business, one corner of the banquet hall had been transformed into an ingeniously lighted grotto, which was a replica of the shaft head of the McIntyre Mine. A sextette of lovely women was raised in turn by an elevating contrivance from the depth of this shaft, and each young woman bore a tray of the silverware. After each tray had been placed in the immense cabinet, the actual presentation took place.

J. L. Day Says American Pictures Have and Will Hold First Place in Brazil

JOHN L. DAY, South American representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, returned to New York on December 23, from a stay of several months in Brazil and Argentina in the interests of the foreign department, under the direction of E. E. Shauer. Considerable time was devoted to the Paramount offices in Rio de Janeiro, Peliculas D'Luxo Da America Do Sul, where extensive arrangements were made for increased distribution facilities during the coming year.

"Despite the low position of Brazilian exchange, the motion picture industry has enjoyed good business during the last few months," said Mr. Day. Among the most popular pictures, he said, have been "Male and Female," "Midsummer Madness" and "The Furnace."

"The outlook for 1922 business is much more cheerful," Mr. Day stated. "There is a firm belief that Brazil's exchange position will be considerably improved during the coming months, and this will have a most beneficial effect upon the motion picture industry. The world exposition to be held in Rio de Janeiro next September should draw many people to Brazil and will no doubt bring much new business for the motion picture theatres.

"Despite the efforts of foreign producers to gain a strong foothold in Brazil, the highest grade American pictures continue to hold first place and cannot be displaced in the estimation of the critical public. During 1922, as in the past, Brazil should continue to be one of the greatest of all markets for American pictures anywhere in the Southern hemisphere."

New Distribution Plan for Fox Film in Orient; To Erect Better Theatres

FOX productions will be distributed throughout the entire Orient, with the exception of Japan, by the Middle East Films, Ltd. Negotiations with the Oriental distributing agency were consummated through Joseph Fisher, an official of the concern. Distribution of films in the Orient has been greatly limited, due to many conflicting forces. By this agreement hundreds of theatres in China, the Malay Peninsula, Manchuria and other countries, will be in a position to contract for Fox productions.

According to Fisher, William Farnum and Tom Mix, the Fox stars, are the most popular screen artists with the inhabitants of those remote parts of the world. Picture patrons there are especially fond of speedy action. Fisher tells many interesting facts about the screen and its followers in the Orient. Many theatres in Java, Straits, Settlement and China have a transparent screen with the auditorium divided into two parts. On one side sit the elite, while on the other side the coolies and poorer class enjoy the films. Apparently it makes little difference to those "on the other side" that the titles are shown upside down. They follow the story closely and applaud and laugh at the right time.

In the past, film has been handled so carelessly in the Orient that its life has been short. This is in great part due to native operators, who are not skilled in their work. The men who are now working for the good of the business in the Orient are taking steps to rectify this, to school operators and have films handled with care.

Bronx Elects Wittman for Tenth Consecutive Time

At a largely attended meeting of the Bronx Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association, on December 22, John J. Wittman was elected to serve a tenth consecutive term as president. John C. Bolte was made vice-president for the third consecutive time, and Henry Cole went in as executive secretary for the ninth time. Henry Suchman got a second term as treasurer. Others elected were: Trustees, Edward Falter, Morris Sussman and Isadore Rothman; sergeant-at-arms, William Wilson. The tenth annual installation of officers will be staged at a banquet on January 25. The organization has a 100 per cent. membership.

Arliss Appears at the Aldine

Mr. and Mrs. George Arliss appeared in person on the stage in the new Aldine Theatre, Philadelphia, shortly before 1 A. M., January 2, in connection with the first local showing of the screen version of "Disraeli."

Mr. Arliss set a new high mark in the matter of "personal appearances," and in a brief and humorous address further endeared himself to the more than 2,000 persons crowded into the edifice, while hundreds in nearby streets echoed the applause while braving the high wind and excessive cold, waiting to enter the theatre. Near-zero weather prevailed.

Mr. Arliss has been prevented, heretofore, from making any personal appearance. His stage play, "The Green Goddess," at the Booth Theatre, in New York, occupies too much of his time.

C. DeMille and P. Iribe Introduced to the Pope

According to a letter received by Mrs. Cecil B. DeMille at Hollywood during the holiday season, Mr. DeMille and his art director, Paul Iribe, who are enjoying a vacation trip abroad, were recently presented to His Holiness Pope Benedict XV., during a brief visit to Rome. Later in their tour, Mr. Iribe has arranged for Mr. DeMille to meet the President of France and other notables of the republic.

On his return to Hollywood, Mr. De Mille plans to produce Alice Duer Miller's story, "Manslaughter," with Leatrice Joy in the principal feminine role.

This publication is dedicated to the service of the moving picture industry in all of its elements. Its foundation is character, its watchword is enterprise, its aim is betterment.

AS a sporting proposition there is no more interesting news of the week than the offer made by Mr. Carl Laemmle, of Universal to cut picture prices to any exhibitor who will demonstrate that he is losing money. Laemmle's offer includes the agreement to cut film rentals enough to enable the exhibitor to at least break even, and, according to the statement, is intended to prevent theatre failures.

We commend to your attention the talk in this week's issue by Rupert Hughes on the subject of moving pictures and the critics. It is so well done — so apt, so true—that we advise its reading and re-reading so that the material it contains can be put to practical use by every one associated in any way with the screen. Many of us have been at a loss to meet the sneers of the critics of moving pictures because we have not fully appreciated the greatness of the screen. Mr. Hughes, in felicitious phrases, gives us the material we need, and the industry—art, business—is again indebted to this able man.

Mr. Griffith Rises to a Dizzy Height

AGLOW with color, pulsing with life, eager, rapid, massive, sumptuous, "Orphans of the Storm" has made its bow to New York and another great Griffith success begins its history.

It is a triumph for David Wark Griffith to eclipse his own great productions which led the screen into new and finer realms, but with this picture he has succeeded in doing it. No more gorgeous thing has ever been offered on the screen. It has motion within motion, action upon action, and it builds up to crashing climaxes with all that superb definiteness and certainty which makes Mr. Griffith first and always the showman.

No man of the stage or screen understands so well the art of exquisite torture for his spectators. He takes their heart-strings, one by one, stretches them out until they are about to snap, then ties little bowknots in them and finally seizes them by handsful and twists them until they quiver in agony. Then he applies myrrh and aloes and sweet unguents and sends the spectators away happy in the memory of attractive sufferings that they never can forget.

Taken from the play "The Two Orphans", it is a story of the events which lead up to and include the French Revolution. Its detail is perfection and its grandeur is the sum total of many perfections. It is emotional, throbbing and sustained, telling a definite story of a fine love that runs like a gold cord through the wonderful fabric of a spectacle drama that is at once brutal, exotic, fascinating and absorbing.

Miss Lillian Gish and Miss Dorothy Gish are beyond praise, and each of the character roles is drawn superbly. Monte Blue as Danton is magnificent. Its massed scenes surpass the greater of the European spectacles thus far of record.

A discriminating audience at the Apollo Theatre received it with unbounded enthusiasm, and we believe that some measure of this applause was due—as well it might be—to the richness and beauty of its musical score.

A fine lesson for our industry is to be found in the prominence given to the attitude of the sly monster, Robespierre, who uses the guillotine to eliminate all who do not think as he does. This spirit fits the censor and it fits the sly politicians in our industry who seek to destroy by the guillotine of defamation and slander those who do not think as they do.

Mr. Griffith responded to the demands for a speech, and Miss Lillian Gish and Miss Dorothy Gish greeted the audience from a procenium box. Miss Lillian spoke briefly, and very well, her words of thanks for the unquestioned genuineness of the enthusiasm.

We see nothing between Mr. Griffith and many millions of dollars as the financial rewards of this his newest effort, but above and beyond that Mr. Griffith has achieved in a manner that should fill him, as it does the industry, with satisfaction.

ARTHUR JAMES.

News from the Producers

By C. S. SEWELL

Paramount's West Coast Studios Are a Hive of Production

With twelve companies working simultaneously, the Paramount West Coast studios are now enjoying one of the busiest periods in the company's history. Continuous heavy rains have interfered considerably with exterior work, but this condition has to a great extent been offset by the increased facilities for interior production through the completion of the big glass stage at the Lasky plant.

William DeMille is now well into the story of "Bought and Paid For," which Clara Beranger adapted for the screen from the play by George Broadhurst. Agnes Ayres and Jack Holt play the leading roles, with Walter Hiers in the part that Frank Craven created on the stage. William D. Taylor is almost through with his Betty Compson vehicle titled "The Green Temptation." It was adapted from a magazine story by Constance Lindsay Skinner. The authors of the adaptation are Monte M. Katterjohn and Julia Crawford Ivers. The supporting cast includes Mahlon Hamilton, Theodore Kosloff and Mary Thurman.

With the very first suggestion of a return of clear weather, James Cruze took a portion of his company making "Is Matrimony a Failure?" to Bakersfield for the last shots. T. Roy Barnes plays the leading role and the big cast also includes Lois Wilson, Lila Lee, Walter Hiers, ZaSu Pitts, Lillian Leighton, Tully Marshall, Sylvia Ashton, Otis Harlan, Charles Ogle and Ethel Wales. "Beyond the Rocks," in which Gloria Swanson has the stellar role, is rapidly developing. This is the Elinor Glyn story which Jack Cunningam adapted and Sam Wood is directing.

Wallace Reid, directed by Philip Rosen, is back from the Mojave where scenes were made for "Across the Continent," which Byron Morgan wrote expressly for Mr. Reid. The story is about a transcontinental automobile contest. Mary MacLaren plays opposite the star and Betty Francisco plays an ingenue heavy role.

Back From Arizona, Thomas Meighan's company making "The Proxy Daddy," under direction of Alfred Green, are now at work on interior scenes at the Lasky studio. Leatrice Joy is leading woman in this picture which Olga Printzlau adapted from the story by Edwrad Peple. Ranch scenes and interiors showing a western drink emporium are occupying the attention of Dorothy Dalton and company making Virgie E. Roe's "Tharon of Lost Valley" under the direction of Paul Powell. Jack Mower plays opposite Miss Dalton.

The sound of firearms has been a conspicuous feature on the Wanda Hawley set, where "The Truthful Liar" is being produced. Thomas Heffron, director, has been making some dramatic scenes for this production, which is an adaptation by Percy Heath of a story by Will Payne. It is a Realart Picture for Famous Players-Lasky release.

The coming of clear weather found May McAvoy's company completing "Through a Glass Window" on location. This Realart picture for Famous Players-Lasky is by Olga Printzlau and is directed by Maurice Campbell. Having completed "A Game Chicken" for Famous Players-Lasky release. Bebe Daniels is enjoying her first real vacation in over eighteen months.

The difficulty of making chemicals "act" has been a feature of work in "The Heart Specialist," the Mary Miles Minter feature which Frank Urson is directing. Constance Binney can soon pack up her nightie and don regular day-time garments. Under the direction of Edward Le Saint, Miss Binney is making the final scenes for "The Sleep Walker."

Ince's "Hail the Woman" to Go Direct to the Picture Houses

"Hail the Woman," the Thomas H. Ince special production which is to be released by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., will go direct to the exhibitors of the country instead of playing in "legitimate" theatres in the key cities.

This decision gives the exhibitors of the country a big box office attraction at the peak of a season when many of the big pictures are being held for runs in regular playhouses, which are being offered to producers of big pictures because of conditions in the theatrical business.

There has been considerable comment during the last few weeks over the exhibitors' needs of big pictures at this special season of the year to stimulate public patronage of the motion picture box office, and Mr. Ince's decision was based upon his belief that the regular motion picture theatre is entitled to every film attraction that is produced.

This is in no way a cricitism of the producer who plays his big pictures first in legitimate theatres, but rather an independent determination on Mr. Ince's own part to do all within his power to help build business for the motion picture theatres of the United States.

As a consequence the first booking of "Hail the Woman" was at Balaban & Katz's magnificent Chicago theatre, where the picture played the week before Christmas. The Chicago is Balaban & Katz's first venture into big theatre presentation in downtown Chicago, and as good showmen they wanted the biggest possible attraction for the week before Christmas.

Exhibitors in some territories took advantage of the Christmas appeal of "Hail the Woman" to present the production during Christmas week. Among the houses which played the Ince special, commencing Christmas Day, were the Palace at Wichita, Kan., the Grand at Topeka, Kan., and the A. H. Blank theatres of Des Moines, Burlington, Decorah, Davenport and Fort Dodge, Iowa.

The first general presentation of "Hail the Woman" in big theatres will occur the week of January 14 when playdates have been set for Rubin & Finklestein's two big twin city theatres, the Capitol, St. Paul and the State Theatre at Minneapolis, the Grand of Greenville, Miss., and the Palace of Mandan, N. D.

New Year's week bookings include the Auditorium of Dayton and the Majestic of Columbus, O., Garrick, Duluth and Grand, Northfield, Minn. The New York date for "Hail the Woman" has not been set, but it probably will have a run in January at one of the big Broadway theatres.

Goldwyn Fourth Year Product Still in Demand; Two Pictures Are Playing Return Dates

That Goldwyn chose wisely in making selections for its fourth year product is evidenced by the fact that last season's pictures are still in great demand in every section of the country. These pictures, it will be recalled, were made with the idea of presenting wide variety of types of stories. Comedies, tragedies, farces, society stories, and a few costume pictures were part of the output of the Culver City studios.

Among the famous authors whose last year pictures are being called for continually at the Goldwyn Exchanges may be mentioned Mary Roberts Rinehart, Katharine Newlin Burt, Gouverneur Morris, Rupert Hughes, Edward Knoblock, Basil King, Rex Beach, O. Henry and Gertrude Atherton.

Mrs. Rinehart's story of prep school life, "It's a Great Life," has met with unusual success in every part of the country. The humorous aspect of adolescents trying to act like grown folks is universal; and every audience has responded to it.

Mrs. Burt's "The Branding Iron," the first photoplay that this novelist and screen writer had produced, has held its public by the stern realities of its plot and through its uncompromising presentation of its crude characters.

Rex Beach's "The North Wind's Malice," with the talented Vera Gordon in the role of a Jewish mother, is another North woods picture that has won its audiences and is still finding new markets.

Perhaps the most discussed picture of the year was "The Penalty" by Gouverneur Morris, which presented Lon Chaney in the role of a legless monster of the underworld. This bitter portrait aroused many controversies; but the picture was so powerful that it is still one of the most sought after melodramas in the Goldwyn list. Another melodrama that has met wide approval is the Reginald Barker production of "Godless Men." It is a strong story of a fearless man and his worthless son, presented without sentimentality.

An Excellent Farce

In the field of rollicking farce, Rupert Hughes showed his deftness in "Hold Your Horses," in which Tom Moore gave an admirable impersonation of a ditch digger who rose to heights he never dreamed of in his digging days.

One of the most gratifying incidents in connection with the Goldwyn fourth year product is the increasing vitality of "Earthbound," the Basil King photodrama which sought for its theme a dramatic probing of the land beyond.

Another Goldwyn photoplay that will always be remembered and is still as much in demand as the latest Goldwyn picture is "Madame X."

New Titles

The following changes in titles have been announced by Paramount for forthcoming pictures: "The Noose," starring Betty Compson, has been altered to "The Green Temptation;" "The Husband's Trademark," starring Gloria Swanson, will be called "Her Husband's Trademark;" "The Champion," a Wallace Reid picture, will be called: "The World's Champion."

"Wid Gunning Month" Starts Off with Reports of Heavy Bookings

Wid Gunning Month has gotten off to a flying start that bids fair to make it a record-breaker, according to sales reports from the Wid Gunning, Inc., exchanges, which are exceeding even their own best previous efforts in having exhibitors sign for the series of specials which the company is offering for release during the present season.

As an additional incentive to the members of the force to smash all standing figures, Wid Gunning has inaugurated a contest between the various exchanges, with substantial money prizes to the four branches which turn in the greatest amount of film rental collections during the month of January, in proportion to its office percentage.

There will be $2,000 in prizes, according to the announcement, the contest having started January 1 and ending January 31, 1922. To the office which stands at the head of the honor role at the end of January a prize of $1,000 will be awarded, the runner-up among the offices will get $500; the third prize will be $300, and the fourth prize $200. In case of a tie between any of the winners for these prizes each of the contestants so tying will receive the full amount offered as the prize for that class.

The keenest sort of competition is in evidence, and one of the features of the contest is the fact, the announcement states, that the smaller offices have just as much of a chance to get in the prize-winning class as the big fellows.

"We have given many reasons why the exhibitor should play with this organization," said Wid Gunning. "The most important is the fact that this organization takes the exhibitor's dollar and divides it between the man who is actually selling and exploiting the film and the man who has made the film, with the big end of the dollar to the man who made the film, this money being available then for the making of better films for the future."

Mr. Gunning paid a tribute to the members of the organization's sales staff, and to the branch managers. He stated that many of the salesmen had gone into theatres where the exhibitor had filled all his playing dates months in advance, and had been given play dates for Gunning products.

"What Do Men Want?" the big Lois Weber spectacle, is reported as breaking many house records.

"'Our Mutual Friend' is winning a host of friends both among the lovers of Dickens' stories and those who are partial to good, melodramatic pictures, with plot and a leaven of humor," says Mr. Gunning. It is endorsed by schools, critics and the public generally.

"The Blot," another Lois Weber production, is reported as among the popular leaders, while "Quo Vadis," in a brand-new dress, is crowding as many theatres as it did in its spectacular premiere years ago. "The Girl From God's Country," the Nell Shipman picture of the North Woods; "Good and Evil," the Continental spectacle featuring Lucy Doraine, and "The Old Oaken Bucket," the great human-interest picture, are all being booked by both big and little houses.

Many of the important theatres, and circuits like the Southern Enterprises, are testifying to the mass appeal of the Gunning pictures by booking them over their entire string of theatres.

The salesmen are being backed up by a high-powered exploitation department, both in the home office and around the country.

Paramount Says Press Book on "Fool's Paradise" Is Its Best

Paramount has issued the press book on Cecil B. DeMille's production, "Fool's Paradise," and admitting that it is the most complete ever issued by the company, claims for it the distinction of being the finest that the trade has been presented with by any company.

The book consists of twenty pages, including the front and back covers. It is printed on the finest quality of super coated paper, in two colors. In addition to two full pages of editorial matter, including synopsis, full information concerning the cast and exploitation suggestions, there are five full pages of newspaper stories.

The inside front cover contains reproductions of five handsome lobby one-sheets and a twenty-four sheet stand, all the work of Henry Clive. Besides an unusually ample list of outside and lobby accessories, there is a complete line of newspaper advertising and publicity mats.

Put Over Big Exploitation on Gunning Film

Paul Gray, of the Wid Gunning, Inc., exploitation forces, put over an unusual stunt in connection with the showing of the big Gunning special, "What Do Men Want?" when that Lois Weber production played at the Pantheon Theatre, Toledo, Ohio.

First, he hooked up the Toledo Blade, a newspaper of ninety thousand circulation, with the run of the picture by having The Blade's movie editor conduct a contest among the women of Toledo for the best answer to the question, "What Do Men Want?"

Although this resulted in first-page stories, and extraordinary free publicity, Gray went still further. He had a huge sign, fifteen by eighteen feet, painted as a reproduction of the first page of The Blade, but instead of painting the usual news in the body of this "page," he painted in details of the contest, giving the list of prizes and other information. The sign was placed on the Pantheon Theatre building, high enough in the air to be visible to persons on the other side of the street.

A crowd of between twenty-five and fifty stood before the sign at all hours of the day. But the Blade's co-operation brought it to a much larger audience. The newspaper reproduced the sign on its first page, under the caption, "The Biggest Newspaper Page in the World," and also ran a story, telling of the stunt and the engagement of the special at the Pantheon. Needless to say, it was a "sold-out" showing.

"Quo Vadis" Gets Editor's Praise

"Quo Vadis," the famous Italian spectacular film, released in its 1922 form through Wid Gunning, Inc., has just received the honor of being named "the world's greatest motion picture" by the editors of The Book of Knowledge, the world-known publication, millions of copies of which have been sold.

In the edition of The Book of Knowledge just issued, there is a special article devoted to "Quo Vadis," reading, in part:

"One of the most wonderful motion pictures ever produced is 'Quo Vadis,' a film based upon a book written by the famous Polish author, Henri Sienkiewicz. It is in eight reels, and the most striking scene is a group of early Christian martyrs in the vast arena of the Coliseum about to be devoured by the wild beasts.

"The lions are first seen massed together at one end of the great amphitheatre. In the next picture they advance slowly and stealthily, and suddenly Christians and lions mingle in a heap on the ground, while the beasts seem fairly to rend their prey. This scene is so real that it is almost impossible to believe it is not actually happening."

"Quo Vadis" has been shortened retitled and generally refurnished since it amazed and startled the motion-picture world, so that, even for those who saw it then, it is in many respects a new picture, according to the Gunning statement. Theatre owners who played the spectacle when it was first issued, are playing it again, in scores of cases, to houses as crowded as its initial triumph.

C. de Rochefort in Paramount's "Spanish Jade"

John S. Robertson has just engaged Charles de Rochefort, a well-known French director and popular film star, for the important role of Esteban, the heavy lead in his new production for Paramount, "Spanish Jade," now being made in Spain.

M. de Rochefort is one of the handsomest men on the French screen. Before the outbreak of the war, he had been associated in a number of films with Max Linder and Capellani. Among his most successful screen creations are Verdier in Kistemaecker's "Marthe;" the Duc de Coranne in Arthur Bernede's "Imperia" and the deputy of Mariomont in Pierre Decourcelle's "Gigolette." He has appeared in the leading roles of Leonce Peret's "Empire du Diamant," Rene de Prince's "Imperene des Pauvres" and Antoine's "Arlesienne."

Before signing with Paramount, M. de Rochefort had concluded an engagement with Flugon Films in "Le Roi de Camargue," from the celebrated work of Jean Aicard. His work in this picture is said to show to the best advantage his fine qualities as an actor and an athlete.

Tommie Gray Joins Keaton

Annonucement has been made by Lou Anger, general manager of the Keaton Studio, that Thomas J. Gray, well-known as a humorist, had been added to the Keaton scenario department. He will collaborate with Joseph A. Mitchell and Clyde A. Bruckman in preparing "gags" for the frozen-faced comedian. Gray is the author of many successful vaudeville acts as well as some New York successes.

Anita Stewart's Husband in Cast

Rudolph Cameron, Anita Stewart's husband and manager, has been drafted from his executive position in the star's company to be her leading man in "Rose O' the Sea," an adaptation of the Countess Barcynska novel which Fred Niblo will direct.

This will be Mr. Cameron's first appearance on the screen since the old Vitagraph days of five or six years ago when he was Miss Stewart's leading man.

First National to Distribute Selig-Rork Special "The Rosary"

Speculation regarding releasing plans for "The Rosary," a spectacular production recently completed by Selig-Rork, has been set at rest by the announcement that it would be distributed as a special production by Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

The picture is based on an original story by Bernard McConville, inspired by the theme of the play by Edward E. Rose. Jerome Storm directed it.

Lewis S. Stone heads the cast as Father Brian Kelly. Jane Novak is cast as Vera Mather, while Wallace Beery is the "heavy." Others in the cast are Robert Gordon, Eugenie Besserer, Dore Davidson, Pomeroy Cannon, Bert Woodruff, Mildred June and Harold Goodwin.

The story is described as a rare and effective combination of drama, romance and pathos, with some spectacular effects which are especially noteworthy. One of those shows the explosion of a dynamite bomb placed beneath a large factory building. A number of night scenes, showing a posse pursuing the conspirators, a fight in the dark and a bridge collapsing while an automobile is crossing it furnish other exciting episodes.

"THE LITTLE MINISTER"
(Vitagraph)

Excellent Production Made From Barrie's Classic

JAMES M. BARRIE'S celebrated story (not the play) has been made into a feature production by Vitagraph, and it behooves every exhibitor to book it because of its excellent qualities. Some of those who have been showmen over a score of years will doubtless remember the three-reeler which Vitagraph made from the same story. With the advance in technical equipment—with an advance in the art of translating a story for the screen, the producers have done extremely well by this charming document which is entitled to classical honors. The lovable figure of Lady Babbie, the quaint character of Gavin Dishart, the little minister, and the picturesque natives of Thrums—these are all given life and color here.

Not even the stickler for truths will be able to find any flaw in this production. From a technical viewpoint, the offering is richly decorated. The thatched cottages, the simple interiors, the charming backgrounds—these are all caught. You become an actual participant in this fragrant story of old-world sentiment and romance. You follow the adventure of Gavin with the deepest interest, even though you have been made familiar with the plot through the story or play. It carries the deepest sort of heart interest. There is sympathy for nearly every character. And when the soldiers surround the little village in order to compel the simple weavers to obey the laws of the country, you are stimulated with desire to be with them and help them in some way. The minister tells the natives to find a way to peace. But they rebel because of the insistent demands of the "gypsy girl," Babbie, who eventually proves to be the ward of a neighborly baron.

There is rich incident offered when Gavin upbraids the wicked Rob Dow during church services. And you almost catch the spiritual inspiration as the young preacher finds a champion in his tormentor. The story revolves around this little circular town of Thrums. The walls are penetrated and you see a simple folk, deeply religious and eager to live their lives in their own way. It is a charming moment when Lady Babbie runs to the home of Nannie to discover whether her beloved is dead. She is betrothed to her guardian, but she willingly elopes with the minister, and they are married according to gypsy [illegible] being a gypsy camp nearby. Story by J. M. Barrie. Scenario by C. Graham Baker. Directed by David Smith. Photographed by Steven Smith.

The Vitagraph version of J. M. Barrie's quaint story, "The Little Minister," has James Morrison in the title role and Alice Calhoun as the Lady Babbie. The scenario was prepared by C. Graham Baker, who has followed the original story very closely and woven the choicest incidents into the photo-play. It is a picture of rare charm, carefully produced and thoughtfully acted.

When we first heard rumors of "The Little Minister" being brought to the screen again, we hoped that some one would have the good sense to cast James Morrison in the title role. It was left for Vitagraph to realize that he fits into the part perfectly. He has the Little Minister's stature, his sincerity and his boyishly emotional moods. He is so good we feel like shouting "We told you so!" Alice Calhoun does nicely, too, with the role of Babbie, although she lacks her regularness and spontaneity. She is best when the necessities of the role allow her to subside and be a wee bit sad.

William McCall makes a splendid Rob Dow. He is burly, exacting and a little simple. The part of Nanny is touchingly played by Dorothea Wolbert, while Dr. McQueen, Lord Rintoul, Tammas Whamond and all the other delightful characters appear to revue and look and act their parts. A word must be said for little Richard Daniels, who is seen as Micah Dow. He is a freckle-faced, snub-nosed youngster who has a world of expression in his funny little face, and he is charming every moment he is in evidence.

The whimsical Scotch story is too well known to be repeated at length. Almost every one knows the tale of the Little Minister, who forgets his dignity, his church and his responsibilities when he falls in love with the saucy Egyptian girl who turns out to be the famous Lord Rintoul's ward. It is a delightful story, full of quaint characters, quaint humor and sweet romance. It is the sort of story one can read over and over again without growing tired.

The settings are picturesque and the costumes tight, uncomfortable looking and amusing, but quite in line with the times. The picture should prove a popular attraction, for the story is worth while and the picture well made

ALICE CALHOUN IN

(VITAGRAPH)

This is a most delightful and interest holding picturization of James M. Barrie's famous story of the same name, presented with splendid acting, beautiful photography, and direction that will scarcely permit of improvement. Great audience picture. Directed by David Smith.

Alice Calhoun and Richard Daniels in "The Little Minister" (Vitagraph)

One of the best pictures yet produced in Vitagraph studios is "The Little Minister" with Alice Calhoun in the part of "Lady Babbie," one of the most lovable characters made known to us by the facile pen of James M. Barrie. And if the charming Miss Calhoun gives us nothing more than her "Lady Babbie" she has set a high mark for her older and more experienced screen sisters to aim at. It is undoubtedly the best work yet done by this popular young screen star, and augurs well for her future.

The entire picture is most pleasing. Barrie's famous story has been most closely adhered to in the writing of the script, and to David Smith should go great credit for his able direction. The story is woven for the most part about the humble life of the poor weavers in the little Scottish village of Thrums.

The atmosphere of the little hamlet has been maintained throughout. The quaint houses with their thatched rooves, the costuming of the characters, the Scotch mannerisms and customs, portrayed on the screen promise to make this picturization one that will meet with nothing but approval from all those who enjoy clean, wholesome drama, free from the taint of the eternal triangle.

In spite of the simplicity of the Barrie story the picture has several big and tense scenes. The terrific rain storm at the gypsy camp, the wedding of "Lady Babbie" and Gavin Dishart in that same rain storm, and the river scene where the little minister rescues Lord Rintoul and Rob Dow loses his life, furnish some thrilling situations in which no opportunity for realism is lost.

The story is well cast with James Morrison as the little minister, Henry Hebert as Lord Rintoul, William McCall as Rob Dow, and Richard Daniels as his Micah Dow.

And in the latter Vitagraph has discovered, or rather uncovered, a youthful prodigy who will well bear watching. The youngster has more freckles to the square inch than Wesley Barry ever thought of wearing, and he is a natural actor. He is in several of the big scenes and portrays his important part with stage presence rare in a child. He apparently doesn't know that there is a camera within a thousand miles. His work is all business and he is a real actor, real in fact, that we can stand a lot more of little Richard Daniels.

All in all, "The Little Minister" is one of the most enjoyable screen entertainments of the season, and should prove to be a great audience picture.

The Little Minister

Vitagraph Production. From the Story by James M. Barrie. Scenario by C. Graham Baker. Directed by David Smith. Cameraman, Steven Smith. Length, Approximately 5800 Feet.

SYNOPSIS

To the little Scotch village of Thrums comes the newly ordained minister, Gavin Dishart. Little Babbie, the gypsy girl, makes fun of him, but when the soldiers attack the town she is protected by him. To shield her from the soldiers he pretends she is his wife. This constitutes marriage in their country. Babbie is in reality Lady Babbie, betrothed of Lord Rintoul. The latter sets the date for their marriage, but Babbie runs away. In a terrific rain storm Lord Rintoul breaks a leg and is being carried away by the raging river. The Little Minister swims out to him and rescues him. He and Babbie confess their love and are married in the church.

Practically every essential of good photodrama is in The Little Minister. Vitagraph has selected a splendid cast, from the charming Alice Calhoun to tiny Richard Daniels.

All of the quaintness and peculiar charm of the little Scotch town of Thrums pervade the picture, and not only is this manifest in the settings and costuming, but even to the extras, there is evidence of careful picking of types.

Sir James M. Barrie's famous story has been screened with unwavering faith to the original theme and all the good fortunes that may befall an author's work picturized, have attended it. It stands out as unique in that its interest begins in the first two hundred feet and in this respect good direction and splendid editing are combined to make a motion picture that should have wide popularity.

There are thrills and there is heart interest. The love motive is delightful but never "gushy," and its climax is swift and pleasant.

The flight of "Lady Babbie" to her sweetheart, when the report comes to her that he has been killed is the beginning of a sequence in which one of the wettest rainstorms in motion picture history has been screened. There is nothing puny about this storm. The players are drenched in it, and throughout this deluge the strongest dramatic action of the story is revealed:

Miss Calhoun quite delightfully portrays the hoydenish gypsy and her "Lady Babbie" is as charming as Barrie wrote it.

Each new picture in which she is cast sees her in a new light of stellar achievement.

James Morrison is the "Little Minister." Few could so well characterize the very young dominie of the small Scotch hamlet as has Morrison. Not merely is he diminutive, but he registers the minister's gentle kindliness and fearlessness incomparably well.

William McCall contributes a fin[illegible] in his part as "Rob Dow," and of [illegible] said he owns a better understandi[illegible] screen player than many grown ac[illegible] sciousness whatever. And whate[illegible] he possesses already.

It is a mighty good picture.

Vitagraph Offers Charming Production of Barrie's Famous Story, Starring Alice Calhoun

Reviewed by Mary [illegible]

Preserving much of the delightful Barrie sentiment, Vitagraph's version of "The Little Minister" will give pleasure to many who have enjoyed the story. The thousands of others, too, who have not read the book may find real entertainment in the film, as the picturized story has the appeal of the classic, the picturized story that will not only keep the old friends but make many new ones. For these reasons, it should succeed—it is clean and it is different.

The love story of Babbie and Gavin Dishart, interpreted with fine imagination by Alice Calhoun and James Morrison, is admirable for its purity and sincerity. The elusive, mischievous, and altogether lovable Babbie is a charming creature, as played by Miss Calhoun. Possibly a stronger contrast between her standards and the environment of Gavin, the man of grace and piety who first sermonizes against her and then falls in love with her, could have been effected in the beginning. James Morrison, however, drives home this important characterization with fervor. The old Scotch villagers are rare types. Here and there, a Barrie touch might have been added to accentuate their personal eccentricities, contributing to the comedy value of the whole.

A splendid effect at the close is the rain immediately upon the Gypsy wedding ceremony and nearly succeeds in separating the lovers for all time, is a great melodramatic splash.

Well Known Players in Cast for New Rex Beach Picture

Announcement has been made of the completion of the cast for the second Rex Beach production for United Artists release, and the list discloses an aggregation of exceptionally strong and well-known players.

Miss Betty Blythe was selected for the leading feminine role, that of a Sicilian countess, a characterization in which she will have ample opportunity for the display of her grace and artistry. Thurston Hall, the "heavy" in Mr. Beach's preceding picture, "The Iron Trail," is again cast as the foil for the hero. However, he will be more smooth and suave villain than in the former Beach feature.

Arthur Lucy, well known on the speaking stage and on the screen, has been cast for the quaint comedy role. He will be best remembered for his work in support of William Collier. Robert Elliott was selected for the straight lead opposite Betty Blythe, while Gladys Hulette was given the ingenue role. Other parts are taken by Florence Auer, Macey Harlem, Effingham Pinto, Henry Leone and Walter James.

The story is practically an original one by Mr. Beach. Kenneth Webb is directing under the personal supervision of Whitman Bennett, who has arranged to take the entire company to New Orleans on January 14 to make most of the exterior scenes. The story opens in Sicily, where the action takes place in interior settings, and then shifts to New Orleans, where the Italian quarter figures prominently in the scene embellishment.

Shubert Books Hodkinson

During the past week six Hodkinson-released productions were booked by the Shubert New York office for its Newark theatre, the Rialto. The productions are "A Certain Rich Man," "The Face of the World," "The Mysterious Rider," "Fifty Candles," "Cameron of the Royal Mounted" and "Jane Eyre." Each of these productions has been booked for a week's run at the Rialto in Newark. The engagement begins with "A Certain Rich Man" for the week of January 9, and may run in successive engagements until the schedule is exhausted.

"A Certain Rich Man," the initial feature of the new Shubert policy, is a Benj. B. Hampton production and was released by Hodkinson last September. "The Face of the World" is an Irvin V. Willat production and was released in August. "The Mysterious Rider" is also a Benj. B. Hampton production. "Jane Eyre" was produced by Hugo Ballin. "Fifty Candles" was produced by Irvin V. Willat, and "Cameron of the Royal Mounted" was produced by Winnipeg Productions, Ltd. The latter production was released by Hodkinson in December.

A one picture a week policy for Shubert's big 44th Street Theatre has also been adopted, it is said, and while the present product is practically 100 per cent. sold in the New York City territory, it is said that several forthcoming Hodkinson specials will be booked for the 44th in the near future.

Educational Is Preparing to Release "Battle of Jutland"

George A. Skinner, vice-president and manager of production of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., has just returned from Providence, Rhode Island, where he has been supervising work on prints of "The Battle of Jutland," the film reproduction of that great battle which Educational is preparing for early release. As soon as the prints are completed Educational will release the picture as a special.

Approximately two hundred feet of the picture illustrates gunfire and the burning of the ships that went to the bottom in this terrific naval conflict. Each frame in this part of the picture has to be painted by hand to give the stirring effect of battle which so thrilled the audiences at the Rialto Theatre in New York, where the picture had the only showing it has been given so far in this country.

The tedious work of coloring these frames is being done at the laboratory of the Coronet Films Corporation at Providence, where much work has been done on Educational's pedagogical subjects, such as "The Valley of Ten Thousand Smokes" and "The Crater of Mt. Katmai."

Associated Exhibitors Release "Handle With Care" January 22

The Al and Ray Rockett production "Handle with Care," which is scheduled for release by Associated Exhibitors on January 22 has no less than seven well-known screen players in the cast. Grace Darmond, who has the most important role, never appeared to better advantage, it is said.

Aside from the cast, Associated Exhibitors is placing much emphasis upon the exploitation opportunity which the title presents, and says that the campaign book which is now being completed contains several stunts of particular value to the exhibitors, because they are practical and inexpensive. It is reported that special attention has been given to the posters and art work, and that the theatres may expect something quite out of the ordinary.

Modern Marriage Is the Theme of "Grand Larceny"

Goldwyn's dramatic photoplay of modern marriage, "Grand Larceny," was adapted by Bess Meredith and Charles Kenyon from Albert Payson Terhune's story of the same title. Wallace Worsley directed it.

"Grand Larceny" is one of the six photoplays to be distributed early in the year by Goldwyn as its third group of releases of its fifth year productions. Elliott Dexter and Claire Windsor are featured.

The story tells of the events that led up to John Annixter's relinquishment of his wife whom he found in the arms of the other man. She was innocent of the wrongdoing which her husband imputed to her.

Her new marriage was anything but happy, and she awakes to the fact that she is regarded as nothing but a piece of property by both men, and tells them that she belongs only to herself and is going to leave them and go out in the world and learn to be worthy of the greatest love.

Others in the cast are Roy Atwell, Richard Tucker, Tom Gallery and John Cossar.

New Metro Film

"Sherlock Brown," a comedy-drama written and directed by Bayard Veiller, is the title of Bert Lytell's latest Metro special photoplay. It is now nearing completior at the Hollywood studios ot the company. Ora Carew is the leading woman.

SCENES FROM MARION DAVIES' LATEST COSMOPOLITAN PRODUCTION, "THE BRIDE'S PLAY"

Four Favorites in Cast of New Elaine Hammerstein Production

The cast supporting Elaine Hammerstein, in "Why Announce Your Marriage?" to be released by Select Pictures Corporation, January 20, will comprise an assemblage of old favorites, including Niles Welch, Florence Billings, Frank Currier and Arthur Housman. "Why Announce Your Marriage?" will be the third picture in which Niles Welch has appeared as Miss Hammerstein's leading man. He first appeared with her in "Remorseless Love" and then "The Way of a Maid." Florence Billings has appeared with the star in two of her Selznick pictures—"Handcuffs or Kisses" and "The Woman Game." She supported Eugene O'Brien in "World's Apart" and will be seen in a forthcoming Conway Tearle release, "Love's Masquerade." With Tearle she also appeared in "The Road of Ambition."

Frank Currier made an exceptionally good impression as the stern father in Miss Hammerstein's "Pleasure Seekers" and he lately played with Eugene O'Brien in "Clay Dollars." Arthur Housman has been in more Selznick pictures than any man who plays supporting roles. His specialty is playing "heavies," but he turned his talents to comedy in "The Way of a Maid." He has appeared with Eugene O'Brien in "World's Apart" and "Clay Dollars" and with Conway Tearle in "The Road of Ambition" and "Shadows of the Sea," the current Tearle attraction. Alan Crosland directed the presentation from Lewis Allen Browne's scenario in which Mr. Crosland collaborated.

"The Bride's Play" to Start at Rialto Theatre January 8

"The Bride's Play," starring Marion Davies will have its first New York screening at the Rialto Theatre beginning Sunday, January 8. The production is Miss Davies' first picture after "Enchantment" in which she was accorded much praise. "The Bride's Play," was created by Cosmopolitan Productions, and is released by Paramount.

The story was written by Donn Byrne for Hearst's Magazine. Mr. Byrne also wrote "The Woman God Changed," a Cosmopolitan Production that has enjoyed great success. Mildred Considine, who has more than one hundred screen plays to her credit, wrote the scenario. George W. Terwilliger directed. Ira H. Morgan was cameraman. The title of the picture is that of an ancient ceremony at Irish weddings.

Posters for Two New R-C Pictures

Posters of more than ordinary appeal are now being distributed by R-C Pictures for two January releases. The productions treated are "Five Days to Live" starring Sessue Hayakawa and "Two Kinds of Women," starring Pauline Frederick. The Hayakawa picture is scheduled for release January 8, and the Frederick picture for January 22.

Brilliant Oriental atmosphere is conveyed by the Hayakawa posters. Pictures of Pauline Frederick, the star, and her principal supporter are shown to fine advantage in the posters for "Two Kinds of Women," which is a dramatic Western story from the novel "Judith of Blue Lake Ranch" by Jackson Gregory.

Discovers New Film Likeness of Lincoln

Universal asserts that it has discovered a player who interprets Abraham Lincoln better even than Elmer Grandon, Logan Paul, Joseph Hennerberry and, more recently, Frank McGlynn in John Drinkwater's play.

The new portrayer of Lincoln is Joel Day, a player of modest reputation, who is playing the role of Lincoln in Universal's newest thrills-from-history serial, "In the Days of Buffalo Bill," now being directed by Edward Laemmle with Art Acord as the star.

"In the Days of Buffalo Bill" is Mr. Laemmle's second big historical serial for Universal, the first being "Winners of the West." The former production concerns particularly the building of the Union Pacific Railway and the exploits of the late Col. William Cody.

Mae Murray Ends Stay in Cuban Capital

Mae Murray, who has been a feted guest of the city of Havana since she arrived last week to screen a new picture, "Fascination," ended her stay in the city Friday night with a private showing of "Peacock Alley," her latest production, which is to be released by Metro in the United States.

The guest list for "Peacock Alley" was so large that the Teatro Nacional was engaged for the production. The guests included the leading officials of Cuba, members of the diplomatic corps, military representatives, and most of the American colony, among them Otto Miller's Brooklyn (National League) baseball players, who are playing against the Cuban teams.

Stage Represents New England Town

A large portion of the stage for the latest Mermaid Comedy, featuring Lloyd Hamilton, has been made to represent a small New England village in mid-winter. Hamilton's trip to this town and his difficulties along the way give the picture its title of "En Route." Snow is piled high about the village buildings, and trees which were hauled for many miles have been arranged in the background, apparently laden down with snow. The picture will be released by Educational.

Heavy Bookings on "White Eagle"

In spite of the lethargy of the holiday season, Pathe opened the New York with a burst of speed in the selling of Ruth Roland's newest serial, "White Eagle." Released January 1, the bookings on this chapter-play set a happy augury for splendid serial business during the year just born.

The Pathe slogan, "Quota by Release Date," was more than an expression when release date was reached—it was an actual fact. "Hurricane Hutch" had more advance bookings prior to release date than any Pathe serial released in several years, yet "White Eagle" now has several percentage points the best of the Hutchinson vhicle.

The elimination of gunplay from the Pathe chapter-plays has had a very beneficial effect on the Pathe product, and the move has won commendation.

That a serial could be successful without gun fighting, was shown by the success of "Hurricane Hutch."

"The public demands action, mystery, swift moving story, but it does not demand gunplay," says Paul Bruet, of Pathe.

Assign Director to Jimmy Aubrey

Jnmmy Aubrey, Vitagraph comedian, is experiencing the novelty of being directed in his productions, which are made at the West Coast studios. For some time the comedian not only has played the star part in his pictures but has directed himself and his co-workers as well.

Vincent McDermott, who has assisted in directing many Vitagraph productions, especially comedies, has been assigned to help Aubrey in the comedy now nearing completion.

New Owen Moore Picture Will Be Biggest Selznick Production to Date

THE Selznick organization is confident that in the newest Owen Moore production, which is now being filmed, it will have the biggest production of its career, overshadowing even the previous Owen Moore successes and such big pictures as "The Sin That Was His," starring William Faversham, for which a complete Canadian village was built in Fort Lee, N. J.

While the previous Owen Moore productions, as with other Selznick releases starring Elaine Hammerstein, Eugene O'Brien and Conway Tearle. were sold as star series, for the new season, however, the Owen Moore pictures are to be sold individually, making them specials in a sense and making it possible to vary them as to their nature and cost of production.

It is in taking advantage of these new conditions that Selznick is producing what it believes will be the biggest picture of this star's career. Henry Lehrman, well known as a director, and who had his own releases through big distributing organizations, was engaged under a special arrangement with Vice President Myron Selznick to make this picture, which will be listed as a Henry Lehrman production. The story is by Mr. Lehrman, and he and Owen Moore spent many weeks on it before the first camera work was done.

A high-class cast will aid the star, including Pauline Garon of the Broadway stage success, "Lilies of the Field," who is Mr. Moore's leading woman; Robert Cain, Tom Wilson, Frank Wunderlee, Toga Yamamota, Adolf Milar and Nita Naldi. No title has yet been selected for the production, which is said to be filled with novelty with an unusual variety of action and location.

Among the last shots to be made are marine scenes taken off the Atlantic Coast near Keyport, N. J., using a new type of sea sled capable of making seventy-eight miles an hour, which races with a six-passenger hydroplane. Two Government torpedo boats were also used, and as it was impossible to secure depth bombs, as the Government announced its supply was exhausted, 300 pounds of dynamite were exploded underwater.

Common Sense Plus Uncommon Pictures

The length of a picture has nothing to do with its exhibition value. If the stars are there, the cast is there, the play is there and the direction and production are there, you have a box-office picture whether it is in three reels or six. The chances are that if it was good in five it is better in three!

Analyze the pictures listed on the two previous pages. You'll find stage stars like Frank Keenan, William Courtenay, Bruce McRae, Lumsden Hare, T. Wigney Percival, Paul McAllister and Florence Reed; celebrities like Irene Castle and Fania Marinoff; screen luminaries like Baby Marie Osborne, Marguerite Snow, Helene Chadwick, Gail Kane, Antonio Moreno and Warner Oland; big stage successes like "Via Wireless" and "At Bay"; famous books like "The Closing Net"; authors like George Scarboro, Paul Armstrong, Winchell Smith and Henry C. Julius Stern's Dynamic Energy and Efficiency Speeds Editing of Universal's "Foolish Wives"

Such is the splendid work accomplished by Julius Stern as Carl Laemmle's personal representative at Universal City during the last two months that the president of Universal thought no one would be so well fitted to bring efficiency to bear on the smooth and speedy presentatin of "Foolish Wives" as Mr. Stern. Julius Stern is president of Century Film Corporation and has recently been appointed second vice-president of Universal.

Since his arrival in town about a week ago he has been employed day and night in correcting and speeding the final touches on Universal's much delayed million dollar production. Owing to the tremendous amount of footage shot for "Foolish Wives" the cutting and the assembling have been particularly difficult, for Erich von Stroheim had interwoven his plot so artistically and thoroughly with the detailed action necessary for the delineation of character, that to cut whole episodes, as may be done with the ordinary picture, was impossible without spoiling the plot.

To this task Julius Stern brought the keen judgment, the patience and the efficiency for which he is noted. Over and over again he had scenes run before him in the projection room, while he went over titles with the title writer and ordered the cutter to take out or put back certain detail, even changing sequences when necessary to add suspense. In his spare moments and in the evenings he worked with the musicians, giving his ideas on the type of melody to fit various tempos.

Perhaps the hardest task of all was reducing the whole force to an efficient basis so that the work of the cutters and of the musicians would fit in without unnecessary waste of time, and neither would interfere with the work of the other. He arranged it so that after the cutter had one reel finished it would go to the musician, who would immediately do their part without the slightest delay in order that it might reach the laboratory at Fort Lee just as the workers there had finished with the preceding reel and were ready to handle it. In view of the enormous sum which has already been spent on the big super production, it was an important consideration that there should be no further delay in presenting it to the public and to this end that there should be no wastage of time and consequently of money between the the three factors necessary for its completion.

Mr. Stern's knowledge of Europe, where he spends a good many months of the year, and especially of Monte Carlo, which is a favorite playground of his, was also of great assistance in aiding him to conserve the proper atmosphere while at the same time reducing the enormous footage of film to proportions suitable to the length of entertainment moving picture fans approve.

After the opening presentation of "Foolish Wives" on January 11, he will wait a few days until Carl Laemmle is ready to return with him to California, when they will plan together a 1922 campaign of big productions for Universal. This will be quite apart from the expansion Stern plans for his own Century Film Corporation, which makes Century Comedies.

Julius Stern is an efficiency expert not only in the spending of money but also in that of spending time, which he judges of equal importance. During the two months he spent in full charge of Universal City, there was no detail he omitted to bring under his personal attention. He kept an "open office" so that any one who wished might come in and tell him the difficulties he was laboring under or the increase of speed and efficiency he thought he might show if conditions were a little different. If the occasion warranted it, Stern saw to it that they became "a little different." Meantime, he was sizing up the whole situation and making schedule changes much as the traffic man in charge of a big railroad does.

After he had put in ten or more hours a day listening, advising and observing, he would sit in the projection room looking at the day's "rushes" of the different directors. Stern claims, and rightly, that by looking at the day's rushes defects may be corrected in time which if carried right through a picture would perhaps entirely jeopardize its success. The next morning there would be a series of notes for directors and cameramen—and before Stern left for New York there were quite a few new cameramen, by the way.

One of his theories is that while beautiful photography alone will not make a good picture, and the director and cameraman who let themselves be carried away by a craving to take beautiful shots are certainly wasting both the time and money of the firm which employs them, yet a picture which has a good plot and poor photography is even more certain of failure. Well balanced work between director and cameraman is an absolute necessity, and to make sure of this co-operation and to save the loss due to poorly balanced pictures, the inspection of the daily "rushes" by someone who has the time to criticize and to offer suggestions is a vital necessity.

Stern engaged House Peters and Virginia Valli for Universal, and as example of how he utilizes every moment of his time, it may be mentioned that the ten minutes he had left while waiting for his train in the Los Angeles station, he employed in laying the foundations and practically arranging the engagement of Matt Moore for one of the principal parts in "The Storm," which Universal is about to produce shortly in screen form.

While he was on the train coming to New York to supervise "Foolish Wives," he telegraphed ahead to every town where there was a Universal Exchange for the exchange manager to meet him, whether the train stopped for one minute or longer, and let him speak to him or give him some notes about "Foolish Wives." At Kansas City he stopped half an hour and one of the men who came to meet the train had to drive nine miles from his home, but was glad to do it at Stern's request. At Chicago he spent two hours at the exchange, in conference with I. R. Lesserman, the manager.

Stern, besides being tireless, and having a passion for efficiency, also believes in turning back into the production end a large percentage of profits for mechanical improvements. His own Century studios at Hollywood are admitted to be the most elaborately equipped in the way of comedy trick scenery, flies, specially designed runways for animals, cycloramas, traps, disappearing walls and doors, of any in the country. He is expected to introduce some radical improvements and is a valuable addition to the Universal forces.

Brooklyn Strand and Newspapers Play Santa to 8,000 Children

EIGHT thousand poor and crippled children were the guests of Moe Mark, Mark Strand officials and Managing Director Edward L. Hyman at the Brooklyn Mark Strand Theatre during Christmas week. Mr. Mark has always been ready to donate his theatre to worthy causes, and when the holiday season rolled around he broached to two newspapers his idea of entertaining some unfortunate kiddies.

Two performances were held, one under the auspices of the Brooklyn Daily Eagle and the other under the auspices of the New York Evening World. The papers took charge of arrangements. The first performance, at which 4,000 were present, was Tuesday morning, December 27. The Evening World show, at which a like number attended, was Friday morning, December 30.

Jackie Coogan in First National's "My Boy" and Mr. Hyman's musical numbers left nothing to be desired. Mr. Hyman was personally in charge of the performances and he saw to it that everything that was incorporated in the regular show was given.

The shows received widespread publicity. A week in advance of each showing the two newspapers carried items of the coming event, and continued to publish notices up to the day the shows were held. The program was published in full several times by both journals.

Picture by Carew to Be Exhibited

Besides being a notably effective screen artist, Arthur Edmund Carew is a portraiturist with talents. The popular actor has created a "mirror study" of himself done, not with the regulation materials but with mascaro for pencil, other makeup ingredients for development and bayrum for oil.

The finished product, to be placed on exhibition, is said by New York artists to be worthy of the highest artistic commendation. Carew has just finished work on "The Prodigal Judge" and is engaged on "My Old Kentucky Home."

Keaton's Next

Buster Keaton has completed "Cops," his latest two-reel mirthquake for Joseph M. Schenck, which is to be released through Associated First National. The picture is now being cut and titled and will be ready for preview in New York City within a fortnight.

First published reproductions of Paramount's big 30-reel spectacle, "The Mistress of the World," a U. F. A. production. Joseph May directed, the production work requiring more than a year and a half, and entailing the exposure of more than 300,000 feet of film.

Chicago and the Middle West

By PAUL C. HINZ

The last Hurricane Hutch serial, produced by Pathe, has been booked for exhibition at the Notre Dame University, at better than theatre prices. The picture will be shown to boys between the ages of 8 and 14 years. The booking was arranged because of no guns, knives nor crime of any kind being depicted in this "thriller," thus proving that producers may be their own censors. In addition, the university had booked the entire Pathe short subject program, including the two-reel westerns and the Lloyd reissues. These will be shown to the adults of the school.

The George Beban act, wherein Beban and his cast of players appear in person and play the climax of the "Sign of the Rose" during the screen performances, which played at the Chicago Theatre during holiday week, was one of the most successful acts ever booked by the Balaban & Katz Enterprises. The star was greeted with applause at his appearance at each performance and was again given an ovation at the expiration of his act. Balaban & Katz gave Mr. Beban credit for the record-breaking business at the Chicago Theatre during the holidays.

A sketch of the Municipal Pier, painted by Miss Crowell, a disabled war nurse, is on exhibiton at the J. W. Young Art Galleries, 66 East Jackson Boulevard, as the purchase of Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Fairbanks. The picture was among a display made by disabled war veterans and nurses, which was visited by Mr. and Mrs. Fairbanks during their recent short visit in Chicago.

Nate Ruttenberg is temporarily managing the affairs of the Capital Theatre at Manitowoc, during the illness of Charlie Menzing, who was recently operated upon for appendicitis. Friends of Mr. Manzing will be glad to hear he is convalescing nicely.

Harry K. Morton and Zella Russell, from the Bert Williams show, "Under the Bamboo Tree, were the headliners of the special New Year's Eve midnight show at the Ascher's Chateau Theatre. The Byron Brothers Saxophone Players, Pearl's Roumanian Gypsies, Zuhm & Dreis, Byron & Hague, Frances Kennedy and Hammill's Musical Misses, all big time acts, were the other players on a bill which was received with great enthusiasm by a crowded house.

Carefully indicating the moral that bread cast upon the waters will return with interest, W. L. Hill, publicity manager of Universal, sends in a little story concerning the loss and return of two five dollar gold pieces belonging to Herman Stern, District Manager of Universal. It appears that the gold would have been gone forever, had Mr. Stern not taken a beggar to a nearby restaurant for a meal, finishing up with a package of cigarettes at a nearby cigar stand, where the proprietor recognized the philanthropic manager as the man who, the previous day, had given him two five dollar gold pieces instead of silver change.

A de luxe showing of Cecil B. De Mille's latest Paramount production, "Fool's Paradise," was given at the Ziegfield Theatre January 5 to the trade and members of the press.

Exhibitors in the larger cities have noted the fact that audiences are "shopping" for their amusements at the present time, showing a decided tendency to patronize the shows giving the greatest variety in their programs. This tendency has also been manifested in the smaller towns, report the Pathe salesmen. The small town exhibitors have shown a spirit of co-operation, resulting in the booking of a diversified program.

The small town business is rapidly getting back to normal, report the Pathe salesmen, Charles Filkins, H. W. Ricker, and Ed Cassanave, recently appointed to the territories of Northern Illinois, Southern Illinois, and Indiana, respectively. The small town theatres are booking better pictures and patronage is picking up to a great degree—"everything booming"—is the consensus of opinion.

Hal Opperman, Pontiac, Illinois, was in town during the week to look over the schedule of pictures from the Associated Producers for 1922, which will be released by First National.

The local Pathe offices are putting a quietus as much as possible on the report that Pathe is about to affiliate with the Vitagraph company. A wire from Elmer Pearson, general sales manager, states there is nothing to the rumor.

The New Virginia Theatre, of which Charles Pyle is proprietor and managing director, opened in Champaign, Illinois, December 28th. The house seats 2,500 people. Feature releases, alternating with "legitimate" attractions, will be played. Mr. Pyle is to be congratulated upon his choice in the location of his new theatre, for Champaign is a college town and the motion picture business, always good there, climbs to many broken records during the college term.

The Lincoln Theatre, owned by the Reuben Bros., of Joliet, was destroyed by fire on December 21st. The origin of the fire, which started at 12:30 a. m. after the final showing of the Dempsey-Carpentier fight films, is unknown. No insurance was carried, and a loss of $40,000 was sustained. The company is making plans for the erection of a new theatre which will get under operation as soon as possible.

A trade showing in the First National Headquarters of the latest Jackie Coogan release, "My Boy," on December 28th, was attended by more exhibitors than could be accommodated. The overflow crowd necessitated the use of a second projection room to which the reels of the feature were relayed, one by one, as soon as they had been shown in the original projection room.

Daniel P. Kostakos, a newsboy and ex-prize fighter before he became associated with the Ascher Bros. clerical staff, has been made assistant to Nathan and Max Ascher. He is now engaged in learning the duties of a theatre manager, to be able to fit in in case of emergency, receiving his first instructions from Harry Beaumont, manager of the Chateau Theatre. "Danny" is proving himself such an apt pupil that great things are perdicted for him in the motion picture industry.

Lloyd Ingram to Direct Film

Lloyd Ingraham has been engaged to direct Gladys Walton at Universal City. He will begin production immediately with the star on "Second Hand Rose," a comedy drama adapted from the popular song of that name by A. P. Younger.

Starts Crusoe Serial

With the continuities, sets and productions held up merely for the selection of a star, word has just come from Universal City that production on "The Adventures of Robinson Crusoe" has been started. This is the third of its new educational-historical series. The first one, "Winners of the West," is finishing its epoch-making course of eighteen episodes. Its promise of a new and nobler era in the serial field is being carried on by the second of the series, "With Stanley in Africa," the first episode of which will be released on January 23.

It had been the intention when Eddie Polo was still with the Universal to star him in "The Adventures of Robinson Crusoe," and all preparations were made to start the serial by December 15. However, events so shaped themselves as to make it necessary to begin production on the fourth of the series, "In the Days of Buffalo Bill," starring Art Acord, first.

This problem of selecting a star for the Crusoe film was solved by Julius Stern, newly elected second vice-president, who chose Jack O'Brien. O'Brien has the physical characteristics required and had enough experience in the serial, "Bride 13," to weather the arduous role mapped out for him.

Keeping in Personal Touch

By FRITZ TIDDEN

WE have received numerous letters commending us for the stand we took two weeks ago and last week, when a certain group of daily paper film reviewers brought the matter to a head with their "criticisms" of "The Little Minister," against the manner in which really fine productions are reviewed by these poseurs. We wish we could publish all of the letters, some of which were from persons prominent in the industry and might be affected if the little group of serious reviewers got down on them and worked off their personal feelings with consistant knocks against the films in which these men have either a direct or indirect interest.

In not one of these letters did the writer request it not be published with his name attached, showing that they do not in any way fear the power these reviewers think they have. But we assume the responsibility of deciding that it is no use starting anything that might just be an annoying unpleasantness by consistant pounding, regardless.

Instead we will publish one of the letters from someone not directly connected with any of the film companies.

"Just a few lines of commendation for your remarks in the issue of January 7, apropos of 'film criticism,' so-called. Another particular instance was in connection with the very artistic production of 'Peter Ibbetson.' Few of our young and confident reviewers seemed to have read DuMaurier's story, and so were ignorant of the fact that his Peter, though awkward, misplaced and unhappy, was a husky athletic six footer, instead of the ethereal poet.

"A possible explanation of the usual pose might be that the embryo critic, assigned to motion pictures because they are assumed not to require 'high brow' qualities, with little real education and only a smattering of art and literature, is obliged to resort to peppy personalities, and his own mental reaction is his only standard of judgment. If you follow the pictures and their reviews this does little harm—you are able to discount the mental complex of the reviewer. The lady of the Tribune, for instance, cannot see a good actor if his clothes are made in Hollywood, or she doesn't like his haircut—while one of 'our set' in things dramatic or artistic is sure of sympathetic treatment.

"It is frequently entertaining reading, but it isn't criticism, and as you say, it is distinctly unfair to public, producers and theatres. It is likely to do especial harm because of an increasing habit of local papers in other cities, of quoting a 'smart' New York review.

"A. J. S."

And further speaking of these reviewers, imagine Quinn Martin giving advise to a young moving picture star on how to improve her work or keep it at a high standard!

Mr. Martin, among other things, was the only man reviewing pictures in New York that damned "The Little Minister" with faint praise.

It is such reviewers as he that are insufferable because of the pose evident in their review articles. For justifiable motives various representatives of film companies flatter them and pay them a good deal of attention. This makes them think they are really important. And from then on their poses and awful struggles to live up to the reputation they manufacture for themselves and be clever are some of the most enjoyably humorous things taking place in the industry.

Victor Rodman, chief "heavy" of the Christie Company, whose villainous doings have been very evident in many of the Christie Comedies recently released by Educational, ranked himself as a first-rate cave man. The more villainous he could be, the more he enjoyed life.

But that was before pretty Dagmar Dahlgren, classic dancer, came dancing her way into Christie Comedies. When she appeared in "A Pair of Sexes" Victor began to wonder if bachelorhood was all it was held up to be. So he began to growl at Dagmar.

"Come hither," he said, with a frown.

But Dagmar merely smiled and danced on.

By the time Miss Dahlgren finished working in "Kiss and Make Up," Victor had been convinced that cave man tactics were useless, and was thoroughly tamed.

"I'm sorry," he said submissively. "I didn't mean to be so rough. Can't you forgive me?"

Then the beautiful dancer began to listen. Now they are Mr. and Mrs. Victor Rodman, having been married a few days ago in Los Angeles.

One of the real pioneers of motion pictures in Los Angeles, James L. McGee, manager of the Selig studio and Zoo for many years, has resigned from all business activities to enjoy life at his Laughlin Park home.

McGee has been with Col. William N. Selig for fourteen years. He has never been connected with any other company. When that adventurous band of Selig pioneers invaded Los Angeles on March 23, 1909, to establish a studio at the corner of Eighth and Olive streets, "Jim" McGee was on the job. And he has been ever since. In August of the same year these pioneers established the first of the Edendale studios, converting the old city hall for the purpose. When the Selig Company outgrew that studio, McGee was active in the founding and development of the famous Selig Zoo and studios on Mission Road.

George Proctor found some surprising titles in a picture he is editing. Among many others, two of them are "A Lighthouse by the Shore" and "A Highly Polished Buzzard of Society." George says the qualification of the lighthouse was probably to differentiate it from the inland ones out in Idaho, Arizona or Oklahoma. The highly polished buzzard he cannot explain, except that it may be to define it from the dull ones.

Just below an article in his usual stuttering style, berating the prevalent school of flippancy, S. Jay Kaufman in the Globe states that he has heard that a print of Lubitsch's "Pharaoh's Wife" is on the way to America and that he has been told that Lubitsch is bringing it himself, but no confirmation can be secured.

Keeping in mind the stuff about flippancy, we seriously state that the above paragraph about what he should have called "The Wife of Pharaoh" was published on December 31. And that on December 24 and subsequent days all the daily papers, including the Globe, and a few weeklies printed the fact at length that Lubitsch brought at least one print and possibly a negative of "The Wife of Pharaoh" into this country himself when he arrived several days before.

In response to the curious who have been heard to murmur, "Wonder what a screen actress cries about?" we have a new answer, deduced from a remark recently made by a producer who is deeply engrossed in the success of one of our aspiring young stars.

The answer may be a Pomeranian. This time it was.

"When it came to her biggest scene she couldn't weep—not as the public would have her weep," he explained. "We appealed to her imagination in every way possible, because we know she had it in her. But unsuccessfully. And then, of a sudden, someone hit upon it. 'Think of your little doggie,' urged Young Bright Idea. 'Think how he died and left you alone in the world.'"

And the flood of tears, reluctant to every other appeal, gushed forth and contributed the emotional impetus to one of the biggest scenes in a big drama.

George Melford in giving the director's viewpoint on screen material recently explained his preference for the story that is taken from the novel or play over the average scenario written directly for the screen. The idea that a photoplay can be made overnight while it takes weeks, months, sometimes years to write a good novel or drama, is too prevalent, he asserted. It is responsible for many superficial faults in screen dramas that could have been avoided if the scenarist were not in too great a hurry, and incidentally it multiplies the director's difficulties a hundred fold.

The Red Book Magazine is advertising the beginning in the January number of a series of articles called "What Is the Truth About the Movies?" which they sensationally state will settle the question "Are Film Stars as Wicked in Private Life as Gossip Would Have Them?"

We have not had time to get a Red Book and read the first article, owing to the double short weeks we have recently rushed through. But we feverishly wait for the time when we will be able to sit down quietly and find out how the Red Book says "no" to the question they have manufactured for sensational and publication purposes.

Nat Holt, resident manager of Loew's State Theatre, was host at a supper to the sixty-five employes of the big amusement house at the Pig 'N Whistle Cafe last Monday night after the show. Don Phillipini, conductor of the orchestra, cooked the spaghetti, which was the piece de resistance of the supper, and extemporaneous entertainment was provided by the performers who are on the bill this week at Loew's. Nat Holt, after much persuasion, made a speech. Christmas Day's attendance at Loew's State Theatre broke all records of the house since its opening. Approximately 10,000 persons were admitted into the house during the day and evening, and half as many turned away. Long lines of patrons waited in the rain for their turn to get into the house.

Judge Gives Praise to Gunning Film

Judge Thomas F. Graham of San Francisco, gave an unsolicited testimonial to the interest and value of "What Do Men Want?" when that Lois Weber production was shown by Wid Gunning, Inc., at the Tivoli Theatre, San Francisco, recently.

In a letter written by Judge Graham to William A. Crank, manager of the San Francisco office, whose guest he was at the showing, the judge said the picture had a convincing quality and that the theme of the play was true to life. He also pointed out that the play had particular appeal to young married people.

In the Independent Field

By ROGER FERRI

The Passing Week in Review

A WELL-KNOWN exchangeman five weeks ago purchased the rights in a certain territory to a wonderful box office picture. He promised the distributor that he would give the attraction the widest exploitation and an elaborate premier in the best motion picture house he could secure in his territory. The distributor, before selling, insisted that the picture be properly exploited and contracted to share in all expenses incurred. He had no reason to question the sincerity of the buyer, for he had established an enviable reputation as a "hustler" in his territory and was seemingly respected for his determined business methods which had established his exchange as one of the foremost State rights offices in the country.

DAYS passed and finally word was telegraphed to New York by the exchangeman that he had booked a vaudeville theatre. The national distributors immediately communicated with the exchange via the telephone, registering opposition to such a plan, but the exchange already had signed the contract and there was nothing to do except to carry it out. Though disappointed, the distributor, appreciative of the task before him, offered to co-operate, but none of this would be had by either buyer or theatre. However, considerable paper, cards, novelties, banners, cuts, mats, etc., were sent to the theatre.

DESPITE the fact that the theatre had been adequately supplied with accessories and many exploitation stunts had been outlined to its publicity man, the picture was neglected. When the writer, who attended the premier, visited the house, the paper, cards, etc., were still in the poster room unused. We picked up the local newspapers and discovered that the house had done nothing whatsoever to boost the picture there, but, on the other hand, laid emphasis on the "high class holiday vaudeville bill." In other words, this picture, which, the same day, broke records in a middlewestern city where it was properly exploited and presented to the public, was a secondary consideration and the fact that it was the premier showing meant nothing in the life of the manager. In fact, inasmuch as that house was one of a well-known circuit, he gave the impression that he was doing the exchange a favor by using the picture.

IT is not difficult to guess what happened to the picture. It was buried in a holiday bill. The vaudeville was the typical Christmas week sort, which means the poorest and cheapest to be had. This reflected on the bill. The acts bored the patrons and they filed out gradually, but in sufficient numbers to fairly clear the house by the time the picture was flashed. When the closing act came on there was a wholesale walkout. There is no doubt in the mind of the writer but that many of those folks who walked out would have enjoyed that picture.

BUT what did this showing do that was suicidal to the picture? In the first place, the exchange did not play fair with the distributor who had made it plainly understood that it was something more than a matter of dollars and cents and that he wanted to have the picture properly exploited, promising to even share 50-50 on all expenses incurred in advertising the picture. He even offered to send his own exploitation experts to assist in "selling" the production to the public. But this offer was turned down. Secondly, the booking of the picture for a premier showing in a vaudeville house was an insult to those exhibitors in that territory who have patronized that exchange 52 weeks in the year. The only reason this exchangeman had for booking this picture into that house was because the theatre was on a circuit. He was seeking dates on that entire circuit. But was that the proper way to get dates even on that circuit? Most emphatically "no."

THE picture flopped. And when it did its value in that territory depreciated. The circuit officials refused to book it. The exchangeman then appealed to his exhibitor-friends and sought dates from them. Yes, they wanted the picture, but not at the price the exchange is quoting. They take the stand that the picture failed at the vaudeville house, and, as this fact is well known among picture patrons, they would have to start anew and expend more than their ordinary appropriation in putting the picture over. This is logic that the exchangeman can not contradict. He must, and probably has by this time, admit that he pulled a "bone." And he has no one but himself to blame. While the distributor has received payment for the territorial rights, he is a disappointed and disgusted gentleman, for the incompetent exchange has without a doubt mutilated the box office value of what in the opinion of the writer is one of the greatest pictures offered on the State rights market.

SUCH tactics as utilized by this exchange should be tabooed at once. They should not exist. The distributor is entitled to every consideration from the exchange, for upon the existence of the former depends the success and permanency of the latter. His wares must be properly exploited. Exchanges have time and again complained to this office that distributors have been grossly negligent in the matter of forwarding accessories. This in some degree is correct, but the fact of the matter is that the exchanges themselves have not been the most co-operative institutions in this market. They have their faults and shortcomings. And the example, detailed above, constitutes one of the most dangerous abuses practiced by some of them.

FOR the sake of getting fifteen days the exchangeman sacrificed the future of the picture. When he did that he ignored—and unjustly so—every exhibitor in his territory. He ignored the very people on whom he is dependent for business the year round. If this exchange had sought a good house for his premier there were plenty to be had in his territory that were legitimate picture theatres. But he made no effort to book them. As a matter of fact any one of the first run houses in that district would willingly have shown that picture—and given it proper exploitation and presentation. But nothing doing. The exchangeman was not a good enough showman or business man to appreciate that the picture house was the proper place for the premier. He did not realize that success in a vaudeville house was not a credit to the picture for the reason that managers would attribute a part of the "draw" to the variety acts.

BUT this exchange is not the only one. There are a few others just like it. The distributor must insist on an immediate remedy of such a practice—and we for one want to go on record as saying that it is an abuse that discourages patronage of State rights exchanges by exhibitors. It's unfair to the distributor and the exhibitor. And, finally, it's a lot of nonsense—an open confession of incompetency. What this branch of the industry needs is more exhibitor friends. And they are not made by ignoring their presence when a real box office attraction comes along.

War Officially Declared on Film Pirates and "Flyers"

War has been officially declared on film pirates.

A definite program of action against these unlawful operatives in the State Rights market will be drawn up at the regular monthly meeting of Independent Producers' and Distributors' Association in New York on Saturday night, January 7. It is the firm determination of the association to drive these pirates out of the field.

While the "pirate" practice was somewhat curtailed during the past year, due largely to the organized efforts of the distributors, it is still one of the most dangerous menaces with which this particular branch of the industry has to contend. A number of complaints has reached the offices of the I. P. D. A. and these will be taken under consideration with immediate action following.

The coming year promises to be an unusually busy one for the association. In addition to the war against film pirates, the I. P. D. A. also will take under advisement many other questions of vital importance to the future of the market. Among these will be the "shoestring" operative.

No few distributors during the past few months have been victimized by these "shoestring" promoters who, having established an office and called it an exchange, have proceeded to issue inviting stationery and got in touch with the distributors. Some have advanced small payments on pictures, but that was about all, for the exhibitors in territories wherein they operate, knowing the reputation of these "flyers" have refused to do business with them. However, they have received enough patronage to permit them continuing their petty tactics. In so doing, however, they have jeopardized the State Rights market.

Nothing will be left undone to expose these "flyers" and subsequently drive them out of the field. As a result of their presence it is conservatively estimated thousands of dollars have been lost by distributors. Their presence, too, has menaced reputable exchangemen.

"Life's Greatest Question" Demand

Much interest among State Rights buyers and exhibitors has been aroused by the theme that inspired the latest Joe Brandt-George H. Davis production, "Life's Greatest Question," starring Roy Stewart. The picture is said to solve the questions: Can anything, except honesty, serve as the basis for happiness; can there be contentment and a chance for any sort of understanding, with the foundation of subterfuge and suspicion?

"But the Butler" Barry's Latest

"But The Butler" is the title of the newest Broadway-Arrow two-reel comedy with Eddie Barry and Vera Reynolds, produced by Morris Schlank. Broadway as a comedy producing unit is going very strong and the comedies are in demand.

Economy Should Be the Watchword, Says Jaccard

Jacques Jaccard, director, and Isadore Bernstein, supervising director of the West Coast Films Corporation is bent on reversing the extravagant spending idea. The West Coast is at present producing "The Great Alone" at the Pacific Studios in San Mateo, California. The picture is the first of a series in which Monroe Salisbury is to be starred.

Economy is one thing that should gain the immediate attention of producers. There have been to many million dollar flivvers perpetrated on the long suffering exhibitor and it seems nothing short of sheer idiocy and the gratification of personal whims for a director to throw away thousands of dollars when the same effect might be obtained at a far lower cost.

"Four Seasons" Promises to Be One of Year's Best Pictures

Harry J. Shepard, of the Kineto Company of America, was discussing this week "The Four Seasons" and the many inquiries that have been made about it from persons in all walks of life.

"A very usual question about 'The Four Seasons,'" he said "is to ask just what it is in this picture which gives it such a human appeal; which creates in so many different types of persons a genuine sense of satisfaction; helps them to take away something from viewing that picture which they did not have before they saw it.

"'The Four Seasons' tells the story of a whole year of Nature; it is as Arthur James so well pharsed it 'Living a Year in an Hour.'"

"We have permitted private views of 'The Four Seasons' before several types of audiences and the reaction in every case has been remarkably enthusiastic. The picture speaks a universal language."

Producers Security Corporation to Distribute "The Bootleggers"

"The Bootleggers," a five-reel feature with an all-star cast, announced this week by Producers' Security Corporation as ready for distribution on the State Rights market. The feature is an Al Gilbert production and Roy Sheldon directed. The cast includes Paul Panzer, Jules Cowles, Walter Miller, Norma Shearer, leading woman for Eugene O'Brien, and others. Officials of Producers Security Corporation, in a statement issued this week, characterized the picture as "censor-proof" and added the information that the New York censors had passed it 100 per cent.

The story, according to the statement, is one that calls for many exciting incidents, among them being a battle in midair. The distributors point out the exploitation possibilities of the title and further stated that this title is backed up with an unusual story dealing with a subject that is filling the front pages of newspapers in every community in this country.

New England Exchange Pays Record Price for "Ten Nights"

What Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Film Corporation, characterizes as the highest price ever paid for a State rights production, with one exception, was paid for that firm's box office sensation, "Ten Nights in a Barroom," starring John Lowell, by the Lightning Photoplays Corporation of Boston, which has purchased the New England rights to the Blazed Trails Production, Inc. feature. The deal was closed following the remarkable showing of the picture at the Victory, Providence, R. I.; Bijou, Pawtucket, R. I., and Bijou, Woonsocket, R. I. S. H. Bunce of Lightning closed the deal, the financial consideration of which is said to have been surpassed only for the price paid for the New England rights to "The Birth of a Nation."

The splendid showing of "Ten Nights in a Barroom" in Rhode Island is still the talk of filmland and the demand for bookings is extraordinarily heavy. Negotiations already are under way for a showing at one of the big Boston theatres. There the picture will be shown for an indefinite run, starting late this month. Contracts for extended runs in other New England cities have been closed.

Dr. Shallenberger in acquiring the picture demonstrated an intimate knowledge of what the public wanted at this time. To his keen showmanship must be attributed the remarkable showing of the picture. In offering the picture Arrow has literally taken "fortune at the flood." There are fortunes in titles and there is a fortune in the title. "Ten nights in a Barroom."

The annals of the show game attest and support this. There is, for example, the leading cast of "Ben Hur." So far this has not been made into a picture; yet fortunes are offered for the title; and there is "Uncle Tom's Cabin," which, by the way, is probably free to the world now. The other day, the mere announcement that Mr. Griffith was making "The Two Orphans" brought forth several pictures with the same title. Consequently Mr. Griffith has had to change the title of this picture with great expense to himself.

Elinor Glyn's "Three Weeks" made a fortune as a novel, as a play and as a picture mostly on the title. So did "Way Down East;" so did "The Last Days of Pompeii" (the great Mid-Victorian novel); so did such titles as "A Tale of Two Cities" (a story of the French Revolution). "The Wandering Jew"; Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress," and the Bible, whole or in part.

Equity Gets "My Wandering Boy"

Equity Pictures Corporation, according to a persistent report, has acquired the distribution rights to "My Wandering Boy." The picture was acquired and produced on the Coast by Bennie Zeidman and Bernie Fineman, who brought it to New York several weeks ago. Several program companies sought the feature, but Equity's proposition is said to have been the best and accepted.

"Go Get 'Em Gallagher" Hines' Next

C. C. Burr, of Mastdon Films, Inc., which produced the first Johnny ("Torchy") Hines feature, "Burn 'Em Up Barnes," which is literally cleaning up for exhibitors and exchangemen, according to reports, is ready to start on the second production. "Go Get 'Em Gallagher" will be the title of the second Hines feature, which will in all probability be ready for distribution early in the Spring.

Stars Invade State Rights Field

Mildred Harris, Lew Cody, Lon Chaney, and several other equally popular stars will soon be starred in State rights pictures, either already in the course of production or about to be produced. Chaney was signed last week, it is rumored, and will produce his pictures in Florida. Eight so-called "big names" were offered State rights producers during the past week.

National to Produce in Florida

National Exchanges, Inc., have decided to enter the production field, according to an authentic report. Hunter Bennett, vice-president of the company, is now in Florida completing a deal for a studio in that State. It is planned to produce a series of features, which National Exchanges, Inc., will distribute through their own exchanges.

Burr Closes Production Deal

C. C. Burr of Affiliated Distributors, Inc., this week is reliably reported as having closed a deal with Bennie Zeidman and Bernie Fineman of Los Angeles whereby his firm will get several Northwest features. These productions will be made on the Coast and Edwin Carewe will supervise and direct.

Phil Selznick Buys "His Nibs"

Phil Selznick of Cleveland this week bought the Ohio rights to Exceptional Pictures Corporation's feature, "His Nibs," starring Charles (Chic) Sale. The picture already has been booked into the Rivoli Theatre, Toledo, for the premier showing late this month.

FRANKLIN E. BACKER

C. B. C. Buys New Series of Pictures

As its first acquisition for the new year, and because of the belief of the company officials that the coming year will see one of the biggest demands for good "short stuff" ever recorded, the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation announces that it has secured for distribution a new series of two-reel comedies.

While no definite announcement is made yet of the exact nature of the comedies, it is hinted at that they will be in the nature of a surprise—containing the names of at least two nationally known comic stars. Eight comedies on the series are now practically ready for release, and more definite announcements are held up only pending the decision upon the general series name, and the preparation of "paper" and other accessories of distribution.

New York First National to Handle Clark's "Two Orphans"

Gratifying activity in the independent field is the word that comes from the Russell Clark Syndicate, Inc., which reported this week that the Edison-Films Torino attraction presented by Frank Vallee, "The Two Orphans," after a mere formal announcement only, has not only created widespread interest, but that First National Exchanges, Inc., has acquired the territory of New York and Greater New York, and Turner & Dahnken that of California. First National Exchanges, Inc., has also acquired the Sascha production, Lucy Doraine in "The Love Slave," presented by Herz Film Corporation, for the same territory, and four Margery Wilson Productions in which Margery Wilson is starred.

The first of these to be released is "The Offenders," a youth and love romance the climax of which is said to be a dramatic scene in which a crippled and demented boy, only witness to a crime of which the heroine is falsely accused, is miraculously healed, and thus enabled to give his evidence. This has already been announced and the others in production in the order named are "Miss Paul Revere," "Insinuation," and "Woman's Woman."

All of the foregoing are released by the Russell Clark Syndicate, Inc., who have also disposed of the California rights to the six pictures mentioned to Turner & Dahnken. Of "The Two Orphans," it is said to be not only the greatest emotional achievement of the stage, but also the most famous play in the world. It is estimated that not less than one million dollars worth of publicity has been accorded it, and the value of this fact it is intimated, is naturally well understood by independent buyers and exhibitors alike. The lead is assumed by a personable and talented young actress.

Plans of East Coast Prods., Are Completed

That the new year finds the plans of the Amalgamated Producing Co., Inc. and East Coast Productions, Inc. combination fully developed so that the twelve pictures, three of which are finished and all of which are being produced under the personal supervision of Gilbert M. Anderson with the new idea "Co-Star" casts, will be handled by franchise-holders throughout the entire country under contracts with East Coast Productions, is now said to be a certainty by Franklyn E. Backer of the latter company.

Closely following the original schedule, prints and advertising matter on the first production, "Ashes," staring William Courtleigh, Myrtle Steadman and other recognized feature players, are being shipped to the new franchise-holders recently announced by Mr. Backer as having been added to the list of independent exchanges exploiting the pictures and the January release will reach the theatres strictly on time.

Weil Signed by Export and Import

Joe Weil of the Joe Weil Service has been signed by Export & Import Film Company, Inc., to conduct their campaign on the new 15-episode animal serial, "The Jungle Goddess," produced by Col. William N. Selig. The picture is being State righted by Export & Import Company. Mr. Weil has capably handled the advance publicity on the serial and is one of the best known publicity and exploitation men in the business.

Heavy Bookings

"Tangled Hearts," the Neal Hart picture which William Steiner Productions, Inc., is State righting, has struck a popular chord with exhibitors according to a statement made this week by its local distributors. Neal Hart and his company are in Bear County, Tex., working on other releases of the series.

To Print Serial

Lee Goldberg of Big Feature Rights Corporation, distributing "The Adventures of Tarzan" in Kentucky and Tennessee, have arranged with the publishers of the Louisville Evening Post to have that newspaper publish the story of the picture in serial fashion. The serial is being extensively shown in the territory.

Book Many Cities

Between You and Me

WALTER SCHAURER, according to an undenied, but unconfirmed report has purchased the rights to a flock of titles that 15 years ago were the melodramatic rage. But Schaurer isn't the only one, for producers who apparently passed out with the demise of the old melodrama seem to be reaping a harvest selling their titles to those who have found that the public has developed a sudden mania for established names.

Louis Baum, of Equity, who recently returned from a tour of the country, brought back with him some very interesting information. Lou ascertained that certain exhibitors in the West paid unheard of rentals for pictures. "But this is true only of box office pictures." he explained. "The exhibitors must keep their houses open and they are not allowing money to stand in their way."

A Cincinnati exchange has purchased three of the biggest pictures put out on the State right market this season. All were sold to him on a $100,000 basis. While he is having no trouble getting bookings, this exchangeman has discovered that he has so much money tied up in these three features that he cannot buy any more pictures. This has forced him to turn down many exhibitors who could not see their way clear in paying the big money for the high-priced features. There are other exchanges similarly handicapped, having neglected the regular films and expended virtually all their money on one or two pictures. Some of these are trying to acquire additional pictures, but offer only paper.

Alexander Film Corporation, which recently acquired the American distribution rights to Stoll's "Sherlock Holmes" detective series of two reelers, will also release a number of other features that that British firm will make. In fact, William Alexander who has just returned from England, is reported by our informant as having closed a number of important deals while on the other side.

A certain importer last Spring invested more than $100,000 in German films that today he would willingly sell for one-tenth that amount. The writer has viewed three and not one of them—and they were supposed to be the best of the lot—could be expected to satisfy the American public's appetite for entertainment.

A certain agent offered the services of Barney Bernard for a screen play for $2,000 a week. He was turned down. But the agent was not to be discouraged so easily. Before he left the producer's office he had offered that star's services for $500, but when that was refused he threw up his hands and cried in dismay, "What in the deuce has happened to you fellows?" To which the producer replied, "Just found out how little we knew about our business five years ago."

Public Wants Serials, Says Mr. Manheimer

That the renewal of interest in serials is not due to any change in the taste of the public, but that present business conditions have enabled the exhibitor to measure the drawing power of different kinds of pictures, and the serial has thus been brought back into its own, is the conclusion of E. S. Manheimer, General Manager of Photoplay Serials Corporation, distributors of the new Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber serial, "The Mysterious Pearl."

"Just as there has been no let-up in the use of continued stories in the magazine and newspaper field," says Mr. Manheimer, "there has been no change in the attitude of the story-loving public toward the chaptered photoplay. It would seem plausible that present conditions are responsible for the definite growth of interest in the serial during the past few months."

Otis Skinner in New York

Otis Skinner, who is to star in "Mister Antonio," produced by Exceptional Pictures Corporation, arrived in New York this week. He is playing in "Blood and Sand" at the Montauk Theatre in Brooklyn. The screen play in which he will be starred was written by Booth Tarkington. Production work will begin immediately after the termination of his stage tour.

Sale in Pittsburgh

Charles (Chic) Sale, the popular star who is featured in Exceptional Pictures Corporation's "His Nibs" was given a royal reception in Pittsburgh where he appeared at the Davis Theatre during the week of Dec. 26. He was enthusiastically received by the newspaper critics who pronounced him one of the greatest artists on the stage today. This week he is headlining at the Colonial, in New York City.

To Visit Philly

It has been virtually decided that Philadelphia will be the first stop of Elmo Lincoln, star in "The Adventures of Tarzan," the Weiss brothers' serial. Mr. Lincoln will be accompanied by Bert Ennis.

Live and Newsy Gossip of the Trade

IT was a merry Christmas party at the Grand & Warner Exchange in Buffalo when Manager Sydney Samson passed out gold pieces to every employe. It is rumored that there also was some real stuff on tap for the participants. Mr. Samson was presented with a gold fountain pen and pencil set. Even the crooks are showing a preference for Grand & Warner productions. A Monty Banks' comedy and an issue of Federated Snap Shots were stolen from an express wagon loaded with films of every brand one day last week. "Why Girls Leave Home" is getting a great reception in western New York, according to Mr. Samson, who has booked the production for almost two dozen theatres in Buffalo alone, including the Strand, Victoria, Star, Rivoli, Fillmore, Capitol, Maxine, Oakdale, Oriole, Lily, Circle, Allendale, Marlowe, Central Park, Liberty and others. "Heidi of the Alps," a Prizma subject, was a big feature at the Loew State last week in Buffalo. Mr. Samson reports an unusually large number of bookings on this production. "School Days" will be released shortly. Howard F. Brink spent the holidays in Buffalo resting after his strenuous campaign in the interest of "Why Girls Leave Home," and getting pepped up for "School Days." Business is unusually good at the Grand & Warner office and plans are now being made for a drive on Federated and other comedies.

Under the auspices of the Federated Film Exchange, of Boston, of which he is the head, Sam Grand, on Tuesday evening at the Copley-Plaza Hotel in that city, staged a trade showing of Warner Brothers' Harry Rapf production of Gus Edwards' play, "School Days," starring Wesley Barry. Representative exhibitors from all six New England States were on hand. A supper followed the showing. There also was dancing. All in all it was a grand and glorious affair. Harry Warner, of New York, was on hand.

January 2d marked the first anniversary of Miss Esther Linder, that enterprisingly aggressive publicity director for C. B. C., Joe Brandt and other firms in which Messrs. Brandt, Jack and Harry Cohn are interested, as chief purveyor of publicity for those gentlemen. Miss Linder spent a busy week receiving congratulations from those in the trade who were let in on her secret.

Joseph J. Goldstein, president of Arrow Photoplays, Inc., of Arrow, was given a royal reception on his arrival in Pueblo, Col., on Dec. 27. Judging from a story published in The Pueblo Chleftain, Joe is exceedingly popular there, for the yarn carried a two-column 30-point head.

A new building nearing completion at 915 South Olive street, Los Angeles, has been leased to three film distributing companies, All-Star Feature Distributors, Supreme Film Exchange and the Federated Film Company. The new building is a one-story structure, divided into three sections, with each section containing a large main office with a large show window fronting the street, a miniature theatre with a projection booth and a concrete vault for films.

J. L. Friedman, of Celebrated Players Corporation of Chicago, announced last week that a deal had been closed with Warner Brothers whereby his firm will distribute the Harry Rapf-produced and William Nigh-directed Gus Edwards' screen play, "School Days," in the states of Illinois and Indiana.

Phil Hazza, of the Montreal Branch of the Standard Films, Ltd., has taken over the Canadian distribution rights to the Snowy Baker pictures being State righted by Aywon Pictures Corporation. Incidentally, Phil also announced that his firm has taken over the distribution in Canada of the entire output of the Film Distributors League.

Also from Canada comes the information that State rights patronage increased considerably during the past few months and a better showing is being looked forward to for the coming season.

David Adler, of the Buffalo office of the Lande Film Company, announces the acquisition of "Thunderbolt Jack" serial, which is now being released in western New York and which is being heavily booked. Philip Adler, sales manager, is now out in the territory booming the serial. The Lande office, which is being operated by the Adler boys, is on the second floor of 145 Franklin street, Buffalo.

Lester Scott, road representative for East Coast Productions, Inc., distributing Amalgamated pictures, returned this week from a trip through the West, where he disposed of territorial rights to Amalgamated franchises.

Sam Grand, of the Federated Exchange, of Boston, Mass., is still confined to his bed in a Hub hospital, but his condition is said to be rapidly improving.

Ben Friedman, of the Friedman Film Exchange of Minneapolis, is preparing for an aggressive exploitation campaign in the Northwest. Ben has acquired the rights to a number of big features that he is now preparing to release.

N. I. Filkins, managing director of the Buffalo and Albany Merit Exchanges, is expected to make some additions to the local sales staff in a few weeks. Mr. Filkins announces that Grace Davison will be in western New York for personal appearances this month, appearing at many of the leading houses.

Bert Lubin stopped off at Kansas City this week on his tour of exchanges early this week. He is expected back in New York with fat contracts late this month.

"Out of the Dust," according to Manager Rovner, of the Lyric Theatre, Camden, N. J., did the biggest business ever recorded by that house. The engagement lasted four days, starting Dec. 27. The picture was elaborately shown, together with a prologue. The staging was under the direction of N. E. Milligan, who is distributing the Remington production in eastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey.

The Apex Film Company of Pittsburgh held a trade showing in the Auditorium there on Jan. 1 of their latest National Exchanges production, "Lotus Blossom." Single and two-reel pictures also were shown. Fifteen hundred persons attended.

Mr. Filkins announces that Merit has taken on two new productions, "The Mother Eternal" and "The Wrong Woman." Mr. Filkins is booking "Mysterious Manchuria" and "A Bit of Old China," as being especially appropriate for showing during the discussion of the Chinese problems by the Armament conference. He has issued a fine piece of publicity in the form of a dodger, showing headlines from the newspapers and a description of the pictures. The Merit offices will remain on the second floor of the Paramount building.

M. Cohen has left Buffalo to take charge of the new Nu-Art exchange, which Fred M. Zimmerman opened this week at 4 Clinton avenue. Mr. Cohen is one of the most popular salesmen in the business and he will get a big welcome in the Albany territory, where he has a host of friends. Mr. Zimmerman reports that the new Lafayette Square Theatre and the Olympic have contracted for the new Johnny Hines comedies, all the Pola Negri productions, "Everyman's Price," and "Heart of the North." Proctor's theatres in Albany and Troy have also booked "Vendetta" and "Intrigue," the two Negris, which Nu-Art is distributing. Mr. Zimmerman reports business booming with the coming of the New Year.

William I. Forey, of Superior Pictures Exchange of Pittsburgh, is again hard at work, after having been laid up for several weeks with a severe attack of lumbago.

So pressing has become the need for space in the new exchange of Federated Film Exchange Company of Pittsburgh that this organization has acquired the entire sixth floor of the building at 1001 Forbes street. Federated took over the space formerly used by the Pittsburgh Realart Exchange.

George West, brother of Billy West, the comedian, visited Kansas City last week. George is on the road for Myriad Productions, Inc., of New York, selling rights to the two-reel comedies starring his brother.

L. L. Hiller to Personally Aid in "His Nibs" Exploitation

L. L. Hiller, President of "His Nibs" Syndicate, Inc., the organization especially formed to distribute "His Nibs," the Exceptional Pictures Corporation production in which Charles (Chic) Sale is making his first appearance as a motion picture star, has gone West in order to aid with the special exploitation program that will mark the first runs of the picture, "His Nibs," in the key cities.

Mr. Hiller's first stop will be at Cleveland, where he will confer with Phil Selznick, who controls the distribution of "His Nibs" for Ohio. Mr.Selznick has booked the feature in a number of key theatres in his state, and special exploitatin will mark these first runs, so that every exhibitor in the territory may take exploitation and put the picture across in the biggest posible manner to large profits. The exhibitors of Ohio are showing great enthusiasm over the picture, which will be released February 1st, and feel sure it will prove to be one of the big money makers of the year 1922.

"I am particularly interested in "His Nibs," Mr. Hiller said just before leaving New York, "for it has so many unusual points in its favor. "Chic" Sale, the star, is one of our greatest vaudeville and musical comedy favorites, and he has surpassed his stage offering by appearing in seven distinct rural character roles in his first picture. Then, too "His Nibs" is a comedy, and comedies that have atmosphere, novelty and suspense are always in the greatest demand. And a third point in favor of the picture is that it is absolutely censor-roof.

"As far as its exploitation possibilities are concerned they are so numerous that it seems impossible to exhaust them. I am very anxious to work with Mr. Selznick and the exhibitors of his territory in putting over the first runs of this picture, and I feel sure that they are going to prove highly successful."

On the completion of his trip to Cleveland, Mr. Hiller has promised to stop in Detroit, Michigan, and Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, to confer with exhibitors in all of those key cities.

First Two Episodes of Big Warners' Serial Are Ready

The first two episodes of the Warner Brothers serial production, "Shadows of the Jungle," being produced at the West coast studios of the Warner organization under the direction of Sam and Jack Warner, have been completed and are ready for the state rights market.

"Shadows of the Jungle," co-starring Grace Darmond and Phil McCullough, is said to be one of the most stupendous serial productions made. The locale of the serial is laid in the wilds of Africa.

Over 1,500 animals belonging to Al G. Barnes, the circus man, are being used in the serial, in addition to hundreds of extras and the trainers and assistants of the Barnes circus. The entire Warner studios, save the administrative offices, is said to have been converted into a veritable jungle and day and night shifts are being used.

Five Big Territories Sold On Warner Brothers' "School Days"

Five of the biggest State right buyers in the country have purchased the latest Warner Brothers production, Gus Edwards' "School Days," featuring Wesley Barry, it is announced.

Louis Berman, of the Independent Film Corporation, Phila., has taken over Eastern Penn., Delaware, D. C., Southern New Jersey and Virginia. The First National Exchange, Pittsburg, has purchased the exclusive territorial rights to Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia. Skirboll Brothers, Cleveland, have acquired the state of Ohio. J. L. Friedman of the Celebrated Film Players, Chicago, has purchased the rights to Northern Illinois and Indiana, and E. G. Tunstall, of Minneapolis, has bought the rights to Wisconsin, Minnesota, and North and South Dakota.

These five deals are said to be forerunners of a number of other negotiations that are being consummated by Harry M. Warner who has stated that only those concerns capable of getting the maximum results out of the production will be given first preference in their respective territories.

The unanimous praise of the production by the trade and newspaper critics is declared to have brought a flood of inquiries to the Warner offices, not only from state right exchanges but also from scores of first run houses throughout the country desirous of booking the feature.

The cast supporting Wesley Barry is a large one, and it includes George Lessey, Margaret Seddon, Francis X. Conlan, Nellie P. Spaulding, Arline Blackburn, J. H. Gilmore, John Galsworthy, Jerome Patrick, Eveline Sherman and Arnold Lucy. The picture was produced by Harry Rapf, and directed by William Nigh, both of whom brought forth "Why Girls Leave Home," also a Warner production, and the story was written by Mr. Nigh and Walter De Leon, who is known as a successful writer.

Five Cities to Show Weiss' Bible Pictures at One Time

Louis Weiss, vice-president of Artclass Pictures Corporation, announces this week that arrangements are now being completed for the showing of the film production of the Old Testament in five key cities throughout the country simultaneously. Representatives of the organization are now in the cities in question negotiating for the leading legitimate theatre in each city. The names of the cities will be divulged next week, together with the names of the house engaged and a tentative opening date has been set for the middle of February.

These openings will follow the premier of the Old Testament film in New York, arrangements for which are now in full swing. In each of the theatres a chorus of fifty voices will form part of the musical program, while augmented orchestras under the direction of well known leaders will interpret the special musical score prepared for this production. As a special attraction for these five openings, an organist of country-wide fame will preside at the organ, rendering a special solo prior to the presentation of the entertainment on the screen.

It is stated that following the runs arranged for in the five cities, the various road companies will be kept intact and turned over to the purchaser of the State rights in each case.

Alexander to Handle All of Stoll's Pictures in U. S.

In the course of an exclusive interview William Alexander of Alexander Film Corporation, made the following interesting statement:

"On my arrival in London, not having been there for four years, I was amazed at the progress made by the English producers, as to studios and their equipment, especially the Stoll Film Company, who have a plant in Crickelwood, which is but twenty minutes from the heart of London.

"The floor space of the Stoll Film Company covers the length of a crosstown New York block. Thirty-two sets can be utilized at one time. The entire equipment, including cameras, carries the U. S. A. mark. They have virtually every well known writer in England tied up, and have a library of over two thousand stories, all well known books.

"While I was there they were just finishing the second episode of the New Sherlock Holmes Series. This series was written especially for the film by Sir Conan Doyle.

"Stoll has Conan Doyle under contract for the next five years. In addition to short subjects, he has written some special features. The first series of the Conan Doyle stories which the Alexander Film Corporation are handling for the United States have grossed more than any two-reel subjects ever presented in Great Britain.

"While in London I arranged with a film clearing house to handle the pick of ninety per cent. of the film produced in France, England and Germany.

Fourth Big Boy Williams Ready

The fourth picture of the "Big Boy" Williams series, being State righted by Aywon Film Corporation, has been completed and is entitled "Across the Border." The natural scenic settings of four states—Utah, Colorado, Arizona and New Mexico—were used in making this picture. Nathan Hirsh, head of Aywon, reports a big demand for this series.

State Rights Buyers Clamoring for "Jungle Goddess" Serial

A veritable avalanche of inquiries is said to have descended upon the offices of the Export & Import Film Co., Inc., following their announcement of the placing of Col. Selig's new animal-jungle serial, "The Jungle Goddess," upon the independent market.

It is evidenced by the nature of these letters that Colonel Selig's reputation has created a tremendous exhibitor demand for his product, so much so, states an official of the Export & Import Film Company, that many of the biggest exchangemen are already making arrangements to come to New York to view the serial.

Colonel Selig's previous serials, "Miracles of the Jungle" and "The Lost City," are admitted to have set the high mark in animal chapter-pictures. Their success is unquestioned, due mainly to the unmatched skill of Col. Selig in making jungle pictures. No other man in the world has had the experience which this pioneer producer has gained thru making these and other serial successes.

Colonel Selig realized the shortcomings of serials in general and also noticed that serial audiences are becoming more discriminate. This is largely due to the fact that the better class serials are now booking the higher class photoplay houses and that the first-run house using serials is no longer an uncommon occurrence.

In making "The Jungle Goddess," all of these conditions were provided for. The censorship question was also carefully studied to eliminate the possibility of costly changes after the picture is released. "The Jungle Goddess," as a result of this forethought, is said to be practically censor-proof.

An indication of the value of tradepaper advertising to the exhibitor and the eager interest which the public has in animal-jungle serials made by Col. Selig, is apparent in the large number of exhibitors who have already written in and wired for information regarding the booking of "The Jungle Goddess."

Prize Winner in Screen Review

Gertrude Eggett, who won the National Contest for the most perfect female form in the United States is one of the subjects recently taken for "Shadowland Screen Review," the single reel released every two weeks by Storey Pictures Inc.

Alexander On Foreign Films

Observations of the Week

WILLIAM ALEXANDER, who arrived in New York on Sunday after a six weeks' business trip abroad, reports generally improved conditions in Great Britain. Alexander Film Corporation will release the 15 Sherlock Holmes detective two-reelers produced by Stolls.

A most striking observation of Mr. Alexander was found in his statement of an exhibitors' movement in London where the theatre owners and film distributors and producers are agitating a measure to be placed before Parliament making residence in the United Kingdom obligatory for all persons who appear in films shown there, with a penalty per capita for none residents in a picture made in the Kingdom or else a fine, stars to be assessed at five quid or the equivalent of $25; principals $15, and supernumeraries four shillings or about one dollar.

The plan, Mr. Alexander said, is regarded by English film men as a sure way to check the invasion of films from Germany,, Italy and France. The measure applies also to American-made pictures, but the feeling that inspired it, he said, has been provoked by the flood of productions seeking English markets with casts, stars and principals composed chiefly of the lowest posible priced alien players.

Advocates of this measure in their petition to Parliament maintain that unless this measure is passed British made films will have to give up the struggle to survive.

Louis Baum of Equity believes there is a tendency in this branch of the industry to flood the market with high priced pictures. Lou recently returned from a visit to various exchange centres. He has interviewed a number of representative exchangemen most of whom complain that while they want to buy pictures they are prevented from doing so because of the high assessment. He cited the case of an Ohio exchangeman who sought to buy a big production. When he learned the price he threw up his hands and quit. It was not because he did not want the picture—on the contrary the exchangeman wanted it and thought it was a wonderful buy. But if he bought that picture virtually all of his capital would be tied up in the one picture.

Certainly Exceptional Pictures Corporation is leaving no stone unturned in properly exploiting their splendid feature, "His Nibs" both in the trade and to the public. The firm's able publicity squad is pushing out pages upon pages of interesting copy concerning the picture and its star, Chic Sale. This movement can not help but open a market for the picture, which in itself is an unusual box office asset. But it is the confidence of Exceptional in its picture and the exhibitors who will show it that is arousing considerable favorable comment for this enterprising firm. It is a good omen.

Quietly, but energetically the Independent Producers and Distributors Association is carrying on its work. Because of the fact that business conditions have virtually monopolized the time of its members, the Association has been unable to give various problems the attention that they would have liked to give them. However, the new year is here and a number of reforms will be acted upon. Joe Brandt, President of the association, was a busy man this week attending to the various affairs of the organization. The possibilities of this organization are numerous and it can accomplish a great amount of good in the market —and there is no doubt but that it will.

We're strong for personal appearances. There is, in our humble opinion, no surer way of popularizing a star than to have him meet the folks who make it possible for him to draw a salary. Movie enthusiasts like to meet them. Incidently, this personal touch develops an intimacy between star and picture and public that usually fattens the box office figures.

Dave Segal Buys 'Change

David Segal of the Royal Pictures, Inc., celebrated the advent of the new year by expanding his State Rights exchange interests. In addition to acquiring the Pioneer franchise for southern New Jersey and eastern Pennsylvania and distributing their product from his Philadelphia exchange at 1337 Vine street, Mr. Segal has also taken over the franchise for the Washington, D. C. district. F. J. Sheppard, who was formerly a Royal salesman, has been promoted to the managership of the Washington exchange.

Starts On Third

Elsie Davenport, featured in Burlesque Photoplays released by Storey Pictures, Inc. has started work in the third of this series of twelve two reelers; "Little Lord Fond O' Joy." The stories for this series are by Edward Anthony,

Snapshots No. 18

Screen Snapshots No. 18 was this week delivered to Federated Film Exchanges for distribution. The issue picturizes Richard Barthlemess, Frank Mayo, Jan Kubelik, the world famous violinist and many other notables of the stage and screen.

Hallrooms Inventors

In their next release of the Hallroom Boys Comedy series, being produced by C. B. C. and distributed by Federated, Freddie and Percy will take the roles of inventors. They are said to appear in a number of side-splitting stunts.

On Long Tour

A number of stars in State rights pictures will start late in January on a tour of personal appearances in the southern territory. Among those who will go are William Desmond, Grace Davison and others.

A Department for the Information of Exhibitors

Edited by A. Van Buren Powell

The box office is the dependable guide for all exhibitors on moving picture productions. In this department your brother exhibitors tell the story of the success or failure of the various releases. Your frank reports on all pictures are solicited for this department. You are helping yourself and others by sending them in. Use the blank printed in this department or better still write us that you'd like a free supply of report cards.

First National

BROKEN DOLL. Another crackerjack in which Monte Blue scores. It is a pleasure to have patrons praise a picture as they did this one. Advertising; ordinary. Patronage; general. Attendance; fair. H. J. Longaker. Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minn.

FAMILY HONOR. Very satisfactory offering, pleased both young and old. It is not a new picture, but it's a good one. Advertising; usual allotment of posters. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; only fair. Jack Kaplan, Royal Theatre, South Fallsburg, N. Y.

FORBIDDEN THING. A lot better than the average picture. Adverse reports rather had me guessing, but the people liked it. Advertising; ordinary. Patronage; general. Attendance; fair. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minn.

GO AND GET IT. Excellent picture. Don't miss this one. Marshall Neilan's pictures all good. Advertising; extra advertisement in local paper. Patronage; average. Attendance; good. S. H. McNeil, Rideau Theatre, Smith's Falls, Canada.

GOLDEN SNARE. Liked the picture very much. For an outdoor production it is exceptionally fine. Curwood's works are always good. Advertising; usual. Patronage; better class. Attendance; poor. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

HOMESPUN FOLKS. A dandy rural drama. Pleased all who saw it. Christmas shopping and poor times hurts patronage on all of them, good or average. Advertising; thorough. Patronage; general Attendance; fair. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minn.

INFERIOR SEX. A good average picture. Well liked by the younger married set. Had many comments. Advertising; two one sheets and slide. Patronage; small town. Attendance; poor. J. F. Schlez, Columbia Theatre, Columbia, N. C.

THE KID. It is all they claim for it. It's great, but did not make me any money. Played two days. Advertising; lobby, mailing list. Patronage; small town. Attendance; poor. Liberty Theatre, Roanoke, Ala.

LYING LIPS. Good. Some real good dramatic stuff, while title has exploitation possibilities. Advertising; teaser cards, special lobby and splash billboard. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. W. Ray Erne. Arcade Theatre, Charlotte, Mich.

PECK'S BAD BOY. Picture is good average. Great drawing card. Advertising; extra space in newspaper. Patronage; regular. Attendance; good. S. H. McNeill, Rideau Theatre, Smith's Falls, Ont., Canada.

SALVATION NELL. Picture will not please society. Patrons very much discouraged. Advertising; extra. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. Arch E. Bamberger, Empress Theatre, Owensboro, Kentucky.

SALVATION NELL. Very good production, indeed, of its kind, but too much religion for average audience. Advertising; usual. Patronage; medium class. Attendance; fair. Geo. C. Poindexter, Broadway Theatre, Topewell, Va.

SOWING THE WIND. Excellent, highly praised by my patrons. Advertising; window cards and one sheets. Patronage; high class. Attendance; fair. G. W. Saul, Firemen's Hall, Hillsdale, N. J.

STRANGER THAN FICTION. Picture pleased very well. Far beter than any of her others. Advertising; regular. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. Arch. E. Bamberger, Empress Theatre, Owensboro, Kentucky.

TRUTH ABOUT HUSBANDS. Very good for adults, not suitable for children. Advertising; window cards and one sheets. Patronage; high class. Attendance; poor. G. W. Saul, Firmen's Hall, Hillsdale, N. J.

Fox

CYCLONE. Very good picture for Mix. Pleased every one. Advertising; ones, threes, sixes and photos. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. R. L. Harding, Plaza Theatre, Little Rock, Ark.

OVER THE HILL. A wonder picture. It pleased all. Commended by pulpit. Advanced admission prices reason for not breaking records. Advertising; newspapers, heralds, program, lithos. Patronage; high class. Attendance; fair. T. D. Davis, Fourth Street Theatre, Moberly, Mo.

THE PRIMAL LAW. A good pleasing western picture of the better sort. Dustin Farnum has all the ear marks of a great star, but does not seem to attract the fans. Advertising; usual. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. E. W. Collins, Liberty Theatre, Jonesboro, Ark.

RIDING ROMEO. Good western with plenty of action and humor. Mix a favorite here. Advertising; usual, posters, photos, etc. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. Anna Frankle, Strand Theatre, Leon, Iowa.

RIDING ROMEO. Very good picture. Tom Mix in his best, all full of action. Every patron pleased. Advertising; same as usual on other pictures. Patronage; mostly big people. Attendance; very good. Frank Fera, Victory Theatre, Rossiter, Pa.

TO A FINISH. A splendid, lively picture worth boosting big. Not a dull moment in it. A real western. Advertising; posters. Patronage; best rural. Attendance; good. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewiston, Ohio.

Goldwyn

DANGEROUS CURVE AHEAD. The most delightful picture we have ever shown, it starts with humor, especially in subtitles, settles down into the business of marriage and then works up to where it will cause a flutter of white around the house as the gentler sex recall vigils of weariness around the sick-bed of some child. It is a big picture, because there are no train wrecks, storms at sea or other adjuncts of the average big feature. It's just human nature portrayed in a delightful fashion; all credit to the one who subtitled the picture. Fine. Attendance; fair, gained each night, however. Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

HIS OWN LAW. Good picture, but film too dark, probably reissue. Will please average audience. Advertising; ordinary advertising. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. Anna Frankle, Strand Theatre, Leon, Iowa.

THE OLD NEST. 100 per cent. picture from any angle. Will back to the limit anything that can be said in its favor. Should be exploited like a road show. Advertised to the limit. Lacks the gallery play of "Over the Hill" and gives much better satisfaction. Advertising; every known method. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; very good. J. J. Wood, Redding Theatre, Redding, Calif.

THE OLD NEST. One of the best pictures ever shown in city. Pleased 99 per cent. of the people. Advertising; lobby and two six sheets. Attendance; good. A. R. Workman, Coliseum Theatre, Marseilles, Illinois.

JOURNEY'S END. Fine picture, but was disappointing to the younger people. Older people raved about it. Advertising; 24 sheets, street car cards, program, newspapers and trailer. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. J. A. Schwalm, Rialto Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio.

SILENT BARRIER. Acting couldn't be improved upon. Think it pleased about 50 per cent. Fine snow scenes. Advertising; ones and lobby. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair, bad weather. J. R. Rush, Pastime Theatre, Pearl City, Ill.

CAMILLE. Nazimova in this production of course would, and did, draw people, but to top it off when picture was shown we find some amateur photographed it. Camera out of focus, dirty lenses, action too slow, blurred and horrible; inexcusable work. Slighted and cheapened at every turn. Disappointed people, when with a little expense and a little care, it could have been so good. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Okla.

FINE FEATHERS. Very good picture, but bum business. Lots of favorable comments. Advertising; lobby and mailing list. Patronage; small town. Attendance; poor. J. F. Pruett, Liberty Theatre, Roanoke, Ala.

THE MAN WHO. Was afraid of this one, exhibitors' criticisms divided; found it pleased, but gald we did not push it any stronger. Would have been a flat failure in less clever hands than Lytell's, his ability saved the show. Advertising; regular. Attendance; fair only. Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

POLLY WITH A PAST. Only fair imitation of a French girl in disguise. Fair picture only. Advertising; usual. Patronage; medium class. Attendance; poor indeed. Geo. C. Poindexter, Broadway Theatre, Hopewell, Va.

POLLY WITH A PAST. Very good, pleased, but did not draw. Lost money on this one. Advertising; lobby and newspaper. Patronage; small town. Attendance; poor. J. F. Pruett, Liberty Theatre, Roanoke, Ala.

Paramount

AFFAIRS OF ANATOL. Only a fair picture, little better than ordinary. Did not cost so darned much to produce. Exhibitors should not be held up on this overestimated thing. At a reasonable price it is just fine, but ours was not a reasonable price, so it is all wrong. We made no money. Yes, it pleased. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Okla.

AFFAIRS OF ANATOL. Absolutely the classiest picture ever on our screen. My hat off to Cecil B. DeMille. Let others rave about Griffith, Ince and others, but for unadulterated genius and real showmanship, commend me to DeMille. Advertising; as usual. Patronage; high class. Attendance; good. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Ark.

AT THE END OF THE WORLD. Very good feature. Did not draw very good, but all who saw it seemed to be well pleased. Advertising; regular. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; poor. Fred S. Windenor, Opera House, Belvidere, N. J.

BONNIE BRIER BUSH. English picture will go good in London, not in U. S. A. Advertising; posters, signs and papers. Patronage; small town. Attendance; poor. J. Carbonell, Monroe Theatre, Key West, Fla.

BRONZE BELL. Fair picture, no drawing power. Patrons did not like it. Lost money on it. Advertising; street car cards, program, newspapers. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; poor. J. A. Schwalm, Rialto Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio.

DON'T TELL EVERYTHING. Disappointing. Story is very thin and picture short. Reid has had many better, starring alone. Patrons expected more and said so. Advertising; special lobby, handbills, slides and program. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. Cragin & Pike, Majestic Theatre, Las Vegas, Nevada.

THE GREAT DAY. Cut 'em out, Mr. Zukor. This British stuff is simply killing the prestige of your trademark in my town. Rotten to the nth degree, every one of them. Advertising; said as little about it as possible. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair, holiday. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, DeQueen, Ark.

HER HUSBAND'S FRIEND. Did not think Enid Bennett would ever be seen in such a poor picture from an audience point of view. Advertising; newspaper, cards and program. Patronage; family. Attendance; good. A. G. Pearson, Pearson's Theatre, Somerville, Mass.

HUMORESQUE. One of the best we have ever had. Played two days, only fair business at first, but picked up later. Advertising; newspaper. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. L. T. Carskaden, Music Hall Theatre, Keyser, West Virginia.

KING, QUEEN AND JOKER. A real lemon that will not add to the prestige of any theatre. Patronage; average. Attendance; light and glad of it. L. M. Zug, Rialto Theatre, Jerome, Idaho.

ONE A MINUTE. A corker! Ran it with a Buster Keaton comedy and got more laughs to the foot than I did from Buster and that's some. It will please 99 per cent. Advertising; regular. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. O. V. Drew, Acme Theatre, Vinalhaven, Maine.

PARIS GREEN. A fair Ray picture. Ray is usually good when he does not overact his part. Advertising; posters. Patronage; best rural. Attendance; poor. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

RESTLESS SEX. Picture pleased about 75 per cent. Advertising; regular. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. Arch E. Bamberger, Empress Theatre, Owensboro, Kentucky.

RESTLESS SEX. First six reels very excellent, the last reel was so long drawn out that it spoiled the picture. Advertising; programs, newspaper and cards. Patronage; family. Attendance; good. A. G. Pearson, Pearson's Theatre, Somerville, Mass.

SACRED AND PROFANE LOVE. Patrons did not like this. Miss Ferguson's personality was lacking. Theme of story very much abused. Advertising; usual. Patronage; better class. Attendance; fair. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

SICK ABED. Very good comedy, although this is not a new one, seemed to please. Wallace Reid a favorite. Advertising; usual advertising. Patronage; best. Attendance; good. Anna Frankle, Strand Theatre, Leon, Iowa.

SILK HOSIERY. Many favorable comments, nothing great, just a nice program picture. Title drew, but Bennett is well liked here. Advertising; lobby and newspapers. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. Ray Pfetcher, Isis Theatre, Roseville, Ill.

TEETH OF THE TIGER. Those who saw picture liked it very well, but it didn't draw well. Advertising; photos, one sheets, newspapers. Patronage; town. Attendance; fair. Harry C. Waffle, Lyric Theatre, McIntosh, S. Dakota.

WHAT'S YOUR HUSBAND DOING? Nice little program picture, amusing. It will please, not like "23 1-2 Hours' Leave," however. Advertising; posters. Patronage; rural. Attendance; poor. B. A. Aughingbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

THE WHISTLE. Was very well taken by our patrons although this is a very unusual type for Wm. S. Hart. Advertising; usual. Patronage; better class. Attendance; fair. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

Pathe

BEGGAR IN PURPLE. Very good picture that will please any audience. Story holds interest throughout. Pathe's rentals are such that the small town exhibitor can make something on them. Advertising; usual newspaper, billboard and lobby. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. Jno. W. Joerger, O. K. Theatre, Enterprise, Oregon.

THE DEVIL TO PAY. Although a little uncanny in some places I think this is the best so termed all-star of this class for some time. It should be listed as starred by Roy Stewart. Advertising; usual newspaper with extra billboard. Patronage; small town. Attendance; very good. Jno. W. Joerger, O. K. Theatre, Enterprise, Oregon.

Realart

MARCH HARE. Nice light entertainment for any audience. The star is working her way into public favor. Advertising; street car cards, 24 sheets, newspaper, program, trailers. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. J. A. Schwalm, Rialto Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio.

THE SPEED GIRL. Was disappointed in this picture and in Bebe Daniels. About the poorest picture she made. All her other pictures have been extra good. Advertising; average. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. Charles Kuchan, Idylhour Theatre, Canton, Ill.

R-C

THE FOOLISH AGE. Fine comedy that certainly pleased. First picture of this star, Doris May, for me. Hope she keeps up the way she started. Advertising; better than average. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. Chas. Kuchan, Idylhour Theatre, Canton, Ill.

LIVE AND LET LIVE. A good picture. Advertising; average. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. Charles Kuchan. Idylhour Theatre, Canton, Illinois.

SALVAGE. Fine picture. The best Pauline Frederick picture from R-C and it went over the best of her pictures for me. Advertising; average. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. Chas. Kuchan, Idylhour Theatre, Canton, Ill.

SEVEN YEARS' BAD LUCK. A good five-reel comedy, a laugh every minute and takes better than dramas here. Kept my patrons laughing all the time. Try it. Patronage; all classes. Attendance; fair. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre, Dexter, New York.

SEVEN YEARS' BAD LUCK. More stunts to the reel than most of them. Max Linder gave us one that made even the sour ones laugh. Advertising; thorough. Patronage; general. Attendance; fair. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minn.

STEALERS. A good picture from all angles, teaches a good moral lesson and will please any audience. Advertising; cards, bills, newspaper, one sheet. Patronage; first class. Attendance; poor. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre, Dexter, N. Y.

STEALERS. They had the material here to make a big wonderful picture, but somewhere they slipped, and only turned out a picture that's just above the average. It's in eight reels and would have been better in six. Advertising; regular newspaper, extra billboards. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Illinois.

Selznick

GHOSTS OF YESTERDAY. A very good picture starring Norma Talmadge and Eugene O'Brien. O'Brien is much better in this than his star vehicles. Advertising; average. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. Chas. Kuchan, Idylhour Theatre, Canton, Illinois.

Straight from the Shoulder Reports

THE GREATEST LOVE. This is the best picture we have shown this year. Everyone greatly pleased. You can't go wrong on a Select program. Advertising; photos, one sheets, postal cards. Patronage; smalltown. Attendance; fair (snow storm). P. S. Nielan, Rex Theatre, La Moure, N. D.

A MAN'S HOME. Believe it to be the biggest disappointment you could draw among pictures. Cannot see it from any angle. Rotten business and glad of it. Ned. Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Okla.

REMORSELESS LOVE. A fine picture. Both star (Elaine Hammerstein) and lead (Niles Welch), were very good. Patrons highly pleased. Advertising; average. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. Charles Kuchan, Idylhour Theatre, Canton, Ills.

United Artists

DREAM STREET. Opinion divided as to picture, although all applauded work of Dempster and Graves. My personal opinion is, wonderful picture. Advertising; special lobby with all colored lights, prologue and heavy newspaper and lots of cards. Patronage; smalltown. Attendance; good. W. Ray Erne, Arcade Theatre, Charlotte, Michigan.

THREE MUSKETEERS. One of the best of Costume pictures, sold too high, but why do they make costume pictures? Just about 25% appreciate them. Another loser for me. Advertising; newspaper, heralds, banner, all styles of litho. Patronage; very best. Attendance; poor. F. M. Holeman, Garrick Theatre, Madisonville, Kentucky.

WAY DOWN EAST. A very fine picture, but they certainly are asking too much money for it, lost money and if there ever was a picture that had publicity this one had it. Advertising; 591 inches newspaper, 1800 circular letters, all styles of paper, in fact everything. Patronage; very best. Attendance; poor. F. M. Holeman, Garrick Theatre, Madisonville, Kentucky.

Universal

THE CONFLICT. Good picture, but thrills were not what they were advertised. Priscilla Dean doesn't do any more than walk on logs. Advertising; four papers, threes, sixes, 100 window cards and special lobby display. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; 900. J. Edw. Mitchell, Strand Theatre, Waverley, Mass.

DESPERATE TRAILS. Good picture, Harry Carey well liked. Universal features as a rule good. Photography poor. Advertising; six sheets, newspapers, photos, slides. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. Al. V. Bothner, Majestic Theatre, Troy, New York.

THE FIGHTING LOVER. Frank Mayo is great favorite here and drew his usual good crowd. Advertising; newspaper. Patronage; smalltown. Attendance; good. L. T. Carskaden, Music Hall Theatre, Keyser, W. Va.

MAN TRACKERS. The audiences in suburban theatres to-day like Northwestern pictures, even if the cast is not all star. They enjoyed this picture. Advertising; program, cards and newspaper. Patronage; family. Attendance; good. A. G. Pearson, Pearson's Theatre, Somerville, Mass.

NOBODY'S FOOL. A dandy picture that went over fine. Cast included a former Cantonian so that helped put it over. It's a real good comedy. Advertising; better than average. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. Chas. Kuchan, Idylhour Theatre, Canton, Illinois.

PINK TIGHTS. Some dandy little picture, went over better than most specials. Everybody pleased, but why did the girl say to the preacher "forget that I got legs."? Why do they have to mar otherwise perfectly clean and entertaining picture. When a man has to work for seven years to get his house up to a paying proposition and finally get some of the picture knockers to coming to your show they can find flaws enough without deliberately slamming them after you get them to come. J. R. Rush, Pastime Theatre, Pearl City, Illinois.

Vitagraph

BRING HIM IN. Fairly good. This sort of picture is good for the smalltown Saturday crowd. Ran two reel Tom Santsche and Lloyd reissue with it. Advertising; advertised as double feature bill. Patronage; smalltown. Attendance; good. W. Ray Erne, Arcade Theatre, Charlotte, Michigan.

THE FORTUNE HUNTER. An excellent picture. One of the best rural comedy-dramas we have ever had. Clean, wholesome and delightfully entertaining. Advertising; one sheets, photos, 11x14, heralds and local paper. Patronage; community. Attendance; fair, bad night. Ida Grant, Grant's Theatre, Hobart, New York.

Wid Gunning, Inc.

THE OLD OAKEN BUCKET. A wonderful production, many liked it better than "The Old Nest." Photography fine. We are bringing the picture back for a return date. Advertising; special set of six slides, lobby display, mats, school children contest for prize on largest list of words made from letters in title, three sheets, one sheet, etc. Patronage; high class. Attendance; packed house. John W. Creamer, Pert Theatre, Gillespie, Illinois.

State Rights

WHEN DAWN CAME (H. E. DIERKER). A splendid picture. Don't remember when a picture pleased so much. Many compliments. Should run it as a special. Advertising; average. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. Charles Kuchan, Idylhour Theatre, Canton, Ills.

THE MASK (IMPORT & EXPORT). A very good production. Would recommend it for any theatre, will please all classes. Advertising; six, three, one sheets, photos, extra newspaper. Patronage; general. Attendance; fair. U. G. Replogle, Grand Theatre, St. Mary's, Ohio.

MONTANA BILL (RICHARDS & FLYNN). Good, but has quite a bit of night scenes in reels four and five that were so dark had to put out house lights. They make the night scenes too dark. Find all of Fairbank's pictures good. So far have run four of them. Wm. Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

Comedies

RAINBOW ISLAND (PATHE). Good comedy. Patronage; smalltown. J. R. Rush, Pastime Theatre, Pearl City, Ills.

How Australian Picture Managers Advertise Their Films to the Public

NOTE:—This story of advertising the films in Australia has been written by Albert Deane, publicity manager of the Australian branch of the Paramount. It runs a trifle long, but we believe that the complete picture it draws of exploitation "down under" will be of sufficient interest to excuse its length.

IF the Australian exhibitor is perfectly content to exploit his picture according to its merits and then pay the piper—in the shape of a whole host of municipal by-laws—then he should meet with unbounded success, for Mr. and Mrs. Australia are proverbially enthusiastic and delight in the unconventional.

It is here proposed to outline, in four sections, the procedure of the Australian exhibitor—whether he be first-release, suburban or small-town—right from the time of booking his film down almost to the signing of his deposit slip at the bank.

Accessory Advertising

For the purpose of advising the folks about a picture by means of outdoor advertising, what is known as a hoarding is made use of. This is identical with the American stand, but is not used as neatly nor constructed so distinctively. Posters of many sizes are placed upon it in a very patchwork-quilt fashion and so each does not have the degree of attractiveness that it should. Into this motley must go the exhibitor's lithograph and take its chance of being observed.

Posters also are used in advance both around the theatre and in the lobby, whilst in conjunction with them, for wider and more inexpensive publicity, use is made of what is known as the Daybill. This might easily be termed a half-sheet, for it is as deep as a one-sheet, but only half as wide and can be prepared in lithograph for about $20 a thousand. These are sniped in outlying districts, in shop windows and in many other places where their comfortable size accommodates them.

In almost every instance the exhibitor prepares and has printed his own couriers (heralds) and various methods are utilized in the distribution of these. They may be handed to outgoing patrons, may be placed with householders by paid distributors and in some instances arrangements have been made with the postal authorities where by payment of one cent per courier they may be distributed by the letter-carriers in specially authorized envelopes to householders at the carrier's discretion. These couriers carry advance publicity and teaser campaigns relating to forthcoming attractions.

Where a production is particularly adapted to a teaser campaign, snipes, usually about twenty inches by five, stickers, scattered newspaper ads and teaser stereos (electros) in newspapers and house organs are the media used to attract the public attention.

Announcement slides—often five or six for the one picture—tell the fact from the screen and many theatres use slides for productions which are well into the future.

Banners over the lobby entrance and lobby display photos are also made use of extensively. These are not sold to the exhibitors but hired, as are also slides and electros, but all paper is sold outright.

All this time it must be borne in mind by the reader that, with a few very notable exceptions, the Australian exhibitor has been, and still is being compelled to serve up a program containing two feature pictures in addition to fillers; so that unless he decides to concentrate upon one picture only, he has to duplicate his accessories and his method of using them for each of the two features.

Exploiting The Picture

Mention has already been made of the bugaboo of the municipal by-laws. These comprise, I think, the greatest list of "Thou shalt not's" in captivity and the fearsome penalties tacked onto the end of each one of them make a person think not twice about defying them, but seventeen times or more. Consequently, with the exception of an oft-lavish use of the several accessories outlined previously, not a great amount of actual go get 'em exploitation is indulged in. However there sometimes occur cases of inspired defiance from which very worthwhile results are gained.

Any competition or stunt with tickets for prizes is always a success, for some queer psychological twist always seems to render a free ticket's value about ten times its actual face value. Likewise petty remuneration by tickets instead of cash in Australia is always the far more successful method. Consequently such a stunt as dropping couriers from an aeroplane, with tickets attached to a few, is always a success.

Floats are not permitted, nor are banners in, or across the streets, but occasionally in the event of such a procession through the streets as Eight Hour Day (Labor Day), the regula-

Pay As You Exit Idea Rent Free Exploitation

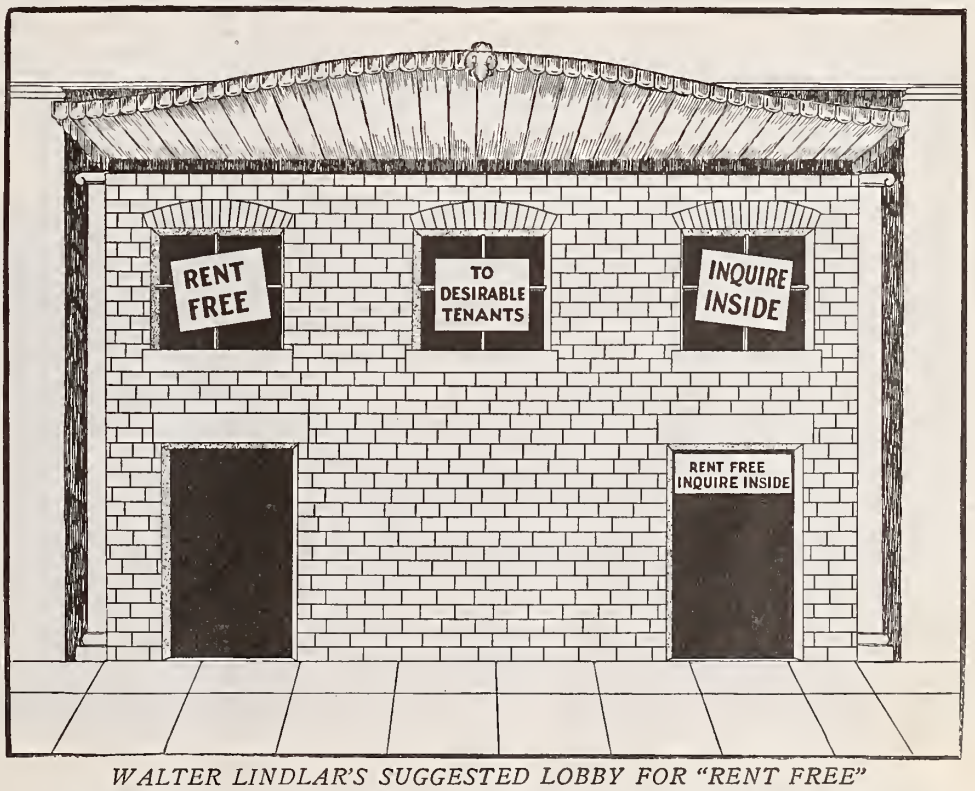
Here is the idea suggested by Walter Lindlar, assistant to Claud Saunders, of the Paramount exploitation department for "Rent Free," the next Paramount release. If you have the Paramount service, hold this against the coming of the picture. Otherwise add it to your gallery and adapt it to any picture it will fit.

Mr. Lindlar suggests that for this picture the patron be confronted with a sign reading that admission is free, but the patron can pay as he exits if he approves the entertainment. In this case the box office is eliminated and replaced by a "renting office" at the exit door. Some few persons may leave without paying, but most of them will cash out, and the loss of a few admissions will cover the cost of a novel talking point.

Where you exact admission in advance, put up a sign stating that you rent the seats free, but make a small charge for light and heat. That will put the idea over the still assure your receipts.

In building this lobby hold the front flat and save the pieces cut out for windows, then you can repaint later on, with other openings for some other attraction. It is a foundation structure on which much work can be done from time to time.

On the other hand, you can decorate the brickwork with trailing vines, or run a row of potted plants along the base and get an elaborate effect. By laying off the idea to some local real estate dealer, you may be able to split the cost of the building.



WALTER LINDLAR'S SUGGESTED LOBBY FOR "RENT FREE"

In this the front is shut off with a false front dome to represent brick and with for rent signs in the windows. If you can get real windows with broken glass stuffed with rags, it might help to emphasize the comedy nature of the picture tions are waived and floats are then permitted.

Co-operative tie-ups are only now forming part of the education of the Australian merchant and like one who has suddenly seen the light, he is proving himself a ready and apt pupil. Judging from advanced reports received concerning the activities of John W. Hicks Jr., who is controlling the distribution of Paramount and Realart productions down there, 1922 is going to prove a revelation in the matter of tie-ups.

So that what is being written now regarding exploitation in Australia will really prove to be history, since it is written concerning an age which is swiftly pasing.

Some Stunts Which Have Sold the Picture

An advance showing of a really worthwhile picture in some big public institution such as the Town Hall (City Hall), and a request for all those attending to submit their opinions, preferably to the press, has in almost every case secured a desirable initial impetus to the picture. From these opinions newspaper controversies have often commenced and attained a countrywide significance. Just to quote two pictures which might come into this double-headed category I might quote Paramount's "The Inside of the Cup" and Selznick's "The Flapper."

Small novelties such as hairpins for the picture of the same name, small envelopes containing sand for Bill Hart's grittily-titled picture, and betting tickets for "The Home Stretch" form but a few of the minor interest-attracting devices which have been employed to advantage.

Official Endorsement First

Official endorsement of a picture is a great selling factor, but this has only been gained in comparatively few instances. One of these, as might naturally be inferred, was "Humoresque," whilst another—digging back into the murky past—was "The Miracle Man."

Those two veterans "What's Your Hurry?" and "Too Much Speed," both received the endorsement of the police authorities and this was fully capitalized.

But summed up, all in all, it will be readily seen that exploitation is a science with practically untouched possibilities in Australia and I am moved to again urge upon you to 'watch Australia's smoke' right from the beginning of 1922.

Hyman's Novelties at the Mark Strand

For the week of January 8, Edward L. Hyman, of the Mark-Strand, Brooklyn, announces a novelty in a prologue to the comedy instead of the feature. This is really a production number, germane to the film, rather than a prologue in its true sense, but it serves to make talk. The comedy is Harold Lloyd in "A Sailor Made Man" and the prologue is a bass solo, "The Sea Makes a Man a Man," sung in an adaptation of the setting used last week for the Pinafore selections. The singer is dressed in naval uniform and is supposed to represent Lloyd, though Hyman does not say whether or not the glasses will be used.

EDW. L. HYMAN

The overture will be selections from Lohengrin, played straight. The last two or three overtures have been merged with a production and the return to straight will serve as a change. The orchestra will be flooded with magenta from the booth, with four 500 watt lamps in blue playing from overhead. Two bridge spots in orange will be thrown on the plush curtain of the production stage and the transparent windows on either side of the orchestra stage will be in harmony.

The first production will be a suite of waltzes by Dvorak, Brahms, Strauss and Schubert, done into motion by a premiere and secondas. The set will be the blue cyclorama, with openings through which show blue sateen backings. The cyke will be flooded dark blue and the backings a lighter blue, to give contrast. The dancers wear Greek costume of chiffon. For the first dance the performers will be picked up with magenta spots, amber and pink for the next two and a color wheel for the fourth. The foots will be blended green and blue.

The Topical Review separates this from a concert number by the male quartet, singing on the front apron. The selections are "Carmena" waltz, Wilson, and "The Sandman" Protheroe.

Charles Ray in "R. S. V. P." is the drama feature, followed by the sea number and the comedy, with McKinley's "Arabesque" for the organ postlude.

Under the heading of newspaper advertising must naturally come paid space advertising and free publicity. In the latter respect many papers are quite liberal and will print anything that is truthful and really worthwhile. But it is fatal to attempt to put 'fake stuff' over as it might 'kill' an exchange or an exhibitor with whatever paper or papers that publish it. Free publicity also includes photos, but these only appear in the weeklies and Sunday issues.

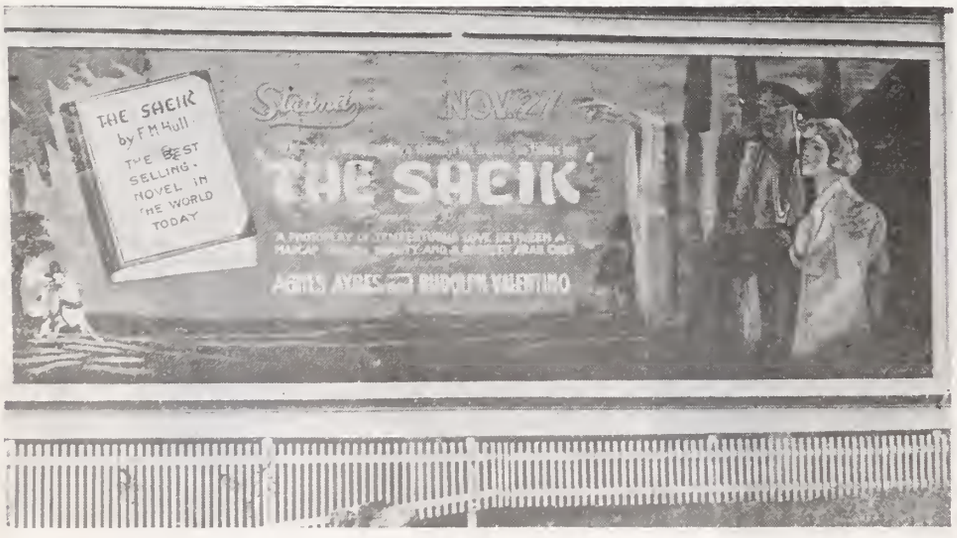
Paid space advertising even judged on a relative circulation basis, is cheaper in Australia than it is in the U. S. Thus as a natural corollary, it follows that exhibitor's advertisements in both the daily and Sunday newspapers are bigger there than they are over here. In a Sunday issue it is not an uncommon occurrence to find two or even three distinct full page ads in addition to quite a number of half and quarter pages.

The advertisements are in most cases illustrated by Australian made cuts—usually in line, but also quite frequently in a composite line-and-tone; and after a period of the opposite practice a few years ago, the stern and steadfast motto that is now almost a religion with advertisers is "Truth In Advertising." So that now prospective patrons can know just what they are going to see.

Coincident with their daily announcements the first-release theatres in the capital cities carry the announcement of their forthcoming week's attractions; so that virtually these theatres are perpetually carrying two distinct advertisements.

Each adverisement usually carries the location of the theatre, the full season of the programme's screening and the list of "admission prices, plus-tax."

In the text of the advertisements superlatives are taboo and so the vast army of "est's" and "ion's" is seldom made use of, and then only when truthfully necessary.



HERE IS HAROLD WATTS' IDEA OF A POSTER FOR "THE SHEIK"

He has this stand built for "The Affairs of Anatol" and has been using painted posters and straight 24s ever since. This is a painted sign and helped to keep business up at the Strand Theatre, Omaha, for a very profitable two weeks

Ruff Stuff

Ralph Ruffner, of the Capitol Theatre, Vancouver, has not been writing much lately, but he is still keeping in form. Recently the circuit he is with offered prizes for the best cleanups on "The Affairs of Anatol, and Ruff nosed out the Toronto house, which had been the pacemaker, and moved up from second to first place as they came under the wire. He says he is going to take some repeats on other similar contests, and if Ruff makes up his mind to it, he generally does what he sets out to accomplish.

Sold Out on 18

One of the most popular girls in Bellevue, Ohio, was the telephone central. There was only one, and everyone knew her, because she was the prize operator of that district.

When she announced her engagement, George R. Moore, of the Lion Theatre, invited her to give a theatre party. She took eighteen seats, but the rest of the town heard about it through the newspaper announcement and everyone came to give her a send-off. Those eighteen tickets virtually sold out the house.

THIS FIRST FRONT ON "MY BOY" MATCHES THE POSTERS

Jack Retlaw, of Pomona, was the first to get the new Jackie Coogan release, and he followed the line of the Yearsley posters with hand made sketches and lettering. He dressed the ushers as Jackies, and put on a prologue

Followed Yearsley Idea on Jackie Coogan Front

Playing the world-premier on Jackie Coogan in "My Boy," Jack Retlaw, of the Belvedere Theatre, Pomona, Calif., followed the Yearsley poster idea for his house front.

All of the displays were crudely drawn and roughly lettered, and unlike the average run of lobby material, therefore they attracted unusual attention.

Mr. Retlaw also made Jackie Coogans of his girl ushers and his ticket sellers, which helped to make talk. A prologue was staged showing Jackie and the Captain.

Builds a Display on Lithographic Cutouts

Manager Bradt, of the People's Theatre, Portland, Ore., has a lobby which permits a pretentious display, and for First National's "Foolish Matrons" he devised a clever stage setting with cutouts from the paper to supplement his painted scenery. It is a two groove display and makes a very ingenious use of the lithographic material.

As most scene painters are weak on figures, this is a material aid in the preparation of a lobby display, the combination idea is coming more and more intouse, but we have seldom seen it better done than in this example.

Above the lobby are the bust cutouts of three women, apparently taken from other paper, one of which is labeled "A Foolish Wife," which is a free advertisement for Universal's "Foolish Wives," not altogether necessary. It does not pay to trespass upon another title.

Bucked a Blizzard

J. V. Lynn did not know that he was preparing blizzard proof publicity when he hooked the American Theatre, Butte, to the Anaconda Standard on the name in the advertisements stunt for "The Sheik." He simply wanted more newspaper space than he could afford to pay for, and knew he could get it with passes where he could not win it with as many ten dollar bills.

For an entire week the paper told about the Sunday stunt when fifteen advertisements would each carry a name chosen at random from the circulation list. The newspaper angle was not circulation stunt so much as to offset the great bulk of holiday advertising. It wanted to assure its advertisers that the spaces would be read, and each time it ran a big story about the stunt it helped the advertising solicitors as much as it did the theatre.

Then came Sunday, "The Sheik" and a blizzard of proportions, but so many persons had made up their minds they were going to see "The Sheik" that they came anyway in spite of their disappointment and the storm.

Exploitation Paintings Used in an Art Gallery

John Maloy, general manager for Wilmer & Vincent in Allentown, Pa., and Alvin Plough, a Goldwyn Exploitation man, gave the town the large shake-up for "The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari." They even persuaded the committee to hang a set of 14 by 22 stills in the art gallery, which is the first time this stunt has been worked in just this fashion.

An impersonator of Caligari was shown in the theatre after the trailer, seated at a desk, a black desk against a black ground, and he was dressed in a black suit. A green light shone upon his whitened face. As the spot went on he turned to the audience and remarked "Yes, ladies and gentlemen. I will appear on the screen of this theatre next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday." Then the lights went out and he made his exit.

Moved the Doctor

On the playing dates they moved him into the lobby, desk and all, with a nurse to keep him company, and the cashier was also dressed in a nurse's costume. The chief display sign read, "Dr. Caligari. Office hours 2 to 11. For appointments see the head nurse."

This chap Plough interests us. We'd like to hear more about him. Any man who can break into an art gallery with exploitation material amounts to something. It has only been done once before and then as a poster show.

Votes for Women

Constance Talmadge, in "Woman's Place," was the attraction at the Frances Theatre, Dyersburg, Tenn., only a couple of days before the primary election, and manager T. W. Young worked so hard on her behalf that he almost won the nomination for her. Scatter cards reading—"Vote for Constance Talmadge for Mayor. It's a woman's place" were all over town, and her "platform" was posted in front of the theatre where all might run to read. It was timely, and it took hold big.

ANOTHER COMBINATION LITHO AND SCENERY DISPLAY

This comes from the People's Theatre, Portland, Oregon, where Manager Bradt built up a couple of cutouts into a very presentable stage setting in the lobby to Advertise First National's "Foolish Matrons." The matrons are around the B. O.

Christmas Tree Party Won Gadsden Approval

Hundreds of theatres had special parties for Christmas, some for the poor children and others for just kids, but the most successfully handled party thus far to be reported was given by the Imperial Theatre, Gladsden, Ala., in conjunctin with a local paper.

It was planned to start the show at ten o'clock and have some 2,000 children, but the crowd began to gather at half past eight and in spite of the light rain, had increased to 5,000 by ten o'clock. It was not possible to take care of them all in the theatre, but those who could not get in enjoyed the band concert and felt they had been to the party even if they did not get in.

A. L. Snell, the local manager for Southern Enterprises, arranged an all-comedy program for the youngsters and the paper got 2,000 packages of chewing gum, and as many toy balloons and boxes of chocolates. It was all on an advertising basis, but that made no difference to the children and now the Imperial stands foremost among the houses in town.

In addition to providing the gifts, the newspaper gave one and two column boxes on the front page for a ten day period and whooped it up for the Imperial. And all it cost the house was covered by a five dollar bill. That covered the tree decorations. And the best part is that Snell did this on his own initiative.

"MOLLY O" WAS MADE TO HELP OUT THE SIGN PAINTERS

This is the first time the Columbia Theatre, Portland, ever put up an electric sign for a title, but when they realized what a flash they could get with that six-letter title they simply had to break precedent and set it up

Local Teaser Ad. Was Good for a Repeater

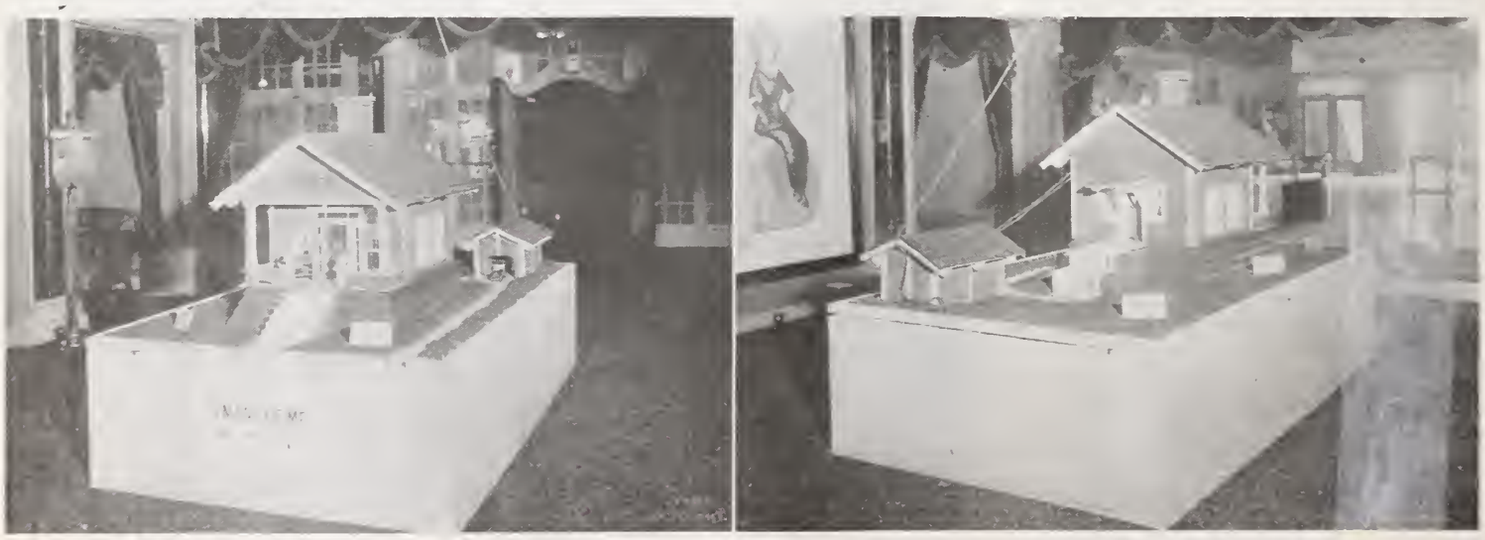
Charles H. Amos, of the Strand Theatre, Spartanburg, S. C., ran a teaser ad. in the local paper for Constance Binney in Realart's "Room and Board." It was so cleverly worded the Tampa Tribune fell for it and made it the subject of editorial comment, and then the Spartanburg paper re-copied it and Amos got a second chance at the patrons free, whereupon he changed his display copy to match the much repeated teaser and rode in on that.

Mr. Amos, who is a graduate from the operating room, also painted a castle front for the lobby—painted it himself, and that also helped to run up the receipts. To make certain that there would be no misunderstanding, he labeled it above the box office opening, "Kildoram Castle, 'Room and Board.'" The title does not suggest castles, and he wanted to make it plain. And he did it at a cost of ten dollars, which is cheap at present building prices.

Miniature Models Display a Man's Home

Evidently the miniature of a cottage will be the standard display for "A Man's Home," just as the Lindlar lobby is standard for "The Sheik." E. E. Rogers of the Tivoli, Chattanooga, built an elaborate house in his lobby, keeping it inside for a week as advance exploitation and then moving it outside where it worked during the run.

People respond to the appeal of the miniature models where they will pass more pretentious displays, and this structure made a clean-up for Mr. Rogers because it was so complete, with an auto in the garage and electric lights in both house and auto home. Everything is done to a scale, and is perfectly proportioned, which makes the appeal all the stronger. A single object too large or too small will seriously injure the effect, but Mr. Rogers kept inside the lines and the model is a fine example of how it should be done.



E. R. ROGERS, OF THE TIVOLI THEATRE, CHATTANOOGA, BUILDS "A MAN'S HOME"

It's a nifty little place and just the sort you would like to rent, and it stood in the foyer for a week before the showing of the Selznick production. It looks as though this miniature house stunt will be the standard lobby and window decoration for this play, for it can be made to cost less than a dollar or can be done as elaborately as a manager desires

HERE'S ANOTHER STAR WINDOW FOR "THE SHEIK"

It was invented by Ray Jones, of the Orpheum Theatre, Topeka, Kan., for a drug-store hook-up. The sign in back reads: "We have all those rare, old perfumes such as 'The Sheik' gave Agnes Ayres." The floor is sand and the figures litho cutouts

A New Idea for Cars

Not all of the angles on the street car perambulator have been shown even yet. The newest comes from Jones and Cammack, of the Cozy Theatre, Shawnee, Okla. They booked Fox's "Over the Hill" for five days and held it for two additional days, playing to one out of every three of the city's population.

They used circular painted cards on auto spares and a car perambulator. Exhibitors who have struggled to get a good banner on the closed car will appreciate the Jones and Cammack stunt of resting the side pieces on the running boards of a summer car and tying off to the posts. It makes a simpler fix and a very much safer one.

It helped to bring in seven solid days of S. R. O. And the funny part is that they admit they felt they had been gypped when they were talked into booking it for five days instead of three.

Real Competition

Don't think that because the man up the street or across the way has a big film that you know all about competition. If you think you are up against it, give a thought to the Royal Theatre, Laredo, Texas, on the banks (or one of them) of the Rio Grande.

They booked "A Small Town Idol" from First National, to open on a Sunday. Saturday night a 200-barrel oil well came in a short distance out of town, and everyone wanted to see the gusher. In the afternoon New Laredo, across the border, pulled a regulation bull fight and then matched a tiger against a bull, and in the evening there was a free band concert in the Plaza.

And even at that the Royal pulled them in to see the cross-eyed comedian, and pulled them to capacity, with a subsequent holding up of two more days on the advice of the Sunday spectators.

That's meeting competition—throwing the bull fight, as it were.

Do you know why you pay more for a Pickford film than for a state rights, "all-star" cast? You know that Miss Pickford will sell better because she is better known. Patrons know she is a safe bet. Did it ever occur to you that you could make your house the star of your town? Advertising, plus merit, made Miss Pickford. It can make you.

Had One New Stunt and Some Veterans

Jimmie Carrier, R-C exploitation man, worked one new idea for Doris May in "The Foolish Age" in Seattle. Two weeks before the picture was due to open at the Blue Mouse, he advertised his disgust at the failure of Seattle managers to book Seattle's own star in her big production and urged some church or organization to hire a hall and run the picture on a percentage basis. This ran two days and then the copy was changed, but ran along the same lines. The last two days whooped it up over the fact that the picture would be seen under the best possible conditions at the Blue Mouse.

In the meantime a number of organizations had applied for the booking, and they were persuaded to sell tickets to the Blue Mouse on a commission basis. As only about 40 per cent. of the tickets came in, the house was ahead.

Other stunts were the ten names notification, the blank book with "What I Know About Women," and the arrow stunt, which was worked with unemployed Legion men.

The lost key idea was also used, and 125 out of 150 keys were brought to the box office and exchanged for a pass. A special pass was used for this and the doorman was instructed to mark on the back the number of paid admissions each pass carried. The count showed that the 125 free tickets brought in 160 paid admissions. This is about the average, but this is the first time that actual figures have been taken, and this should interest managers who contemplate any free ticket distribution. You can count on one paid admission, at the least, for each ticket given free.

Posted Milk Wagons

Saving a lot of cost, the Crystal Theatre, Wayne, Ia., used the three local milk wagons for perambulators for the run of "Over the Hill," posting both sides of the carts, which completely covered the town and gave a better display than any perambulator could have done.

Of course the carts are not out in the afternoons, but on the second trip the wagons are kept out until well along in the morning, and they cover every street and not merely the business streets, so that practically everyone had a chance to see the signs.

HOW THE GARRICK THEATRE, MADISONVILLE, KY., PUT OVER "WAY DOWN EAST"

There was a high school game on Thanksgiving Day between the local school and that from a nearby town, and excitement ran high. Manager F. M. Holeman made a pipe line, and when the home eleven marched out on the field every one of the sixteen carried on his back a sign for the Garrick attraction. It is one of those stunts you have to work for, but it is worth while

Boasberg Brainstorm Convulsed Two Cities

Albert Boasberg, Detroit Paramounteer, had a brainstorm recently, and when the physicians got off his chest and said he would probably recover, he went out and sold the idea to Eddie Zorn, of the Temple Theatre, Toledo, and to the Regent Theatre, Ann Arbor. It is simple, but it will stand any small city on its head inside of twenty-four hours, and will jazz business at a house for weeks.

A Wild-Cat Flash

It was tied to the Cosmopolitan-Paramount "Get Rich-Quick Wallingford," and was started off with a display advertisement in the newspapers very similar to the flashes wildcat companies use. In it the C. C. T. Co. announced that it was going to bring 5,000 workmen to the town, put street cars on all leading arteries and build at least fifteen sky-scrapers.

The second day it added that the town would have to build subways to handle its traffic problems. The third day the company begged the reader to sell no property and give no options.

Then the Blow-off

And on the third day an unsigned warning appeared in which the advertiser offered the opinion that the C. C. T. Co. was none other than the Covered Carpet Tack Company, which two years ago had been operated in the vicinity of Des Moines—to the detriment of Des Moines pocketbooks. That, of course, put gasoline on the fire, and had everyone talking at once. They did not know whether to invest or investigate, and while they were in this frame of mind the theatre slid in with a statement that the full details of the Covered Carpet Tack Company would be shown in "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford." After that there was nothing to be done but to buy tickets. Everyone did.

Mr. Zorn also used a show window, but he didn't need it. He just threw that in.

HERE IS A USEFUL LOBBY IDEA FOR "A MAN'S HOME"

This man's home is apparently a pasteboard cutout toy and provided with a lawn and a background of black cloth. It was devised by Gail Meyers, of the Park Theatre, Champaign, Ill., for the Selznick production, and attracted much attention

Made a Cutout Toy Man's Home Display

Almost as effective as the toy railroad was a built scene provided by Gail Meyers, of the Park Theatre, Champaign, Ill., for the Selznick production of "A Man's Home."

The basis seems to be a cutout toy such as most stores carry. If it was not, one of these toys will serve as well and will involve no trouble and practically no expense. This was built up with a yard and graveled rocks. Over on the right a table and two chairs were placed, but these are almost as large as the house, and detract somewhat from the effect. All should be built to scale.

The simplest display will atract attention, but the more elaborate the effect the greater the impression made and it will pay to devote some time and care to the preparation of the scene.

The same idea can be used for a window display, particularly in the florists' windows, where they have the greenery to build up with.

ZORN'S FLASHY WINDOW FOR GET-RICH-QUICK WALLINGFORD"

Money bags were the big attractor for the Cosmopolitan-Paramount presentation at the Temple Theatre, Toledo; but windows were only a runner-up for a campaign of blue-sky advertising which had the town by the ears for several days

This Is a Pippin

Pass the cigars to A. L. Snell, of the Imperial Theatre, Gadsden, Ala. He has dug up a universal stunt.

He hired four boy scouts and put one on the street and the others on the theatre and on the roof of the post office. All day long they wigwagged to each other and all day long someone would come up with "What message are you sending, sonny?" and the invariable reply would be "The Sheik is here."

Snell counted the first thousand inquirers and then stopped, but the boy who was on the sidewalk is confident that the total was a million at least.

Snell also bannered the interurban freight car, and 500 automobile stickers, and put the Paramount over to a 33 percent increase.

But you have boy scouts and you have a theatre. Try the wigwag.

Twirling Doorknobs

For "A Connecticut Yankee" at the New Theatre, Baltimore, a new form of doorknob was employed, cut to a diamond shape and hung by one of the points. Where possible these were hung so that they swung free, and the slightest breeze would cause them to twirl, giving emphasis to the text: "Fine. It's your turn to laugh." "A Connecticut Yankee" at the New Theatre.

These were put into place by men in armor and they attracted even more attention than the cards, though they did not stick in any one place as long.

Twelve thousand of these hangers were put out, and Baltimore was fully informed.

THIS CUT DOWN SIX SHEET LOOKS LIKE A PAINTING

Loew's State Theatre, Cleveland, wanted a strong center for a bookstore window and no painting was available. A cut down six sheet was framed and varnished and looked almost as good as a hand-painted oil

Trimmed a Six Sheet to Get His Painting

One of the large Cleveland book stores was willing to let in a picture of "The Sheik" when that Paramount production came to Loew's State Theatre, but it wanted a painting, and there were no paintings available.

But the manager was not going to let a little thing like that hurt a valuable chance. He cut down a six sheet, mounted it on beaver board to fit a frame, varnished it down, and you had to look closely at the work to see what it was. Set into a window surrounded with copies of the book, it made a strong sales factor.

The fact that it was not dated was a small item. The other advertising took care of the fact that "The Sheik" was playing at the State. All the manager was after was the book hook-up, and if he could not get the house name into the window, he figured that it would help none the less.

Advertising does not always have to be elemental. Sometimes it is better to create the impression that the store is hooking in of its own accord.

Keep this cutdown stunt in mind when you want a big window flash. It is a simple way of getting something larger than the 11x22 inch cards without having to pay too much for it.

Appeals to Local Pride

Something distinctly good has been worked out by I. Libson, of the Walnut Theatre, Cincinnati, in a local Hall of Fame. Mr. Libson is a First National exhibitor, but he displays in his lobby a group of pictures of stars whether they are First National players or not so long as they can be claimed as former residents of Cincinnati.

The list includes Marguerite Clark, Thomas H. Ince, Mack Sennett, Hobart Bosworth and Ben Turpin; all First Nationals, as well as Edythe Chapman, Theda Bara, Anna May, Herschel Mayall, Ray C. Smallwood and Carl Gantvoort.

He figures out that even if he exploits other than First National players he is still doing a good thing for the house by increasing the interest in the pictures and he is not letting narrow mindedness keep down his display.

Quadrupled Business on "Three Musketeers"

About the best exploitation record we have ever put down must be credited to C. W. Irvin, a student manager for Southern Enterprises at the Strand Theatre, Salisbury, N. C.

Irvin set out to sell "The Three Musketeers," and he sold to an increase of 300 per cent., doing four times his usual business. The front is only one of a number of features, but he credits it with doing the bulk of the selling because false fronts are new in the town. It is a bit crude in drawing, but it was brightly colored, and that gave it an attractiveness which forgave the faulty draughting.

It represents a billet in France; rather modern for the period play, but it brought the business, and that is the real answer.

Heralds were given out a month in advance of the showing, and slides were run for two weeks ahead. The Saturday before the Monday opening the second crop of heralds were dropped off the local skyscrapper at the noon hour.

Two interurban cars were bannered and a book store tie-up resulted in such a run on Dumas that the pleased dealer had to wire a rush order for more. A special orchestra was put in and 215 sheets of paper were posted in Salisbury and the feeder towns. A teaser campaign was started in the newspapers nine days in advance, to get ahead of the follow-ups and about three columns of write-ups were given.

Anyone can do advertising after a fashion. The trick is to do the sort of advertising that will bring the largest results for the least money. Don't pick on the first stunt that comes to your mind. Think up a lot, pick out the best and store the others away against the coming of some play you can use it to advantage on.

THIS HELPED TO BRING A 300 PER CENT. INCREASE

It must be good in a case like that. C. W. Irvin is a student manager for Southern Enterprises, at the Strand Theatre, Salisbury, N. C., but he is about ready to graduate with this increase on "The Three Musketeers"

Made a Novelty Auto a Griffith Ballyhoo

Keeping an eye out for opportunities brought a novelty perambulator to Phil Gersdorf, of the Arcade Theatre, Jacksonville, and helped to sell "Way Down East" to more money than any other picture had ever taken in on a seven-day run.

The car was one which had come from New York, and a small house had been built on a truck body, the travelers eating and sleeping in the constricted space. Of course the car won newspaper write-ups and Gersdorf promptly capitalized the local fame by putting on a banner filling the window with pictures and keeping it going around town for two days before the opening. He also got in on a football game and a local race meeting.

Five thousand doorknobs, cut to resemble pumpkins, were used for house to house work, and this tied up to the pumpkin reverse cuts used in all the newspaper work and the track cards. A thirty foot banner was hung on an unfinished building in the business section and in default of paintings, which had been held over for the Atlanta run, twelve insert frames were put out. Special stories were run daily, the most valuable being the account of a local photographer who had seen some of the scenes shot.

Much was made of the musical score and a production was staged. Before the opening it looked as though the advanced prices might hurt the run, but the opening day audiences went out and told the others and there was a steady climb, day by day, until the close, each day's receipts being larger than the preceding.

HOW "WAY DOWN EAST" WAS HOOKED TO A TOURING CAR

This was not specially built for the showing of the Griffith picture in Jacksonville, but Phil Gersdorf hooked up a car which had been run down from New York. All he needed was to put up the signs. The rest was ready built.

Children Worked Hard for Free Admissions

Two big stunts helped the Winter Garden, Seattle, put over the Robertson-Cole picture, "Where Lights Are Low." The best of these was a children's parade. The other was a sticker campaign.

The stickers were designed for windows and windshields. Marshal Foch was in town the Wednesday before the opening, and Jimmie Carrier, an R-C exploitation man, got hold of some unemployed Legion men and set them to work distributing the stickers. The boys wore their service uniforms and there were few storekeepers or auto owners who would refuse permission to a man in uniform to put up the pasters with Foch fanning the flames of patriotism.

The same men were employed Saturday night to doorknob the business district with the familiar "gone to see" hangers which remained up over Sunday.

THESE HARD WORKING YOUNGSTERS PUT OVER THE R-C "WHERE LIGHTS ARE LOW"

The Winter Garden, Seattle, hooked them up to the picture for a parade, let them see the show, then pulled them out to the athletic field where they paraded the gridiron before a big game before 25,000 persons present for the Penn State-Washington argument. Most of the rest of the work was done through the employment of unemployed American Legion men who doorknobed and pastered the business section

Century, Baltimore, Gets Wrong Values

Generally the Century Theatre, Baltimore, gets an excellent result in its advertising, but this 175 lines across four is not to be classed with its triumphs because it permits the cast, in a mortise, to overshadow the star and the play. Probably that looked like a splendid advertisement in the original drawing, but no one visualized how it would show in the newspapers, and as a result the appeal is lost. The title and star do not stand out clearly and the figure of the star is lost in the black of the background, because nothing has been done to bring it up. Probably the figure was a photograph, and it looked all right pasted to the copy, so the artist did not take the trouble to outline it. In the cut it has the same tone as the background and you see very little of it. It may be artistic, but it is not advertising. Mortising to get in the minor attraction is what spilled the beans, however, for the mortise is so much stronger than the rest of the area put together that the major announcement is faded. This will not look as badly in the reproduction as it did in the original newspaper display, for a good black and while will yield more nearly what the artist was aiming at and did not obtain in the paper. The Century is entitled to a fall down now and then because its work is so generally good, but we are surprised to see the artist fall into such an obvious trap as this.

Combination Display Put the Feature Over

The Butterfly Theatre, Milwaukee, is doing nice work with a combination of cuts and type. It does not flirt with hand lettering, but keeps its displays clear and readable. This for Bebe Daniels in "One Wild Week" is a good example. It is simply a reader for the production, so worded as to suggest the best angles of the story in a running appeal which carries the reader along from the signature to the underline. There is no excess of adjectives, nor sensation lines, but just a clear statement of the play which presents the idea in its most attractive guise. It runs 105 lines across six columns, but except for the added features it might have been set in half the space without seriously losing its appeal. The use of upper and lower case makes it possible to spread the appeal in 24 point type and have it read, while the title and star are in eight line gothic. Even the ears are in eighteen point and it is all about as easy to read as one could ask. The display is good, but the copy is the best thing in the advertisement because it makes you feel that here is a play you can get entertainment from. You read the text and you want to see the production. This style of advertisement is good only where the copy is smartly written. Unless you can sell through talking, it is better to stick to the press book phrases, but if you can write this sort of stuff, this style will win for you every time.

In the Cities

Blotters are not just small time stuff. The Circle Theatre, Washington, D. C., used them to advantage to put over Fairbanks in "The Three Musketeers," announcing the sale of reserved seats for this engagement and only one show in the evening. It even announced that seats would be sold at three points other than the theatre for the convenience of its patrons, which is something new in the cities.

Giant Football Sold Tickets to Ray Play

The Branford Theatre, Newark, used giant football cutouts for its two entrances to sell Charles Ray in "Two Minutes to Go" attaching smaller balls to get over the points of this First National production. The Branford, like most Newark houses, has to put over two features, as they do in a lot of the stick towns, but they gave most of the effort to Ray the week he was played there, because the story came in the heighth of the football season and was more timely than the other release.

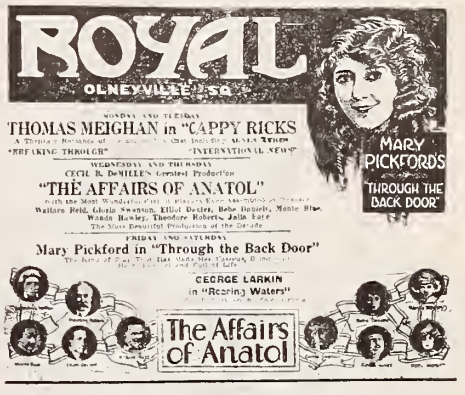
Lovett Still Holds to His Original Ad. Form

J. Fred Lovett, of the Royal Theatre, Providence, used to send his displays in every couple of months, but he has been out of the paper for about a year and he comes back apparently in response to a recent comment on the hand work most of the Providence theatres use. He still uses the same general form of advertisement, but he has increased his space a trifle,



A LOVETT DISPLAY

for the new examples are three fives, but he adheres to the same general style he has always used, though practise has made him more adept in handling his material. This display is a little larger than the average, a five and a half inch drop, but in this comparatively restricted space he sells two of the features of the season as well as two regular program features. The cut at the top announces Mary Pickford in

THE BRANFORD THEATRE, NEWARK, WITH LARGE CUTOUT FOOTBALLS FOR CHARLES RAY IN "TWO MINUTES TO GO"

Selling the Picture to the Public

"Through the Back Door" and below there are ten cuts for "The Affairs of Anatol." These cut down to dots in the reproduction, but in the display they are really pictures and not inkspots in spite of the fact that they are only half inch circles. Mr. Lovett, as you may remember, has a house in the suburbs and his advertisement runs on a page with local news of that section instead of on the dramatic page, with the result that he has no competition to fight. In spite of this, he gives careful attention to his layouts and gets a pretty display for four changes of bill, which is something of an accomplishment in that space. He seldom goes above an eighteen point and usually holds to a twelve as his largest size type, which is the reason he can get a real display for four changes in a five inch drop. He knows that it can be done through proportioning, and he has been doing this for years. He is doing something real when he can put it over the way he does and other Providence managers—who have more space at their disposal, might follow his lead with profit to themselves. Mr. Lovett knows how to use type. The others do not, apparently, and so resort to hand lettering to get their displays, and they lose a lot of advertising through this action. Mr. Lovett does better work in fifteen column inches than the others do in quarter and half pages.

Rowland and Clark Ads. Show the Type Mortise

Samuel Sivitz is holding to the type and hand work in his displays for the Rowland and Clark theatres in Pittsburgh, and he not only shows good lettering, but a capital italic which is used to mortise in. He is holding to the R & C crosslines, which we like very much indeed, and he has a generally good display. Just in passing, this space shows three very good plays for one circuit in one week. One thing you will notice about these Sivitz advertisements is that he does not duplicate the same style for two houses in a single issue. Each of the three spaces will offer a different treatment so that each has an individuality. Some artists might make all three more or less alike, but you will always find a difference in this trio of layouts so that each house stands out by itself. It is a small matter perhaps, but it does make a difference in the long run. It permits each attraction to make an individual appeal and does not throw out the three with the suggestion that you can take whichever you want. We think that Mr. Sivitz might cut in even more type in these displays, but that is more or less of an open question, and he is doing so well that perhaps it would be best to let well enough alone.

exceptional display to the title, which is made the chief centre of the space, all other lines being held subordinate. The stills are worked in nicely for attractors and in two instances extracts from the book are used for captions. The third, which reads, "Hordes of Arabs are Pursuing me" is almost funny in its cheapness and lack of real sense. It does not create the picture the writer probably intended, though it is backed up by a picture of the Arabs in motion and one at rest. The panel tells that everyone has either read the book or has wanted to and that now they can see it in picture form. It is not very convincing copy, but the title alone will put the play over and by letting the title have all the best of it, the remainder of the space is not important. Jazz copy would have worked better here than what has been used, but the advertisement sufficed to get over the play for another week or a prosperous run.

Benson Still Employs the Pocket Program

W. C. Benson, of the Laurier Theatre, Woonsocket, R. I., sends in a vest pocket program in response to our recent inquiry as to what had become of these valuable advertising adjuncts. Benson has been using them ever since they were invented, and he generally gets out a very good one. The sheet shown is 4½ by 5 inches, giving two pages, and he puts a four change program on this side with the front for the house and the back for talk and underline. He writes that he is still training the printer who did this work, for he recently had to change printers but that he hopes to have a better one to show presently. This is plenty good enough for a sample. If you are not using the vest pocket program, you are overlooking a good bet. They are small enough to go into a woman's handbag or a man's vest pocket, and they will be tucked away where a larger program, requiring to be folded, will be thrown down. They are inexpensive and cost so little that they can be used no matter what other forms of advertising are employed. Of late the vest pocket program appears to have been neglected, but it is too valuable a form to be forgotten. Revive the idea and give some pains to getting a good typographical display. Get a pretty face, even if you have to buy the type yourself. Don't accept whatever roman the printer happens to have on the machines. Insist upon a display face. Post Monotone in the eight and ten point sizes will work very well if you do not find anything you like better. Make them dainty and attractive and they will do you a lot of good.

More Capital Ideas in Shea Daily Small Ads.

Here are some more studies in how to get them over in small spaces. Five of these are the week's campaign for "The Sheik" and the others are for "Miss Lulu Bett." "The Sheik" was hooked-up and played simultaneously at the Hippodrome and the North Park, but the spaces are not increased because of the two houses. Mr. Franklin figures that if a certain space will put over a show at one house, it will do the same thing at two, so he runs the regular size. In "The Sheik" ads, that for Monday is at the bottom of the left hand column, with the moon and desert effect. The desert scene is very tiny, but it is good in its outlines, though the Arabs would shudder at the black camels, which are emblematical of death. The Thursday ad, just above, gives the book title with the Paramount line, "Half of Buffalo has read" and "All of Buffalo will see——" leading up to the book. On Wednesday the picture of Valentino carrying Miss Ayers is the chief appeal and the best selling display is that for Thursday, shown in the centre of the bottom line. This properly should have been the Monday ad since it tells most about the play, but Mr. Franklin figures that the Sunday ads will carry over the early part of the week and starts to jazz up on Thursday. Friday used the space in the upper left hand corner, with the dashing picture of the abduction; one of the best pieces of drawing these advertisements have shown. The Monday space for "Miss Lulu Bett" is not shown, but Tuesday's ad is in the lower right hand corner. This black panel is very effective. In the ring in the upper margin is "The play and book that made a sensation." The Wednesday advertisement we do not care for, the split color never works as well as a solid. Thursday the title is nicely displayed in the crescent and on Friday the same design is used, but with the featured players effectively sketched into the band. The spaces range from 28 to 41 lines, the larger ads being used on Monday, Thursday and Friday. These would make excellent displays in larges spaces, but they are remarkable when their size is considered, for with one exception they give a strong display in a very limited space.

Sold on a Circle to Excellent Advantage

This one hundred lines across two columns from the Pastime Theatre, Columbus, Ohio, works because a circle is set out in the black to get over the real message of the display. All of that white on black lettering is merely using the space for something. The real service the black performs it to throw into high relief the circle in which the selling point is well set forth in real type. Probably the house was not trying to sell the Vitagraph star in "The Inner Chamber." If it was, it did not do this but it did sell tickets on the angle of the play announced in the small space and the rest of the advertisement served to give prominence to this circle through contrast. From the manner in which it was handled, we think that the house was aiming at precisely the result it achieved, figuring that the play would sell better than the title and so giving it all to the type phrases, which read: "How did it happen? Claire Ronson, the bride of an hour, entered the room where her wedding presents were displayed and found the place in disorder. Her husband, unconscious, was stretched upon the floor." Naturally you want to go to the play to see whether it was hooch, a highwayman or something else which had had this effect upon the husband. The sketch at the bottom is almost indistinct, but it gives some suggestion of the main situation. We think that this was reduced from a much larger original. It looked all right in the drawing, but it did not reduce well. Note the little touch whereby the arrowhead points from the copy to the scene. That arrow helps to save the space. If you can't make out the picture, you know what it is, so it is almost as good as though you could see it, but we think that the artist would do well to give a little more care to his drawings. By properly laying out the white it is possible to get a better display effect. Here the cut serves as an illustrator but not as an attractor. More clearly shown it would have served both ends, and this without giving too much white to the black space.

THE CIRCLE SELLS

—P. T. A.—

Likes Type Displays Because They Attract

Elmer A. Lohmaire, publicity man of the Rialto Theatre, Rochester, N. Y., sends in one of his displays for comment, explaining that he uses type because he believes it easier to read than drawn displays. He does not mean exactly that, to judge by the sample sent, for his letter suggests the absence of other attractors than the type faces while as a matter of fact he makes shape replace drawing as the attention winner. In the sample we reproduce he uses the star cut of Miss Swanson in "The Great Moment" as well as the figure cut, setting it right into the type. Then he sets his text in a triangle formed of three point rule with ears at the apex of the pyramid. This is a good elementary device, safe and reasonably certain. The triangle gives the white space value and the form is odd and therefore adds to the pull of the white space. It does not make as pretty a display as one in which the cuts are so disposed as to give the value of drawn work. Some really artistic work can be had from cuts alone, without a penny spent on art work. Some of the samples we have shown from Nelson B. Bell prove what can be done with cuts and rule alike. But Bell has the advantage of working with printers who will carry out his ideas. Mr. Lohmaire perhaps has reason to distrust the results he might obtain from an effort to get artistic work and so plays safe. He is reasonably certain to come through with a design such as this where an effect to place the cuts to better advantage might result in a jumble of types. If this is the case he is wise in sticking to geometrical forms. He gets a by no means unpleasing result, and something that is infinitely superior to the average drawn work. There is a lot of type in this 135 lines by three, but the essentials are played up so that they get over without requiring the rest of the type to be read. He announces Gloria Swanson, Elinor Glyn and the play. If you are interested you read further. It is a combined reading and display advertisement of good style and reasonably large display.

Saving Space Bills

H. E. Jameyson, of the Lyric and Doric Theatres, Kansas City, in sending in a campaign, remarks: "Ordinarily I use considerably more space on a picture of this grade, but this time I tried to make my copy do the selling instead of using extra space. Got to cut somewhere." That's a whole chapter in the book on selling. Get your copy right and you will not need to take so much space. Get some convincing argument and you have to spend less with the papers. It's better for the boss, and in the long run it's better for you. Anyone can make a splash in a half page, but to make an eighth sell as much means something besides the saving in space bills, because mere space alone does not sell. It's what you say in that space.

Consensus of Published Reviews

Here are extracts from news available at press hour from publications of the industry boiled down to a sentence. They present the views of Moving Picture World (M.P.W.); Exhibitors' Herald (E.H.); Motion Picture News (N.); Exhibitors' Trade Review (T.R.); Wid's (W.).

The Little Minister

(Betty Compson—Paramount—6,031 Feet)

M. P. W.—"The Little Minister" is another masterpiece in a season of masterpieces. It embraces all the qualities that go for the heights of effective motion picture achievement.

T. R.—Perhaps few masterpieces have been given the wonderful feeling that has been attained in this picture. It is not at all difficult to discern the hand of a real artist in the direction.

N.—Quaint and charming picture made from Barrie's play. It is a picture which is compact with human touches—which is embroidered with charming detail of Babbie's charm.

E. H.—There can be nothing but the highest praise for Penrhyn Stanlaw's production of "The Little Minister." As a type of the best in pictures, this production is a good example.

W.—The artistic hand of the producer is obvious throughout the picture, and the quaint charm of the Barrie novel is delightfully presented.

The Little Minister

(Alice Calhoun—Vitagraph—6 Reels)

M. P. W.—Vitagraph offers charming production of Barrie's famous story.

T. R.—Practically every essential of good photodrama is in "The Little Minister."

N.—Excellent production made from Barrie's classic.

W.—A pleasing though not extravagant production of Barrie's novel. Has much simplicity and natural charm to recommend it.

E. H.—One of the best pictures yet produced in Vitagraph studios is "The Little Minister," with Alice Calhoun in the part of "Lady Babbie."

Jackie

(Shirley Mason—Fox—4,943 Feet)

M. P. W.—Shirley Mason is attractively cast as dancer.

T. R.—There is a wealth of human pathos in this picture.

W.—Story weak but star pleasing as usual.

E. H.—Is an English story, conventional in plot, but intensely human and possessing considerable sympathetic appeal.

N.—Light story suitable for star.

Eden and Return

(Doris May—Robertson Cole—4,600 Feet)

M. P. W.—"Eden and Return" offers light frivolous entertainment of rather indefinite character.

T. R.—Here's a most acceptable offering from an amusement standpoint.

W.—Doris May's second starring vehicle disappoints.

N.—Frail little comedy has some amusing moments.

E. H.—A comedy-drama which proves fair entertainment. The vivaciousness of the star is the outstanding feature.

Fifty Candles

(Featured Cast—Hodkinson—5,600 Feet)

M. P. W.—High tension in Irvin V. Willat's mystery drama is one of its many excellent characters.

N.—Mystery melodrama teeming with suspense.

E. H.—Murder mystery pictures are few enough nowadays to make Irvin V. Willat's production, "Fifty Candles," rather a welcome attraction.

All for a Woman

(Featured Cast—First National—5,873 Feet)

M. P. W.—Foreign made film with the French Revolution as a background is packed with powerful drama.

W.—Depends entirely upon clientele you cater to.

E. H.—An impressive presentation with hordes of people and many good scenes, well acted by characters who play strong parts.

The New Disciple

(Featured Cast—Federation Producers—7 Reels)

M. P. W.—"The New Disciple" as presented at the Lyric Theatre, N. Y., is liable to disappoint many patrons.

N.—Capital versus labor story is well acted.

W.—Industrial problems outweigh story and drama.

Pardon My French

(Vivian Martin—Goldwyn—5,500 Feet)

M. P. W.—In "Pardon My French," an accumulation of talent has accomplished much with an almost hopeless task.

T. R.—There are some amusing moments in "Pardon My French," which starts off in promising fashion but fails to convince as the story develops.

W.—Irvin S. Cobb's titles help put over farce comedy.

E. H.—A light, little farce-comedy offers fair entertainment.

Rent Free

(Wallace Reid—Paramount—4,661 Feet)

M. P. W.—This picture provides comedy of the sort easiest to follow.

T. R.—Romance and comedy are agreeably intermingled in this picture.

N.—Snug little comedy-romance with Wallace Reid.

W.—Latter reels amusing but gets off to slow start.

The Guttersnipe

(Gladys Walton—Universal—4,225 Feet)

M. P. W.—Universal production, starring Gladys Walton, combines satire with melodrama.

W.—Story a bit weak in Gladys Walton's latest. Star will please but more laughs are needed.

N.—Cinderella theme and local color offer adequate entertainment in Gladys Walton's latest.

T. R.—Here's one from Universal that is really an entertaining offering and nothing else.

Trailin'

(Tom Mix—Fox—4,355 Feet)

M. P. W.—"Trailin'," the Fox production, starring Tom Mix, has a rather more intricate plot than the usual "Western" and its entertainment value is enhanced thereby.

E. H.—In "Trailin'" Tom Mix has the opportunity to use all his wares of Western stuff which he does in a manner that commands attention.

W.—Some good action but not a coherent story.

N.—Mix in a complicated story filled with typical action.

T. R.—One of the best Mr. Mix has appeared in.

The Roof Tree

(William Russell—Fox—4,409 Feet)

M. P. W.—Melodrama with William Russell has strong sentimental strain.

T. R.—This romantic tale, like the people it pictures, is simple and human.

W.—It will appeal to admirers of Westerns.

N.—A slight variation of feud story; fairly pleasing.

Desert Blossoms

(William Russell—Fox—4,500 Feet)

M. P. W.—Likable role of the typical American hero assigned to William Russell.

W.—Weak story hampers production and offers mild entertainment.

E. H.—An absorbing story, well told against a background of immense bridges and dams in the course of construction.

N.—Familiar but absorbing picture with several thrills.

Shams of Society

(Featured Cast—Robertson-Cole—6 Reels)

M. P. W.—The story is a variation of the neglected wife theme.

N.—Neglected wife formula burdened with irrelevant detail.

E. H.—Another version of the neglected wife theme with an attempt to put over a moral.

T. R.—Achieves the unusual feat of driving home a strong moral lesson and at the same time providing admirable entertainment.

W.—Old theme might have been made attractive by better direction.

Playthings of Destiny

(Anita Stewart—First National—6,200 Feet)

M. P. W.—The subject is primarily a woman's problem, handled with understanding.

E. H.—Falls short of former Stewart productions in plausibility and interest.

T. R.—Here is a picture that will go over with a not-too-discriminating audience.

N.—Unconvincing story of domestic complications.

My Boy

(Jackie Coogan—First National—4,967 Feet)

M. P. W.—Jackie Coogan wins his way.

T. R.—That the picture will win widespread popularity cannot be doubted. Its appeal hits young and old alike.

E. H.—Good entertainment with heart interest simply and unaffectedly played and never carried to the point of exaggeration.

N.—Correct appraisal of "My Boy" presents difficulties. A great deal depends on how solid the young Mr. Coogan has been sold with the fans, how far the "cute kid" stuff will carry him and whether or not people expect him to live up to the reputation he established in "The Kid."

W.—Jackie Coogan offers fine entertainment in "My Boy."

"Hail the Woman"

Fine Audience Picture Produced by Thomas H. Ince and Released by First National

Reviewed by Fritz Tidden.

"Hail the Woman" is built upon a theme that reaches in and grips both the mind and the heart and therefore the continuous attention of the average moving picture theatregoer. This theme is superbly interpreted in every department of production. And it is an argument—mind you, not a preachment nor a sermon—against one of the vital problems of the day: that of the double standard of morality. All of which presages an "audience picture" of sure fire proportions. Then there is the added box office advantage of the Thomas H. Ince trade mark and a "magnetic" cast.

The picture is a sound example of good idea of "giving 'em what they want." It is safe to say an exhibitor will display good showmanship. It thoroughly embodies the his clientele.

Written by C. Gardiner Sullivan, the story presents a vitally human document. It is interpreted by a cast that performs brilliant work individually and perfect team play collectively, which guarantees tremendous effectiveness. And even amid the excellent work of all of the other players, Theodore Roberts stands out, giving an inspired performance that will rank among the finest pieces of character work that has ever been screened. It is acting art of the highest possible type.

The direction, done by John Griffith Wray and supervised by Mr. Ince, enhances to the full extent the dramatic power and the humanness of the story, not to mention increasing its universal appeal. There are times when the tempo seems to be slightly retarded but this fault is always relieved immediately after it has happened. There has been created an atmosphere that is not only seen but felt. The continuity could not be improved upon.

Story and Scenario by C. Gardiner Sullivan
Directed by John Griffith Wray, and Supervised by Thomas H. Ince
Length, 7,222 feet

The Story

The story deals with Oliver Beresford, a grim and bigoted New England farmer, whose uncompromising creed, "Men and their sons first," disposes harshly of woman's destiny. Beresford's son, David, who is studying for the ministry, secretly marries Nan, stepdaughter of the village odd-jobs man, and their union is about to be blessed with a child. The elder Beresford learns of Nan's condition, and of his son's responsibility. True to her promise to her weak husband, who stands in fear of his father, Nan does not announce that she is David's wife. The elder Beresford buys off the brutal odd-jobs man, and Nan is driven from home. She goes to New York, where her child is born, and where she falls into a life of shame, through want and poverty. Her husband, David, maintains a cringing silence.

Judith Beresford, beautiful daughter of the intolerant Puritan, takes Nan's part, and is likewise driven from home through a combination of circumstances. She meets Nan in New York, and when Nan dies, takes care of the child. Before she dies, Nan tells Judith of her marriage to David. Time passes, and Judith decides that her brother shall clear Nan's memory and name, and recognize his child. She and the child arrive in the old New England home on the day that David is to be ordained a missionary to foreign lands. As he stands before the congregation, Judith confronts him with his child. Overcome with remorse, he confesses his sin and recognizes his child.

Exploitation Angles: Sell this on the appeal of the story, giving the opening events and asking the reader's opinion of how it should turn out. Play up the story as an Ince production, and make a strong appeal to women through the title. This latter will help to a hook-up page very nicely.

"The Beauty Contest"

Second of the series of two-reel comedies distributed by Pathe, and based on Harris Dickson's magazine stories of the Southern darkies, this offering is even more humorous than the first one, "The Custard Nine." It has a real plot entertainingly told, the cast is composed entirely of negroes and the sub-titles which are in the dialect of the Southern negro are quaint and humorous. The production will get many laughs, is different from the ordinary run of comedies, and from a standpoint of novelty if nothing else should please the average audience. The story deals with a beauty contest in Darktown which ends by one of the partners stuffing the ballot box with disastrous results.—C. S. S.

"Fur Coats and Pants"

This one-reel Century Comedy does not end, in the accepted meaning of the term. It just stops. There is less of a plot than is usual even in this type of entertainment, and the progress of the footage is marked with a succession of what might be called illustrated gags, some of which are laughable. It has many ingenious comedy situations that are positive mirth provokers, but there are some incidents that will leave most people cold. (Universal.) F. T.

"Sherlock Holmes"

Alexander Film Corporation Has Most Entertaining Two-Reel Detective Series Ever Offered.

Reviewed by Roger Ferri.

The day of the short subject is rapidly approaching, but it is just such a splendid entertaining series of two-reelers as the Stolls of England has developed on the famous Sir A. Conon Doyle Sherlock Holmes detective stories that is popularizing the short length production. If a more excitingly interesting series has been offered the writer has never had the pleasure of viewing it. But the fact remains that there is enough mystery, romance and adventure crowded in one of these fifteen two-reelers to complete a five-reel feature. In fact, this series brings to the screen a character with which every man, woman and child is acquainted and what is more it is splendidly produced, acted and scenically set. The lighting is the best that has been noted in an English production.

This writer had the good fortunte of viewing three episodes, "The Resident Patient," "The Dying Detective" and "The Devil's Foot." Each story is complete in itself. These stories are not a type audience sort; on the contrary, they should make as strong an appeal to the Broadway element as it will to the Houlton, Maine, folks. Any exhibitor seeking a sure-fire program builder cannot afford to overlook this series, for with the proper exploitation it should prove one of the greatest investment offered the enterprising showman by a State Rights distributor.

Eille Norwood as Sherlock Holmes is natural. Although his is a more trying role and one that has a tendency of being overacted, Mr. Norwood, through care, gives the part a realism that is at all times evident. He is easy-going, mysterious and human. Hubert Willis as Watson is entertaining and makes a good companion for the great detective. The supporting cast in every picture the writer saw did consistently good work. The direction by Maurice Elvey is flawless and productive of meritorious results.

Stoll can point to this series with pride, for it has contributed a subject that has long been wanted. Certainly, the series constitutes good, clean, wholesome and box office entertainment—box office entertainment because once your patron sees one of the Sherlock Holmes story he will want to see the others. Not one foot of film is wasted in presentation, for the story starts with the first flicker and continues in every case without a flaw or setback until the very last 2,000 feet has been reflected on the silver sheet.

In conclusion, if the remaining 12 stories of the Sherlock Holmes series are as entertainingly mysterious as "The Dying Detective," "The Devil's Foot" and "The Resident Patient," State Rights buyers and exhibitors in general are indeed in for a happier and wealthier New Year.

"Suspicious Wives"

A State Right Picture With a Plot That Holds the Interest to the Very End.

Reviewed by T. S. da Ponte.

"Suspicious Wives" has a plot that will keep the spectators undecided as to the final outcome up to the last few feet of the very last reel. But when all is said and done it is very evident that the tangle that is unwound to make the story could easily have been explained away at the very beginning. However, if that had been the case there would have been no necessity for the unwinding of the film drama, and therefore none of the merry clink of coin going over the box-office counter.

Nevertheless the picture will please the vast majority of fans who do not delve too deeply into the whys and wherefores, for it is good entertainment. Besides there are some beautiful sets that will carry a large appeal. Among them are "shots" of a magnificent estate, and views of a fashionable feast that is bound to make for good word-of-mouth advertising among the feminine contingent.

The cast is good in toto and individually. Each member carries off his or her part in the way it should be done. There is no overplaying any one role, and on the other hand every characterization is made the most of. A word should be said for one of the sub-titles especially, which will get a laugh from any body of spectators. Molly King is the star and adds facial attractiveness to her capable acting.

H. E. Herbert is the leading man and he deserves praise second only to that of the principal character.

The Cast

Molly Fairfax.....Mollie King
James Brunton, Jr.....H. E. Herbert
Helen Warren.....Ethel Grey Terry
Bob Standing.....Rod LaRocque
The old woman.....Gertrude Berkeley
The old man.....Frank DeCamp
James Brunton, Sr.....Warren Cook

From the Story by Robert F. Roden.
Directed by John M. Stahl.

The Story

James Brunton's wife, Molly, believing she has found her husband to be unfaithful, leaves him without asking an explanation. The "other woman," however, is Brunton's sister-in-law, whom he is supporting. In his search for his wife Brunton is hurt and temporarily blinded in an automobile accident. He is carried to the very house in which his wife has secreted herself. She nurses him back to health without his recognizing her until, when his sight is restored the sister-in-law appears on the scene, an explanation is made, and Brunton and his wife are reconciled.

Exploitation Angles: Play strong on the title angle, and appeal to all wives. They are most all suspicious and will respond to the appeal. A good teaser would be: "Do you know everything your husband does—and why he does it?"

"Lose No Time"

One of the liveliest of the single reel comedies featuring Snub Pollard, and distributed by Pathe, this fun-reel is aptly titled, as no time is lost between the series of laugh-provoking incidents. There is something doing all of the time. The story shows Snub employed in an office. The boss is to dine with him and wants a little "nip," Snub goes home and proceeds to drop the precious bottle. Then begins a wild chase for another one, which, when procured, meets with like disaster. Wifey comes to the rescue, and all is hunky dory with Snub guarding the valuable liquid with a shot gun when word comes that the boss cannot come. This is one of the best of the Hal Roach comedies and should please almost any audience.—C. S. S.

"Across the Deadline"

Super-Fine Cast in Universal Feature Which Stars Frank Mayo.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

For pictorial purposes, the middle of the street in a Western town, may serve effectively as the hard line between right and wrong, the churchs on one side, the saloons on the other. Getting down to facts, however, the metaphor seems a bit far-fetched, when it is to unnaturally emphasized that wickedness cleaves to one side of the curb, and righteousness to the other, and one cannot cross without being defiled or reformed. This, however, has no important bearing on the story of "Across the Deadline," except to give it a "different" start, and to furnish a title. The action has a spring and carries one along, entertainingly. There are some good climaxes, some attractive outdoor sets, including in particular, the waterfall, and there is a pleasing love story.

The cast boasts of some exceptionally qualified actors, including Wilfred Lucas, excellent as the gambling-house king, and Russell Simpson, who as the self-righteous, intolerant brother lends atmosphere to the entire picture. Joesph Swickard utilizes his vivid imagination to fine advantage as old Abel. The two leading roles are in the capable hands of Frank Mayo and Molly Malone. Some of their best work suffers an anti-climax, however, when the long, bookish sub-stitles are flashed on the screen, especially at dramatic moments, when the words should be short and direct.

The Story

Gilead, Northern lumber town, has a line through its center. On one side lives Enoch Kidder, his son John and the rest of his puritanical family. One the other are Aaron Kidder, Enoch's vengeful brother, and his followers in pleasure and lust. An old fued culminates when Aaron tries to lure John, a clean cut youth, over into the bad side of town, to revenge himself on Enoch. A strange girl who has lost her memory furnishes the excuse for leading John into the dance halls and saloons. She is kidnapped and held by Aaron, and John, determined to protect her, fellows. What happens afterward brings the old family fued to an end by the only method possible, the death of one of the brothers, while John succeeds in his attempt to bring the girl's lost memory back to her.

"Try Try Again"

There is considerable knockabout humor in this single reel Hal Roach comedy. The cast includes Sunshine Sammy, Ethel Broadhurst, Paul Parrott, George Rowe and Mark Jones. The story hinges on the fact that a loan shark demands money from the girl's father who seeks to get the required amount by having the girl entered in a beauty contest. The usual amount of comedy difficulties and mishaps ensue, but finally the portrait is secured and all ends happily. There are several laughs and some good stunts.—C. S. S.

"First Love"

Youthful Love Affair Treated With a Laugh and a Tear in Feature Starring Constance Binney.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

A love story in minature, a "puppy" version of its risks, its foolish sacrifices, its enthusiams, pictured charmingly without too much seriousness, is found in this Realart feature. True, it has very serious, very tragic moments, such as the incident of Kathleen's discovery that her sweetheart has presented her with a fake diamond, and such moments draw their full quota of sympathy, but do not in the long run, overshadow the fact that the whole affair is too immature and too imaginative to grow concerned over.

The character of the undeserving lover has been cleverly drawn and directed. A too familiar type, with his untiring line, "Honest, Kid, you're the only girl I ever loved," he ambles through the scenes, an amusing, disgusting, pitiable figure, while his trustful sweetheart turns over her factory earnings to him that he may "buy books." Charmingly played by Constance Binney, this role is one that will meet with universal appreciation. The moment of her complete disillusionment has been expertly handled, both by the star and the director, and when, as a waitress, she discovers her sweetheart buying a dinner for another girl and hears his soft flattery, her clawing revenge has not been exaggerated. It comes as an effective blow after her weeks of sacrifice and devotion. It brings both a thrill and a laugh. If the nature of the theme is sufficiently publicized, "First Love" should prove a decided success.

The Story

Kathleen O'Donnell falls in love with Harry Stanton, a young cab driver, who tells her that he is studying medicine. Her father, unimpressed by the young man's personality, refuses to let her entertain him at home. She gets a room outside and anxious to be of assistance to Harry in buying books, gives him all the money that she can spare. He spends it on other girls. The owner of the factory, realizing her folly, and being in love with her, himself, tries to warn her. She resents this, and gets a job in a restaurant. "The Love Charm"

Wanda Hawley Perfectly Suited to Her Role in Lively Comedy-Drama, Made by Realart.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Especially adapted to exploiting the personality of the star, Wanda Hawley, "The Love Charm" is a light, vivacious treatment of a sentimental theme, with broad comedy touches. It has the effect of having been somewhat hastily put together, as if situation had been piled upon situation for the sake of getting a punch or a laugh, without devoting sufficient care or time to the process of cementing these together. There is something consistent about the production, in this respect, however, as a certain non-fixed, uneven quality of the star's performance is evident, as perhaps never before. The rapidity with which she makes the transition from a quiet country dressmaker to a vamp is not altogether convincing and the scene of the staged debauchery, even though it is a game, is rather long and borders on the vulgar.

The picture's best recommendation is that it keeps going. There is enough happening all the time, enough excitement and burlesque to keep the spectator constantly stimulated, forgetting, in all probability, what he has just seen, in the events immediately before his eyes. There is a good twist at the end when the weak brother suddenly asserts himself and in his selfish intent to claim his own girl, straightens out his brother's love affair as well.

The Story

Ruth Sheldon, arriving in a small town, is put into immediate service by her designing aunt and cousin who use her as housekeeper, cook and dressmaker all at once. She surprises them however when the town's best catch, Mr. Morgan, takes an interest in her. Her cousin, enraged, claims him as her own special property and Ruth promises to give him up. She pretends to be a frivolous, cheap type of girl and stages an obstreporous dancing party so as to shock him. She does shock him, but instead of his turning against her, he decides to shake it all out of her, and incidently to become a little more modern himself. Her cousin decides that she is too much in love with Morgan's half-brother to bother any more with Morgan, and it ends satisfactorily for all.

"The Lonely Trail"

Has the Distinction of Being the Worst Picture That Has Screened Itself This Way in Years.

Reviewed by Fritz Tidden.

During the recent Stillman case, which the daily newspapers ably assisted to undue prominence of tremendous proportions, the name of an Indian guide, Fred K. Beauvais, figured rather conspicuously. In many of the published reports of the proceedings in court and the human interest stuff written outside about the principals, there frequently appeared stories concerning the high ideals embraced by Beauvias, the pathfinder. It was not noticed that one of the high ideals included the appearance in a moving picture on the sole recommendation that he was Exhibit A in the sensational case.

Well then, this exhibit for the time being forgot his high ideals and either offered himself or was persuaded to appear as the star of "The Lonely Trail," which turned out to be so poor that it is ludicrous. He trotted out of the Canadian woods to go on parade, his only claim to fame being his notoriety. It is an insult to the real stars of the screen, and it also makes the screen the repository of sensationalism that it does not want. There is no place for it in the industry and reputable exhibitors do not want it. They do not care to capitalize in a small way on the parade of the chief figure in the quarrels of a family whose dirty linen was washed in too full view of the public.

It is not necessary to go into details concerning the many causes that go to make the picture the uninteresting thing it is. It will not hold the attention after the first few feet of even those who might be drawn into a theatre out of morbid curiosity to see the notorious guide. It commits the crime of killing moving picture entertainment. It is dull. It also shows the Indian guide as a close-eyed, adam-appled, uninteresting character. The supporting cast is awful.

Back to the woods, Beauvais, and take the film with you.

"One Stormy Knight"

More than usual entertainment is afforded by this two-reel Christie Comedy released by Educational. Though it deals with the time-honored story of a husband who won't "mind" his wife and steals off to a boxing match, and a wife who follows in male attire, the development of the plot is somewhat unusual. Some of the best comedy touches center around the "squared circle." The fun waxes hilarious when wifie, mistaken for a boy, is unceremoniously dragged into a stag party and there discovered by hubby. The players are Dorothy Devore, Bobby Vernon, Earl Rodney and Jay Belasco. Harold Beaudine directed and Al Christie supervised. The action is broadly burlesqued.—S. S.

"Westward Whoa"

Under an intriguing title, Universal releases a Star Comedy that is built upon a real idea and is not merely a succession of illustrated gags, which is a rarity for one-reelers. And not only that but the idea is cleverly worked out with amusing comedy situations that will provoke laughter in any type of house that needs a thousand foot subject to complete its program. The plot has to do with the difficulties and final failure in attempting to make a transcontinental tour in a Ford. There are no Ford Jokes in it, which is another mark of originality. "Shadows of the Sea"

Adventuresome Story of the Sea Has Many Thrills—Made by Selznick and Starring Conway Tearle.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Anyone with a liking for the picture of adventure, and particularly when the sea is its setting will find thrill after thrill in this feature. There is something unusually realistic about the atmosphere, unusually compelling about the action that gives the picture a rating decidedly above the average. An understanding of what is truly romantic and picturesque is evident in the story, the settings and the characters as presented. This is one of the rare examples of the type of picture that can be a success with scarcely any comedy relief. There is only one touch of humor—that of the drunken "heavy" reeling on deck—and this has been aptly placed to interrupt the most tense scene of all.

Conway Tearle fans will have a chance for hero-worship that excels almost anything offered by this star's previous achievements. He has a swiftness and force that is electrical and his inclination to be theatrical at times is not out of place in the impersonation of the soldier of fortune who stands out as a character who has deliberately mapped out his life to be different from the rest. The scenes of the warfare on the cliffs, and the attacks of the guard officers have been directed with skill and good pictorial effect, and the photography is excellent. Doris Kenyon has a dramatic scene on the ship which she does spiritedly and successfully.

The Story

Captain Carson is a gentleman adventurer who rescues an old derelict from a den in Hong Kong and makes a man of him, as well as a sailor. In sailing for California he escapes the government officers who are on his trail because he has broken certain maritime regulations. Upon landing, he comes up to the residence of Dr. Jordan and finds Jordan's wife in the arms of Dean, her husband's assistant. Carson is wounded by an officer and obliged to remain at the Jordan residence. In the events which follow, Jordan is killed and Carson takes Mrs. Jordan and Dean on board his ship, and despising both, tries to make their lives wretched by forcing them to see too much of each other. The tables turn and he finds himself in love with the girl and Dean proves himself to be a scoundrel.

"Don't Get Personal"

Marie Prevost Star of An Attractive Light Comedy Distributed by Universal.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

Of the type of light entertaining comedy with which this new Universal star is rapidly becoming identified and on which she is building a following is "Don't Get Personal," starring Marie Prevost. It is one of these inconsequential stories that is not to be taken seriously, but which shows the star to advantage as a comedienne of ability, though it does not show her in the abbreviated bathing togs of yore, but her garb as a modern young lady of fashion does not conceal all of her charms.

There are a number of amusing situations that brought forth laughs from an audience at the Central Theatre, New York. While it is straight comedy most of the time, some of the situations develop into farce comedy. The photography is good, the production and settings up to the requirements, and the star has been surrounded by an adequate cast, headed by T. Roy Barnes, who enters well into the spirit of the story. Another excellent characterization is given by Roy Atwell, while Del Lorice is all that can be described as the vamp. And we must not forget the big dog, Teddy, who is responsible for a lot of things in the picture. As with several recent Universal films, the connection between the title and the story is rather hazy.

The Story

Father, wishing daughter Patricia, a chorus girl, to get away from the atmosphere of the bright lights, sends her to visit an old-time friend in a straight-laced small town. She does not start out to shock anybody, but instead, finds her time taken up in trying to straighten out the love affair of one of her new friends, matching her wits against those of a vamp, being misunderstood by everybody concerned, but, with the assistance of, and in spite of, her big pet dog, Teddy, finally winning the undying love of the town's shining light and most talented young lawyer.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines:

Dainty Marie Prevost, in a Bright and Entertaining Comedy Filled With Laughable Situations.

"Shipwrecked Among Animals"

This two-reel Century Comedy, featuring Harry Sweet, is stated to be (on the main title) a burlesque of Universal's "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals." The satire is a little far fetched but it is quite funny on its own accord. Also the producers disclose a recent reading of Capt. Walter Traprock's famous South Sea travel book, "The Cruise of the Kawa." There are numerous laughs throughout the progress of the picture, some of which are new comedy creations and some are variations upon old themes.

"Gleam O' Dawn"

Fox Introduces Unusually Promising Star in John Gilbert

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

More restrained and more finely grained than the average out-door feature, "Gleam O' Dawn" will have a less limited appeal than others of its type. This superiority is due, in great part, to the presence of a new star, John Gilbert, who maintains the strength but not the roughness of the usual Western hero, with the pleasant conviction, apparently, that a smile is sometimes as forceful as a gun. As a result, he shows promise of being a favorite with both women and men.

A romantic figure from nowhere, he makes his appearance with considerable bravado in the home of an artist in the Canadian woods and discovers later that his host is none other than his own father who deserted his mother years ago. The fight between honor and love (because of his affection for the artist's ward) is a difficult one, and because of its suppression, offers a good chance for acting. Pierre, the unhappy old fiddler, adds a minor note of suffering, as interpreted by Wilson Hummel. Barbara Bedford is appealing and real as Nini and the entire production has been well directed.

The Story

Silas Huntworth, an artist in the Canadian woods has adopted Nini and one day when they are surprised by the appearance of two trouble-makers who are trying to cheat him out of his property, a stranger, Gleam O' Dawn, shows up and protects them. Pierre, the demented fiddler of the community is interested in the stranger and discovers that he is the son of Huntworth and the woman whom Pierre formerly loved. Huntworth had deserted her and Pierre tells the story to O' Dawn, spurring him on to revenge. "The Playhouse"

This two-reel Buster Keaton comedy provides continuous and hilarious laughter throughout its entire length. Keaton himself was never funnier and he practically solely interprets a "script" that contains a generous amount of ingeniously contrived comedy situations and stunts and a wealth of fun that springs from more natural sources.

One of the most amusing instances among the many is the groups of scenes wherein Keaton is literally the whole show, the entire audience, the large crew of stage hands and a big orchestra. This is done by some extremely clever double and sometimes more exposure work, with its accompanying expert masking. Keaton is seen dancing with himself in a two-man team, giving himself directions in setting up a scene or ringing up the curtain, leading an orchestra of eight or ten with himself playing the various pieces and talking to himself in numerous duo box parties. And other original ideas are equally funny. (First National) F. T.

"Just Around the Corner"

Cosmopolitan - Paramount Feature Is Sympathetic Study of East Side Family.

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

"Just Around the Corner" is human drama, a warm, sympathetic study of the home life of an East Side family. Adapted by Frances Marion from Fannie Hurst's story about New York, and also directed by Miss Marion, its slight plot has been deftly stretched into a Cosmopolitan Production of feature length, with few obvious evidences of "padding." The picture has hardly a trace of melodrama, though several of the situations give promise of it, depending for its appeal upon characterization and heart interest rather than action. It succeeds in reaching the heart through its excellent acting, even continuity and faithful portrayal of typical incidents in the lives of poor people.

The mother whose chief concern is that her daughter be happily married, is very effectively acted by Margaret Seddon. She holds the center of the stage. Edward Phillips is at times delightfully funny and always convincingly real as a type of theatre ticket speculator to be avoided. Lewis Sargent makes Jimmie Birdsong a warmhearted and likeable boy. Some of his work in this role touches the heights, but in a couple of emotional scenes he over-acts. Sigrid Holmquist, the "Swedish Mary Pickford," is satisfactory in her first American characterization as Essie Birdsong, the girl sweetheart of the unscrupulous speculator. She certainly screens well. The other players are well cast.

The Story

Ma Birdsong, her son Jimmie, a messenger boy, and her daughter Essie live together on the East Side. The girl becomes fascinated by the night life and falls in love with Joe Ullman, a crooked ticket speculator. Her mother's health begins to fail and she asks to see her daughter's sweetheart. Again and again the crook promises to visit the Birdsong home, but each time breaks his promise. Ma Birdsong has a sudden relapse and is dying when Essie quits Ullman and persuades a stranger to pose as her fiance. Her mother dies happy in the thought Essie is to marry a real man. Later Essie does marry him.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines:

A Picturization of Fannie Hurst's Story About New York's East Side; A Drama of Mother Love and A Girl Betrothed To A Gambler.

Do You ever test The Sincerity of Your Sweetheart? "Just Around the Corner," A Drama of Mother Love, Shows One Way It May be Done

Exploitation Angles: Play up the author above the cast and story, linking to "Humoresque." Rip it loose on "a Fannie Hurst story" and it will carry over. You can also get some sales from the fact that this is by the same production company which did "Humoresque."

"Three Live Ghosts"

Entertainment of High Order Is Provided by Picturization of Amazing Play.

Reviewed by Fritz Tidden.

An expert blending of delicious humor, a certain amount of drama and a good deal of human appeal makes "Three Live Ghosts" an entertainment that cannot fail to meet with general approval. But it is its natural and sparkling humor that is most responsible for putting the picture over with the bang it received, for instance, when the reviewer saw it in a crowded house in the Rivoli Theatre, where it played to good success for the week. At that time it met with continuous and genuine enthusiasm, the kind that springs spontaneously from deserving souls having the time of their hard lives.

The original source of "Three Live Ghosts" is Frederick S. Isham's play of the same name, which ran a whole season on Broadway and toured parts of the country with merited success. Ouida Bergere made a better scenario than she usually does and elaborated on the original more than she changed it. In fact, it is an unusually faithful adaptation.

"Three Live Ghosts" is the initial George Fitzmaurice importation from the Paramount London studios, where he went some time ago to make a series of productions,using American technical methods and staff, and numerous American stars and supporting casts. In the matter of producing standards, among other things, Fitzmaurice has set himself a most difficult precedent to maintain in future pictures from abroad. If he does adhere to the high standard of direction and the stories he works on are as entertaining as that in "Three Live Ghosts," exhibitors are going to get a series of pictures that will make money for them. Commendation for his direction should be set in italics, and he has committed but one serious fault, that of staging a heartily assinine ending, where everyone, butlers, maids and all doll themselves up in evening clothes and sit down to dinner together in a fine spirit of what is supposed to be democracy.

Cyril Chadwick stands out most prominently in the same role of Spoofy that he created in the stage production here. But Clare Greet makes the part of the famous, bibbling Mrs. Grubbins—originally played by the incomparable Beryl Mercer—a thing of joy. The other members of a thoroughly competent cast, including Anna Q. Nilsson and Norman Kerry, who are starred, realize all the many possibilities of their roles. The titles are delightfully comic, many of them being lines from the play, and they are well placed by Tom Gheraty, who edited the production.

The Cast

Ivis.....Anna Q. Nilsson
Billy Foster.....Norman Kerry
Spoofy.....Cyril Chadwick
Jimmy Gubbins.....Edmund Goulding
Peter Larne.....John Miltern
Mrs. Gubbins.....Clare Greet
Miss Woofers.....Annette Benson
The Duchess.....Dorothy Fane

Scenario by Ouida Bergere.
Directed by George Fitzmaurice.
Length, 5,784 Feet.

The Story

Three "missing" soldiers, who escaped from a German prison camp, arrive as stowaways in London on Armistice night. One of the trio, an American soldier, discovers his sweetheart being subjected to the unwelcome attentions of his rival. The doughboy and the latter get into a fight and the rival is accidentally shot. The second of the trio suffers from shell shock and is a kleptomaniac. The third soldier's mother, who is an inveterate gin drinker, has spent some of the insurance money she received when her son was reported dead. Consequently all three had to hide from the police, where upon there develops a series of complications that are finally untangled and the happy reunion of the "Three Live Ghosts" and their loved ones comes at a time when everything looks blackest.

Exploitation Angles: Sell the story on the strength of the success of the stage play and then build up with the stars. Three ghostly perambulators will provide a street stunt and a ghostly lobby will help to put the idea over and bring in a crowd to be pleased.

"Making the Grade"

Americanism Triumphs Over Bolshevism In Lively Comedy Drama.

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

Remember what Mr. Barnes of New York did in that mythical land? Well, his accomplishments fade into insignificance when compared with the antics and romance of Eddie Ramson, U. S. A., in that land of unshaven humans and the home of Bolshevik hoakum. Being in Russia Eddie believes that it would be to his advantage to do some rushin' and once he got under way his 100 per cent. Americanism made Bolshevism bend on its knees and plead for life. But that wasn't all. Eddie wanted a souvenir to remind him of his innocent escapades so he proceded to steal the heart of Sophie Semenoff, who turned out to be quite a wife. And can you imagine Eddie's feelings when he discovered that instead of a peasant schoolm'am he had taken unto himself a wife who was a Russian Princess incognito?

"Making the Grade" was originally entitled "Sophie Semenoff." But regardless of the title it constitutes the sort of entertainment that seems to secure a lasting grip on American theatregoers. It is dashingly reckless in mannerism, but its atmosphere is American. George Cohan could have made a million with a stage adaptation of this story, but then Equity will want to dictate to G. M. However, "Making the Grade" is one of those pictures that interests you not because it is a motion picture, but, on the contrary, because it bubbles over with youth, adventure and romance.

It is a production that represents a heavy investment, but the purpose for which pictures are flashed on screens—to entertain—has been well served. Scenically it is picturesque. The story is smoothly told. David Powell as the hero is refreshingly active throughout, while Helen Ferguson as Sophie Semenoff is a winner. William Walling as "daddy" Ramson is a complete success. The rest of the cast gives acceptable support. The direction by Fred J. Butler is good. The picture is released by Western Pictures Exploitation Corporation.

The Cast

Eddie Ramson.....David Butler
Sophie Semenoff.....Helen Ferguson
Mr. Ramson.....William Walling
Mrs. Ramson.....Lillian Lawrence
Capt. Carleton.....Jack Cosgrove
Mrs. Garnie Crest.....Alice Wilson
Directed by Fred J. Butler
Length, five reels

The Story

Mr. Ramson's son, Eddie, is impossible, according to "daddy," but "Ma" Ramson thinks otherwise. However, Eddie is induced to join an expedition en route for Bolshevik Russia, under the command of Capt. Carlton, Mr. Ramson's chum. In Russia Eddie finds it almost impossible to stay sober. There is a schoolm'am that has won Eddie's heart and he proceds to make love to Sophie Semonoff, the teacher. However, the law of Bolshevism is peculiar and a few bewiskered "Bulls" take it into their craniums to marry the teacher, who succeeds in eluding them. She is overtaken by Eddie—and also the Bolsheviks. Refusal to marry means death in Russia. But Eddie has a winning way—and a few American dollars that induce the Bolshevik commander to change his mind, provided Eddie will marry the girl. And that's that. Next scene, good old U. S. A. But "Ma" Ramson has changed her opinion about sonny, whom she believes to have been "vamped." Father Ramson has learned otherwise, but he fails at all efforts to reconcile mother and son until American agents of the Russian anarchists kidnap Sophie. Then she takes up the chase which results in the defeat of the kidnappers. And it is at this point that Sophie discloses the fact that the kidnappers sought her jewels, which belonged to her regal mother. Business of Eddie waking up to the fact that he has married a princess. Result: happiness for all concerned.

Exploitation and Program Catchlines:

They Thought he Was a Good-For-Nothing —But Russia Gave Him His Chance And He Won the Confidence Of His Parents And Friends— and a Princess For a Wife.

Exploitation Angles: Start this off with snipe teasers "Marry or die." Give them a few days to sink in and then tell how the threat hooks up to this story. That should put this over with little else to be done, if you do this comprehensively.

"Once Upon a Time"

Ruth Bryan Owen Produces a Legend of Old India, Featuring the Community Players of Cocoanut Grove.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

From the standpoint of box-office success, "Once Upon a Time" is somewhat of a question mark. It does not have the qualities of the usual money-getter, but upon giving some care to analyzing it, and booking it with an accurate knowledge of what your neighborhood likes, it would probably be well received. It is legendary in style, is a story of an indefinite period, laid in India, heavily costumed, elaborately staged, and has a highly fictitious story that is not sufficiently involved to be alluring.

A somewhat obvious conspiracy to dethrone the Shah of an Eastern province, as instigated by his chief counsellor, starts the drama. A picturization of the usurper's cruel practices takes up most of the rest of the picture and the survival and return of the original monarch furnish a certain romantic interest. The subtitles are written in Biblical phrase and occur more frequently than is good for the story interest. Considered as a producer's first venture, the picture impresses one as an especially difficult type. If a more ordinary, more conventional theme had been chosen, there would have been a better chance to conceal the marks of the amateur, and a better outlet for the understanding of the romantic and picturesque, which the producer undoubtedly possesses.

The Cast are Members of the Community Players of Cocoanut Grove, Fla.
Story by Ruth Bryan Owen,
Directed by Ruth Bryan Owen
Length, 4,800 feet.

The Story

The Shah of an Eastern province is dethroned by a jealous subordinate whose favorite pastime is sending young girls to their death, who fail to amuse him. The most beautiful one of all is not discovered by him until the end and the timely return of the Shah who had survived, despite all belief to the contrary, saves her.

Program and Exploitation Catchline:

A Story of a Beneficent Monarch of Old India and The Wicked Usurper of His Throne—A Story of Intrigue and Beauty —Written and Produced by Ruth Bryan Owen, Daughter of William Jennings Bryan.

Exploitation Angles: Sell this on the something different angle. Tell that it is a legend of old India and try and suggest richness and color in your lobby or window displays and so far as you can in the wording of your advertisements.

PROJECTION

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Supplies a Text

Fred H. Wood, motion picture projectionist, Springfield, Missouri, speaks thusly:

Having acquired the habit of writing, I find it a hard one to break, so here I am once more. Concerning condensers, I want to express my approval and endorsement of the Paramount condensers. I have not had half the breakage trouble with them I have with other makes; also less pitting. Moreover I believe they give less spherical aberration and a whiter light on the screen. Some may object to the price, but to my way of thinking the lenses are worth what they cost.

And now may I suggest a text for one of those sermons of yours, which same I would rather read than hear the oration of any of the supposed-to-be big ones of earth. It is "Keeping Physically Fit for Your Job."

My reason for wishing to have you "talk" on that particular subject is that I personally know at least a dozen projectionists who mope around with headaches, backaches and other aches, AND believe me their work shows the reflex of these aches and pains in dingy, jumpy, streaky pictures. Let's have one of your "sermons" on this subject.

So far as I know the Paramount condensers are good lenses. I have rather laid off investigating the merits of condensing lenses, because of the fact that up to date none that have been presented to this department for examination and test have maintained a uniformly high standard of excellence. As to less breakage and pitting, why that sounds like you may be fooling yourself a bit. Pitting would occur just as readily with a high-class lens as with a lens with poor finish—in fact it would be likely to be the more noticeable on the high-class lens.

Pitting Is Burning

Pitting is the burning away of the finish, or polish of the glass, by hot particles from the crater. I note that you say both pitting and breakage is reduced. Perhaps you have a longer distance from crater to face of collector lens. How about it?

Better investigate that point carefully. As to spherical aberration being reduced, why I hardly think that probable, though it is a fact that reduction of that item would tend to whiten the light, because less of the color at outer edges of the condenser, caused by chromatic aberration, would be carried down into the center of the spot.

But reduction of spherical aberration is not an unmixed evil, because we have to depend on it, to a certain extent, for evenness of illumination at the spot. All these things are linked together in such a way that it is amusing when one of the Wise Ones speaks disparagingly of the knowledge necessary to intelligently and efficiently handle a motion picture projector.

Your Are Right

As to the "sermon," well, while you are entirely right in saying that the efficient man in projection, or any other line of human endeavor, must keep himself physically and mentally fit, stillI am afraid it is somewhat a waste of space to "preach" to those who have not sufficient ordinary intelligence to understand so simple a thing as that.

I remember visiting the headquarters of a projectionists' local union at one a. m. some years ago. I found a number of members, who had worked their shift the previous day, engaged in shooting craps, in poker and similar diversions. I remarked upon the number so engaged, and was informed that some of the boys would be in later (earlier, it really would be), as they had dates.

Notice to All

PRESSURE on our columns is such that published replies to questions cannot be guaranteed under two or three weeks. If quick action is desired remit four cents, stamps, and we will send carbon copy of department reply as soon as written.

For special replies by mail on matters which, for any reason, cannot be replied to through our department remit one dollar.

THE LENS CHART

Are You Working by "Guess" or Do You Employ Up-to-Date Methods?

You demand that your employer keep his equipment in good order and up ot date. He owes it both to himself and to you to do so, but you owe it to him to keep abreast with the times in knowledge and in your methods.

The lens chart (two in one, 11x17 inches, on heavy paper for framing) is in successful use by hundreds of progressive projectionists.

"Don't guess." Do your work RIGHT. Price, fifty cents, stamps.

And during the evening the aforesaid business agent, as well as the president of the local, had expended considerable breath telling me what a lot of ingrowing tight-wads the managers were, and how hard it was to get better wages or conditions.

I had at the time, after carefully concealing my left eye, winked it to myself six times in the same place. The screens of that city were quite sufficient explanation as to why the managers only "gave up" when compelled to, and the exhibition at union headquarters was quite sufficient explanation of the why and wherefore of the punk screen results viewed in that town, particularly when the business agent informed me, with apparent pride (though why it was anything to be proud of I could not understand), that "none o' dem bull heads 'ull go into th' hay before tree o'clock, an' th' crap game don't bust up till daylight, lessen them ginks goes bust before then."

Not General Condition

Please do NOT understand this as representing any general condition. It does NOT. Most unions maintaining headquarters would not tolerate any such insane doings for even one night. But the point is that men who habitually stay up all night gambling, or doing anything else for that matter, cannot expect to bring to their work that mental or physical energy which is necessary to high-class results. It cannot be done, and is NOT done.

MEN WHO WORK IN A PROJECTION ROOM, BUT WHO REGARD THEIR WORK MERELY AS A MEANS TO GET ENOUGH MONEY TO RAISE H—— WITH, NEVER GET ANYWHERE. They burn the candle of life at both ends, hence are always mentally and physically tired—especially the former.

The boss is "on" to them. Their mental and physical condition reflects itself in their work. There can be no manner of doubt whatever as to that. Their mind is dulled, and is not bent upon their work, but upon the things they will do when the work is finished. They are time servers and clock watchers. Their work is merely a means to an end, and a very unpleasant means, too.

It is true that all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy; it is equally true that if work is made secondary to play, then Jack is little else than a mere toy—a thing that is not much good to any one but himself, and in the end is not much good to himself.

The man who is a blessing to himself, to his trade, business or profession, is the one who bends every mental energy to his work, realizing that it is the ONE big thing in any real man's life, and when work is done, plays reasonably, but NOT enough to work injury to the work of next day.

Remember This

Remember this: The man who plays or dissipates to his physical injury, or to an extent which reduces his physical powers, automatically also reduces his mental powers, and the man who has impared mental powers is inefficient in any and everything he undertakes, be it projection or ditch digging. And don't one of you ever run away with the idea that ANY boss worthy of being a boss (and if he isn't it is best to seek employment under another man), does not or will not recognize high-class work. ABILITY ALWAYS GETS RECOGNITION IN THE LONG RUN, though it will get recognition, very much more quickly, if the man understands how to go about intelligently showing and proving to the boss that he is entitled to it.

Many things pass unnoticed which would be properly valued if intelligently set before the right man or men.

Perhaps the one most neglected important field of study is how to get the really meritorious things you may do in your work recognized. Many a really excellent projectionist has failed to get ahead and has become discouraged simply because he did not understand how to get recognition for his good work.

It is just as necessary to study this end of things as it is to study and learn how to do the good work for which you seek recognition. —Selah.

Projectionists' Tools

Wells Jewett writes from Buffalo, New York, at some length. The letter is a personal one, but in it occurs a paragraph which I think is of sufficient interest to be printed. Friend Jewett wrote of his difficulties in small town work, and told how when he found it necessary to take charge of a motion picture projector. He then said:

The first difficulty I encountered when I attempted to make adjustments on the projectors was a lack of proper tools. The management had never had any tools put in the projection room, and while country hardware stores carried plenty of tools for farm machinery and tractors they were sadly shy of tools fit for use on a motion picture projector. I therefore turned to the supply house, only to find their stock almost as limited as that of the hardware merchants. Not one of them had tools particularly adapted to the making of even the most ordinary adjustments on the different makes of projector. Finally, mostly on trips to the larger cities, I did get together an assortment of punches, screwdrivers, etcetra, which served the purpose after a fashion, but there were always some simple adjustments which had to be made in a more or less make-shift manner.

This condition is perhaps not altogether the fault of anyone. The projectionist has, as Brother Hamilton aptly expressed it, been accustomed to "getting along" (after a fashion), with a pair or two of flea bitten pliers and a moth eaten screwdriver or two—usually minus the "two." He is, as a class, in a "no tool" rut. He needs jarring out.

In the days when the projector was a spindle-legged affair, and the adjustments mostly more or less imaginary, the ten cent screwdriver and pair of pliers might serve very well. But now we have a real, honest-to-gosh projector, a motor generator and maybe a lot of other stuff. We need tools, and NOT tools from the ten cent store either.

Wants Advice

O. F. Allen, Chelsea, Vermont, wants advice, as follows:

Am writing for a bit of advice. We have a house in Woodstock, Vermont, in which we must very soon install a new screen. We have been conducting a circuit of one night stands for the past few years. Last winter we took a lease on the building known as "Music Hall" at Woodstock. It contains the town hall on the first floor, which same we can use for dances etc. The building is the property of the town. We can seat about 500, and there is a stage which will accommodate any ordinary road show.

But to get back to my story, we have been using a cloth screen which was coated, and has a black border. This screen is, however, getting in bad shape. It is beginning to wrinkle. We now want a new screen, with a set to finish up the front of the stage. Distance of projection is about 75 feet. The present picture 14 feet wide. Picture is projected at an angle of about fifteen degrees. Have two projectors in projection room and use thirty five amperes through a Wagner converter.

We do not feel like installing a manufactured screen at present, as the place is not large enough to warrant the expenditure. What we want to know is, what would you recommend as to material and construction for something we can build ourselves. Must be something we can roll and unroll without wrinkles. The house is wide and the screen about twenty feet from front row of seats.

Cannot Guarantee it Not to Wrinkle

Well, gentlemen, I cannot guarantee that anything you may make will not wrinkle when rolled and unrolled, but there is no reason why a painted cloth screen should not roll smoothly, provided it be rightly made, and to be rightly made it must be stretched tightly on a frame, well sized and then painted.

I would suggest the following: Get four timbers heavy enough so that they will not give under the pull of the cloth, remembering that after it is wet and dries out, it will pull pretty hard. 2 x 4 or at most 2 x 6 will do. Make a rough frame and stretch good, heavy unbleached muslin, which you have had sewed to make a sheet the right size, thereon. Stretch it only tight enough to remove all wrinkles. Then size the cloth by wetting it thoroughly (using a calsomine brush) with a mixture of about one and a half pounds of good glue to an ordinary bucket of water. Let dry thoroughly. Best let it stand twenty four hours in a fairly warm place, or longer if in a cold place. Don't let it freeze until dry. The point is be sure it IS dry.

Next paint with only tolerably heavy coat of white lead, mixed with one third boiled linseed oil and two thirds turpentine, adding enough ultamarine or cobalt blue to make it a faint blue tint in the pot. Do this latter to all coats.

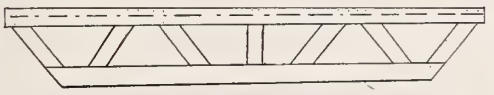
Dry Thoroughly

Let dry thoroughly. Twenty four hours is enough if in a warm place. Then mix half white lead and half white zinc (any painter supply dealer can furnish the zinc, or get it for you) with one quarter boiled linseed oil and three quarters turpentine—add the blue, of course.

This should dry in a warm place in twelve hours.

Now mix the finishing coat of all white zinc, with about the same proportions of oil and turpentine used for last coat. It is a bit too much oil, but your curtain must be rolled and I think that much oil will be necesary for a binder. Add blue, of course. Don't mix last two coats very heavy.

Now mount the screen on a support, which must be PERFECTLY STRAIGHT, and must remain so, or at least the curtain must be attached to the support in a perfectly straight line. I would suggest that before you take



CONSTRUCTION DIAGRAM
For home made screen support the curtain off the frame you snap a chalk line near its top. You can then, using heavy carpet tacks, fasten the line so it is exactly over a similar line snapped on the support.

You will understand that unless the support be one which will remain straight, and the top of the screen be tacked exactly as it was on the frame, there will be inevitable wrinkling. I therefore suggest the form of construction for a support shown, the broken line representing the chalk line. For a roller—well you will, of course, use your own judgement, only remember this: a roller which is not perfectly straight will stretch the surface and cause wrinkling. Also tack to chalk line as for top.

A Good Projection Surface

The surface described will give a good projection surface, and it can be renewed every six months or so by one new top coat mixed as per last coat I have described. It will give excellent diffusion, and that is what you want for a wide house. If properly constructed and not abused such a screen should last anyhow two or three years, with the addition of a top coat every six months.

On second thought, I would give the back of the screen a good, heavy coat of white lead and boiled linseed oil to protect the cloth and glue from the effects of moisture. It would be well to do this at the same time you give the front its first coat.

NOTE.—There are many who make similar requests for directions for a home-made screen which will roll. If any of our friends can offer something better than what I have suggested, I shall be very glad to hear from them.

Comes Back For More

Benjamin G. Hull, Westfield, Mass., arises to remark:

Dear Sir and Brother: First of all permit me to thank you for your kindly interest in my troubles by writing me, as well as sending carbon of department matter.

I am sorry for the necessity existing which obliges me to trouble you again, as I know you must be very busy with the new "dictionary" of projection. I use that word because this new book will be the means of explaining from A to Z all those troubles with which we are beset. I do hope it will prove a success, particularly financially, because you deserve it, though if you publish this in the department it will probably be sneered at, or at least laughed at by the deadheads and chair warmers, with many of which the profession of projection is inflicted.

One thing is amusing, viz: The shout from certain ones who rave because you get some of your knowledge from others. Well, even so, you deserve every credit for placing the ideas and writings of others before us IN UNDERSTANDABLE FORM.

How little do these sponge-heads realize the labor involved in picking out the grains of truth from the mass of error which reaches your desk, and the task of arranging it to the end that the idea be assimilated. Were the mass of mixed truth and error published as received, it surely would raise havoc with the inexperienced man, especially those in small towns, who are many miles from supply houses and sources of information.

I have read your writings every week since in the spring of 1909, when the department first started, and believe me I have gained much knowledge by the reading, nor am I too conceited to acknowledge it, giving credit where credit is due. In closing let me wish you the merriest of Merry Christmases and the happiest possible New Year.

Should Impress the Unthinking

Why do I publish this, you ask? Well, for several reasons. I am, and for many years have been keenly interested in the endeavor to induce the projectionist to study and thus raise the profession to that higher level it ought to occupy. There are several points in this letter which ought to impress the unthinking with the foolishness of some of their arguments.

I was forcibly struck with one thing, namely, the absolute truth of the good friend's analysis of how a very great deal of the truth I am rightfully accused of "getting from others" is actually obtained.

It is no unusual thing for a projectionist to send a letter in which, bound up in a bale of error, is ONE valuable grain of truth. Did I publish the letter as received, it would be of worse than no account at all. I have to "pan" the grains of gold from the worthless sands. Then I must carefully examine and see how and where the gold can be used, the latter process often consuming weeks, and sometimes months, with correspondence with perhaps anywhere from one to twenty companies of men.

Then, too, take the things I can use from standard text books. Can I use them as they are? NOT ONCE IN A HUNDRED TIMES. If I did the average projectionist would look at them in helpless perplexity. Very often I cannot understand them myself, until I have first done a lot of digging to ascertain what all those words, signs, and perhaps funny looking diagrams, really mean.

He Got It Right

I don't know how Brother Hull visualized so clearly what takes place at the conductorial desk, but by gum he certainly got it pretty nearly right. I would give a few dollars just to watch some of the saps who criticise look through just one bunch of letters and try to make head or tail out of some of the stuff I have, through years of experience, learned to analyze quite fairly well. For instance: Recently I copy verbatim from a letter received a few days ago:

"Will you explain just exactly change over speed."

I answered that "question" correctly, as was proven by a letter of thanks. The good brother—member of a local in a city of something like a quarter of a million—wanted me to explain exactly what was meant by speed of intermittent, or ratio of intermittent speed.

Thank you, Brother Hull, for your expressions of confidence and friendliness. Some day when Richardson is shoving up the daisys they will mostly all talk that way. Hope Mr. S. Claus found your stocking, and filled it to overflowing.

Ten Dollars For a Handbox

From J. S. Gelman, Cincinnati, Ohio, a projectionist well-known in that city, comes the following letter, attached to which is the sum of ten perfectly good dollars. He says:

Friend Richardson: Probably you will not remember the writer, but more than a year ago last October we were together when the Society of Motion Picture Engineers met in Dayton, Ohio. I was "among those present" at the banquet the Hamilton, Ohio, men gave you.

I just want to refresh your memory, because I propose to hold you to the promise you made then that you would send me an autographed copy of the Fourth Edition of the Handbook, or as it is popularly known, the "Projectionists' Bible."

I am inclosing a check for ten dollars ($10.00), which is only a small part of the amount I think the new book will be worth.

You ask, in a recent issue of the department, those who may know of other good books for projectionists to send in the names of same. In my estimation, as well as in the estimation of most people in the business, the Handbook is all there is! There are not any more.

Will appreciate it if you will send the new book at your convenience, but by all means send it! The sooner the better. In closing let me extend my kindest personal regards, and best wishes to you for a very Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

Establishes a Record

Well! That, I think, establishes a record. A man who thinks so much of the Handbook that he is actually sending in ten of his hard earned dollars for a copy is pretty excellent proof that he has found real genuine honest-to-gosh value in past editions—also that he recognizes the money value of knowledge to him.

I want to most cordially thank Brother Gelman for his appreciation and kindly feeling. The order has been turned over to the book department of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, which handles all book orders.

All surplus above the price of the book, when finally fixed, will be returned to Friend Gelman. The price may not exceed five, and must not and will not exceed six dollars.

All those sending in five dollars will be booked for one of the first copies, all of which will be autographed by the author. If we find it necessary (as I am much afraid we will) to fix the price in excess of five dollars, but in no event more than six dollars, the book will be sent C. O. D. for whatever balance there may be. It will be either five, five-fifty or six dollars. That much is certain. BUT believe me, gentlemen, I am giving you full value, even though it be the higher figure—and then some. THE FOURTH EDITION IS NOT A RE-VAMPING OF THE THIRD EDITION. To all intents and purposes it is an entirely new book, which it has taken me two years of the hardest kind of hard work to prepare.

Latest Dope

It will contain the very latest, most up-to-date dope on the optical system of the projector, including method for selecting and adjusting optical train for any amperage, no matter how high. It will contain a Mazda section, to which such careful preparation has been given that the General Electric voluntarially sent a man down from West Lynn, Mass., and one from Schenectady, New York, to assist in its preparation. In fact the man from West Lynn came three times.

I cannot agree with Brother Gelman that "there are not any more." No one book does, or probably can ever contain all the knowledge it is desirable the prjectionist have at hand, but I do say that the projectionist, while he should have other books, CAN get by with the Handbook alone, and get by very well, too. When he has learned all there is in the Handbook he will have a fund of projection knowledge which I believe any man might well be proud of.

Thanks, Neighbor Gelman. I remember you well. May the New Year bring to you and yours health, wealth and happiness.

New Film Cement

This department is in receipt of six sample bottles of a new film cement being manufactured and put on the market by the Eastman Kodak Company.

This proposition attracted my immediate attention for three reasons. First, it is a cement put out by a company which is the largest maker of films in the world, and which therefore certainly ought to know exactly what a film cement should be; also it is a company having ample laboratory facilities for experimenting and testing. Second, in the accompanying letter appeared this important statement: "Eastman film cement is made from tested chemicals and will be consistently uniform in quality." Third, the cement is equally effective on inflammable and non-flam stock.

As you may all see by examining the back files of the projection department, I have consistently refused to indorse any particular brand of film cement, or film cement formula, because of the difference in different lots made from the same formula, presumably due to difference in chemicals.

And now I am going to do something this department mighty seldom does, viz: Give a flat indorsement to something I have not had tested—for I have not had the cement the Eastman Company sent tested. I do not regard it as necessary. There can be no manner of doubt but that the Eastman Company would not put out anything other than a good cement, and if we are assured, as we are, that it is made only from tested chemicals, and that it will always be of uniform quality, that is sufficient, coming from the source it does.

I therefore take real pleasure in recommending that projectionists try the Eastman film cement. It will probably be on the market by the time this is printed. If not, then it will be very soon afterward.

And mind you, this is the first time in TWELVE YEARS that I have given such a recommendation as this before the recommended article had been very thoroughly tried out. But I'll stand by my judgment in this matter nevertheless.

Conductorial Troubles

Very often one who tries to guide the destinies of such a department as this into helpful, useful lines, not the least task of which is to make it interesting reading, don't know whether to laugh or swear.

In December 10 issue I published an unsigned letter from a man in Philadelphia, commenting thereon in a way which, so far as I can see, cast no reflection on the afraid-of-his-name friend. Now comes the following contribution, also unsigned, which shows I was wrong in supposing the man merely forgot to append his name to the other. Here is a portion of his last effort, quoted verbatim:

I see you published my letter in the department, which was not meant for publicity. Now then, Mr. Richardson, would you be so very kind to explain a little more clearer just what you meant by re-directing Griffith's pictures. When you made that crack, old man, you made it to the wrong bird, if I understand you correctly. If you can't say a good thing about a man, why do you say some sarcastic thing? I think it is your duty to patch this thing up, or I am afraid you will have considerable more enemies to add to your list. If you can't boost, don't knock!

Allow Me to Say

For the benefit of the man from Philadelphia, allow me to say that David Wark Griffith is credited with having said "the motion picture projectionist in a way re-directs the photoplay." And let me add to that that what Mr. Griffith says is entirely and absolutely TRUE.

I believe Mr. Unsigned will admit that by the mere moving of a lever or twisting of a knob he can alter the speed of projection to such an extent that the actors will present to the audience something very unlike what they portrayed before the camera. Is it not so?

Cannot Mr. Nameless turn a funeral scene into a howling farce which will rock an audience with laughter, merely by altering projection speed? Is it not so? Cannot he make an automobile or horse race utterly ridiculous by the same thing in reverse? Is it not absolutely so?

Then It Is True

Then it is true the projectionist can entirely alter the effect of almost any scene in which action is present, hence he in a way, just as it is said Mr. Griffith asserted, re-directs the photoplay.

And where, pray, is the "sarcasm" in that? The "crack" was made to ALL projectionists alike. Why do you try to grab it all to yourself, Mr. Whoareyou. Enemies? Huh, man, I eat three of 'em every morning before breakfast for an appetiser, and six more afterward for a chaser, so in four or five days I get 'em all cleaned up and there "ain't no more."

Wants the New Handbook

Ralph V. Plew, Linton, Indiana, sends check in the sum of five dollars for Fourth Edition of Handbook, in accordance with my offer, page 722, December 10 issue, in which I agreed to send autographed copy of first lot of books received to all those who forward five dollars, with understanding that if the price succeeds that sum the book will be sent C. O. D. for balance, and the further understanding that it will in no event be more than six dollars, and asks:

If the following is not suitable for answering in the department will you please supply the desired information by mail? Where can I get the following tools: Copper punches, hardwood punches, press for removing and replacing intermittent sprockets, tool for extracting broken small screws, and broaches for reaming intermittent sprocket taper pin holes?

Make Your Own

If there is such a thing as a copper punch made I don't know of it. Would suggest that you get a piece of No. 0 or 00 copper wire and file out any sort of punch you want. As to hardwood punches, why, man, get a piece from a really good, tough axe handle, and a very coarse, sharp file or a fine tooth wood rasp, and you can easily make as many as you want.

Just cut the wood in about six inch lengths, split it to about 3-8 inch squares and then get busy with the file or rasp. The six-inch length is to allow of clamping one end in a vise while you work on the other.

An Excellent Press

An excellent press of the kind you want was described and illustrated in September 17 issue of the department; also the name and address of the maker was given. As to a broken screw extractor, why if any one knows of such a tool will he or she advise me, and write Brother Plew. It runs in my mind that the E. E. Fulton Company, Chicago, Illinois, makes or handles such a tool, though I am not sure. They are on Carroll avenue.

Any Simplex service station will provide you with a broach for taper pins. Don't believe the Powers Company dealers handle them, but see no reason why the Simplex tool would not serve for either projector. As far as I know the same size pins are used by both.

Don't get all fussed up if you don't get a book quite as soon as you think you should. We will push things through as fast as we can, but such things as getting out a book of this sort takes tremendous effort, barrels of patience and boodles of hard work. You are booked, and will get one of the first lot to escape the clutches of the book binder.

All you other fellows who have sent checks please take note!

Ready—

EASTMAN FILM CEMENT

Cut where you will, splice with Eastman Film Cement and for all practical purposes the reel's original resistance to strain both in projection and re-wind is restored. The splice is secure against break or buckle.

Eastman-made and Eastman-tested as the presence of this seal on the container testifies:

Eastman Film Cement is the only cement that may be used successfully with either Regular or Safety film. It may be obtained in 1 oz. and 16 oz. bottles, and gallon containers.

Better Equipment

Conducted by E. T. KEYSER

An Extra Projector on the Floor Is Worth a Drawerful of Spare Parts

WHAT particular spare projector parts should an exhibitor stock up on?" we asked a house manager the other day.

"What will the weather conditions be at 3.30 P. M. next Wednesday?" he countered. "If I could answer that sort of a question and be within anything like reaching distance of a correct solution, I'd shut up shop and hang out an astrologer's shingle and rake in enough shekels to make my income tax shoot up around 100 per cent."

"Why?" we persisted.

"Because, to the eternal credit of American projector manufacturers, it may be said that accident not wear is responsible for the majority of break-downs in projection apparatus. You may figure out where the greatest wear comes in the projector mechanism and fancy that you have a line on just where the first trouble may develop and lay in extras along that line.

The Manufacturers Coppered the Bet

"And then you will discover that the manufacturers have coppered that bet by making those particular parts so wear-resisting that they stand up indefinitely under the hardest kind of usage.

"And if you think that I'm off in my reasoning, just try and get a list of such parts recommended to you by any number of supply houses.

"The chances are that no two such lists will be identical. And when doctors disagree, where would you or I come in?"

"What's the use of us trying to figure where the trouble is most likely to happen through wear when the manufacturers have beaten us to it and provided for it far in advance?"

"It's accident that usually starts such projection troubles as those with which we have to cope and no one can foretell where accidents will strike. Otherwise, they are not accidents."

"Well, then, what IS the remedy?" we asked.

"The very same that the sportsman uses when he goes far afield," was the reply. "Do you remember when expensive English guns were supplied with an extra set of locks? And our American shooters carried the locks around with 'em for years, waiting for the old springs to break—which they did not.

"But that when the shooter fell or the gun was let fall and the barrels dented or the stock broke, the extra set of locks did not make matters any better? The only thing that would fill the game bag under those circumstances was a spare gun."

Accidents Are Unforseen

"And as no one can foresee just what particular variety of accident will put a temporary crimp in the projection, a spare projection machine is the one and infallible spare that will effect an instantaneous repair.

"No matter how skillful the projectionist, he cannot have at his disposal the machinery and facilities of either the projector manufacturer or the service station to make good accidental damage, and it is unfair to both projectionist, the audience and the house to try to shove a quick make-shift repair job through while the audience waits."

All of which is most logical for the time element is a very important factor in the projection room. The slightest delay in the projection, due to an unforeseen hitch or breakdown, and its remedy, no matter how skilfully or quickly applied, tends to break up the show and to make the audience uncomfortable and impatient.

An Extra Projector Best Insurance

An extra projection machine, that may instantly be substituted for one which temporarily balks, is the best insurance policy that an exhibitor can carry against such delays and annoyances.

Not only does this insure a continuous and satisfactory screening, but it permits the exhibitor to shift his damaged machine to the nearest service station or even to the plant of the manufacturer for an overhauling much more satisfactory and thorough than he would have any right to expect at the hands of his house employees. And this allows of plenty of time being devoted to the repair work instead of calling for a rushed job and almost an immediate return of the projector before it has been given a satisfactory try-out at the repair man's hands.

An extra projection machine is just as much of a necessity to the exhibitor as spare wheels to the careful automobilist with the difference that, in the former case, it means true economy in dollars and cents, while in the latter it is simply a matter of convenience and comfort.

One of the best New Year's resolutions that an exhibitor can make is that he will add to his battery of projection machines one more, to be held strictly for emergency purposes, and which will always be kept ready for substitution should anything go wrong with one of his service projectors.

Of course, it will cost some money, but life, fire and accident insurances also cost money, and the installation of an emergency projector constitutes one of the best business insurances that an exhibitor can obtain.

Power Plants for Washington Houses

Mike Lyons, of the Union Theatre, in the Seattle downtown district, has installed two of the late Type "E" Power's with governor speed controls.

The Majestic Theatre, Yakima, is now using Power's with roller pin intermittent movements.

R. H. Glenn, who operates a chain of theatres in Washington's greatest coal mining district, has purchased another Power's 6-B projector.

The Rialto Theatre, of Tacoma, which is operated by the Moore Amusement Company, of that city, is using the Power's roller pin projector.

Good Music Assured

The American Photo Player Company has shipped a Robert-Morton organ to Honolulu, to be installed in the Liberty Theatre, operated by the Consolidated Amusement Company. N. B. Jacobus has left to install it and will remain there a while as organist.

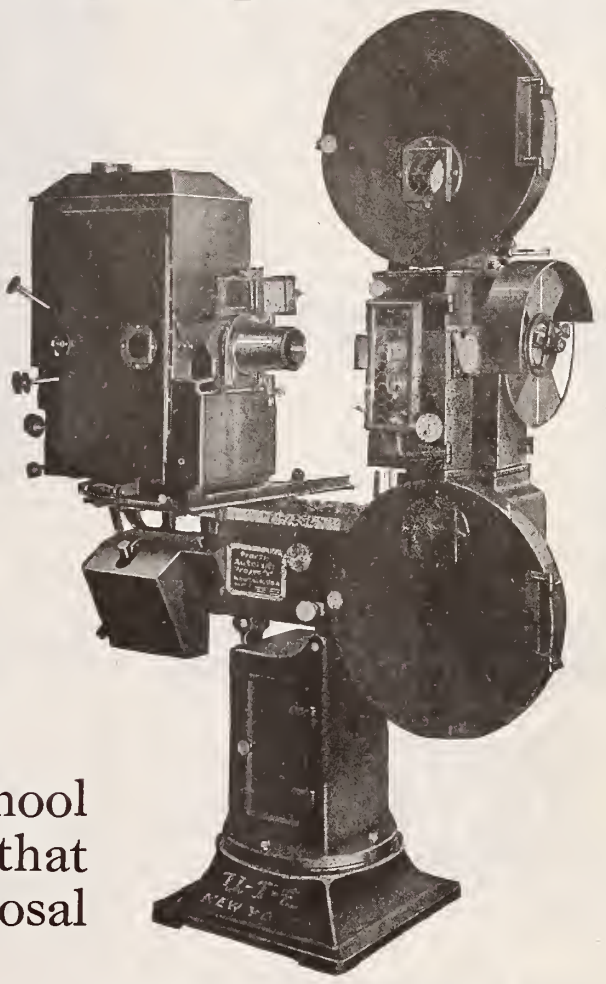
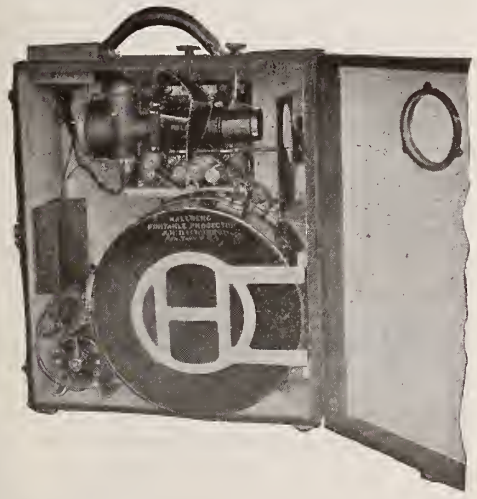
The U-T-E Line Is Complete

From the U-T-E Proctor Automatic to the feather-weight Hallberg Portable Projector, the entire projection requirements of the world have been covered, adequately and satisfactorily.



The big, self contained Proctor Automatic is the latest and most scientific development of the professional projection machine.

The light weight Hallberg Portable Projector, which makes a slide of every picture, gives to the theatre reviewing room, the church, the school and the lodge, projection facilities that have never before been at their disposal when utilizing portable projectors.



Because, with the Hallberg, a 100-watt lamp gives a 600-watt effect.

For every requirement of exhibitor and educator the U-T-E trade mark means absolute satisfaction coupled with the assurance that there is nothing in projection apparatus equal to products bearing this brand.

Be safe, not sorry—Look for U-T-E on YOUR projection equipment.

NUMBER FOUR LASKY STAGE
As viewed from the girders above same

The Mammoth Glass Covered Stage of Lasky Studio Is Now Complete

THE mammoth glass-covered stage of the Lasky studio—said to be the largest structure of its kind in the motion picture world, has been completed.

This stage, which will be known as number four, is one hundred and twenty-five feet in width by two hundred and fifty feet in length. It has a clearance height of thirty feet and rises to a maximum of forty-two feet at the apex of roof.

This huge structure required one hundred and seventy-five tons of steel for its construction. It is roofed with 32,000 square feet of glass, held in place by four tons of galvanized iron in the form of ribs and mullions.

Approximately three tons of wire was used for the installation of diffusers. One hundred thousand square feet of muslin was required for the making of these same diffusers and twenty-five thousand square feet of canvas form the walls. Ten thousand feet of rope and seven tons of sash weights are used in operating the diffusers and walls.

Forty Kegs of Nails Used

Sixty thousand feet of lumber and seventy-five thousand surface feet of flooring were used. Forty kegs of nails hold this lumber in place.

The new stage covers a thriving garden of tropical plans and the famous Lasky tank where so many effective water scenes have been filmed in the past. Thanks to these two adjuncts it will be possible to film within the four walls of this stage, practically every type of story ever written.

The stage boasts several structural improvements designed to aid in the efficient staging of pictures. Double diffusers—black and white in complete sets—make it possible to operate it as either a dark or light stage. Another departure in construction is the equipment of sliding doors by which all entrances and exits are covered.

The stage was appropriately dedicated by a successful employees' dance held on the eve of its entrance into practical service. Credit for the notable structure goes to Victor H. Clarke under whose personal supervision it was erected; Charles F. Eyton, general manager of Famous Players-Lasky West Coast activities; and James Scutter, Lasky studio superintendent.

Powers Projectors for the Rochester Schools

Frank Davidson, branch manager of the Independent Movie Supply Company, 464 Pearl street, Buffalo, N. Y. has been awarded the contract by the Rochester Board of Education to install Powers' machines and equipment in the schools of that city.

Mr. Davidson also announces that Frank Amendola, through the Niagara Falls Equipment company, has purchased two Powers' high intensity projection machines for his new Amendola Theatre which is being erected on East Ninth street and which, it is expected, will open about February 1.

The Independent Generating Plant An Insurance Policy Against Panic

A FEATURE of the development of the modern picture theatre is the increased utilization, by far-sighted exhibitors, of private generating or isolated lighting plants.

These are installed not always with the idea of being relied upon to furnish the sole current for house sign and projection lighting, as in moderate sized houses in rural communities where the public service supply of electricity is absent or unsatisfactory, but simply as a precautionary measure.

The reason for their installation in houses even in metropolitan sections is that they constitute a precaution against interruption of projection, or even worse, of the house lights being extinguished by any unforeseen break in the public service supply.

Panic Insurance

Such a private generating plant constitutes so satisfactory an insurance against panic or annoyance in event of the house lighting failing that progressive exhibitors regard their cost as a profitable investment, by reason of the feeling of security which they give the management, even should their services never be called upon.

As one up-to-date exhibitor stated, during a recent visit to the MOVING PICTURE WORLD office, "I don't grudge a cent of the cost for such an installation even if I never have to use it. In fact, I would be mighty glad if I never used it, but the very fact that I have it and that it is ready for use and that no matter what happens to my main wiring or the central station there will never be a panic in my house, is worth all the outfit cost me."

Such an installation, that will take care of the projection in the moderate sized house and all of the exit lighting and a certain portion of the house lighting in time of emergency, is far superior and may be much more quickly brought into operation than a system of auxiliary gas illumination.

Homer Made Hardware Display of Simplexes

The American Amusement Company, operators of several chain Minnesota houses recently placed an order with The Teco Products Mfg. Co., 245 Loeb Arcade, Minneapolis, Minn., for two types "S" Simplex projectors in one of their Mankato theatres.

Realizing that a display of these would mean considerable publicity for his company and that it would also be the means of the public getting a veiw of a projector at close range, Geo. J. Homer, Chief Projectionist for the American Amusement Company, made arrangements with one of the leading hardware stores to display the Simplexes in its show windows.

With the installation of the above two projectors, all of the theatres operated by the American Amusement Company at Mankato, Grand, Lyric and Orpheum, are now Simplex equipped.

The Teco Products Mfg. Company state that the City of La Crosse, Wisconsin has six theatres, three of which are operated by the Cooper Amusement Company and three by the La Crosse Theatre Company, all of which have Simplex Projectors installed.

IN J. M. BARRIE'S PLAY

"THE LITTLE MINISTER"

BABBIE is on the screen at last!

The famous heroine of J. M. Barrie's great novel and play is brought to life by Betty Compson.

You remember Miss Compson in "The Miracle Man." And in "At the End of the World."

Only Paramount could secure the author's permission to film his great story. Because only Paramount could produce it as it deserves.

And the Paramount Picture "The Little Minister" is worthy of the author, worthy of Paramount.

A great director, Penrhyn Stanlaws, made it. No expense was spared to make it a perfect entertainment.

Your patrons will want to see this Paramount Picture. Don't make a mistake. They won't forgive you!

Dear Sir:-

I am only too glad to congratulate the Cosmopolitan Company on its late releases. This year's product shows a wonderful improvement over the former productions, which is quite a remarkable statement when you take into consideration the fact that Cosmopolitan has produced probably some of the most wonderful pictures that have ever been portrayed on the silver screen.

I greatly appreciated ENCHANTMENT. The delicate symbolism of the play is most pleasing. The modern system of lighting and the artistic beauty embodied in the settings were really enchanting. The theme of the play, with its careful delineation of characters shows what can be done when real literary tactics are applied with sense and consideration to the plays for the silver screen.

In JUST AROUND THE CORNER you have given us a character story so true to life that the realism gets under the skin and makes one cry and laugh at the same time. It reminds of HUMORESQUE, but is better. It reminds us of OVER THE HILL, but it avoids the sensational. Yet it is really "meaty" with those delicious morsels which move our finer emotions.

Again I must congratulate your Corporation for choosing plays of such a nature that the censors need not worry. In the long run you will find that you are making no error by following this line, for hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of valuable scenes are scrapped by the censors scissors yearly, which is a financial fact to be considered and appreciated.

Hoping that you will continue to follow your line of producing more of these wonderful character plays, I remain,

Most sincerely yours,

RAB:FH

Ralph Connor's books are popular because he writes stories that when once started are so thrilling they cannot be dropped.

A Ralph Connor picture is a great box office attraction for the same reason. It has ACTION from the beginning to the end.

"Cameron of the Royal Mounted"—the story of a young man who left Scotland for the Canadian Northwest, to escape arrest for something he did not do—his joining the Mounted Police—his dismissal because of the Scotland crime and his thrilling capture of the real culprit, embraces a series of exciting adventures that will bring any audience to their feet.

Advertising
vs.
Publicity

Publicity may convey information admirably and still fall short of good advertising. Publicity is usually narrative, while advertising, in addition, carries the word of command.

The news item in this morning's paper announced a parade, a launching, or the coming of a heat wave.

An advertisement of the same event would give the same information plus a direct invitation for you to attend; box-office prices; connecting train schedule and, perhaps — the assortment of hot-weather garments to be had at Blank & Company's.

More people READ "Publicity"—more people ACT in response to advertising.

The most primitive advertising proves best the "law of mental domination," for the unsupported command to alone, but oft repeated, has in many cases compelled a national following.

"Buy Blank's Biscuits"

"Will Chalk Up a Hit With Any Kind of Audience Anywhere" —Variety

Read what the trade experts say:

WILL MAKE A HIT

"They say that Chaplin taught little Jackie Coogan to act before the camera. If so, Jackie hasn't forgotten. In 'My Boy,' Jackie is the same wistful, lovable kid, still unspoiled.

"There is a pretty, simple heart interest story. A series of alternately humorous and sentimental scenes. All that is necessary to record in the way of praise for the feature is that Claude Gillingwater is cast for the role of the old captain. One would have to be without a heart not to be moved by the love of the "old man" for the child and its reciprocation.

" 'My Boy' will chalk up a hit with any kind of an audience anywhere in the world."—Variety.

JACKIE TRULY WONDERFUL

"Little Jackie Coogan, who leaped suddenly into the limelight of film fame through his great performance with Charlie Chaplin in 'The Kid,' lives up to the reputation he gained through every foot of this picture. He is a truly wonderful juvenile, his comedy work is not only enjoyable, but he possesses a keen sense of dramatic values and there is nothing forced or unnatural about his acting. 'My Boy' is rich in mirth-provoking situations but there is a strong undercurrent of pathos running through the plot and the tiny star proves himself as potent in bringing tears to the eyes of an audience as he is in making them laugh. That the picture will win widespread popularity cannot be doubted. Its appeal hits young and old alike and exhibitors will make no mistake in booking it.

"No one can help feeling sympathy for the quaint, adorable little hero of the story. The humorous episodes are all intensely amusing, the local atmosphere throughout is colorful.

"The small star is fully equal to all demands made upon him and is sure to delight his numerous admirers. The action moves at a rapid pace from first to last."—Exhibitor's Trade Review.

AN IDEAL FEATURE

"The feature picture at the Strand is an ideal one for Christmas week. The picture has plenty of laughs and a few tearful moments. It shows Jackie Coogan doing all the little household tasks he learned so well from Charlie Chaplin. We can never see him without feeling that he is closely related to the comedian. He does some very good bits of acting, much better than in his last film, and it seems as if he has now made a real place for himself on the screen. He is a most adorable baby. Claude Gillingwater is good as the old sailor."—New York Telegraph.

JACKIE WINS ALL

"Jackie Coogan has never more indisputably asserted his right to be starred than he does in 'My Boy.' Jackie is possessed of so adorable a personality that he wins everyone.

"The last scene where the policeman, the inspection officer, the old sea captain and the newly found grandmother want the boy at the same moment is an example of great drama. The direction is splendid." Moving Picture World.

THEY'LL ALL LIKE IT

"Little Jackie Coogan is delighting a host of admirers at the New York Strand —providing a fine lot of laughs. 'My Boy' has a good deal of heart interest. You ought to be able to do good business with it. Old and young will like it and they'll be delighted with the young star. Whatever exploitation you accord the picture ought to prove worth while when you count up the receipts. There is real appeal in the kid stuff, and the laughs and touches of pathos are mingled in a fashion that offers a happy combination."—Wid's.

COOGAN SCORES HEAVILY

"Good entertainment with heart interest simply and unaffectedly played and never carried to the point of exaggeration. Jackie Coogan, that wonder boy of 'The Kid' 'and Peck's Bad Boy,' appears in another pleasing comedy-drama.

"As in his former vehicles, Coogan scores heavily and it is a picture that will tickle the youngsters mightily."—Exhibitor's Herald.

"Our hat is off to King Vidor for giving us a realistic train wreck. It is one of the most thrilling and convincing disasters ever pictured on the screen. And there is a race down a rapids over a falls that is quite as nerve tingling. Lloyd Hughes does some of the best work of his career. Madge Bellamy is especially pleasing in an able cast. "Hobart Bosworth pictures occupy the place on the screen that the stories of Conrad or Masefield poems do in literature. They have a splash and tang of salt about them which make them unique. Bosworth draws the character with strong, clean lines.

"The Silent Call"

An unforgettable picture that is making everyone talk—Millions are waiting to see it, having read the story from which it was adapted, "The Cross Pull," in the Saturday Evening Post. Written by the famous author, Hal. G. Evarts.

Jane Murfin Production

Distributed by Associated
First National Pictures, Inc.

Read what the critics say:

"Grown-ups and kiddies alike enjoyed seeing Strongheart, the famous police dog with such a marvelous war record, in 'The Silent Call' playing this week at the Liberty theatre. The film is excellent in both the plot and photography and acting, a triumvirate that does not always go together.

"One could use all the adjectives in the dictionary and a few that are not, in describing the star actor, Strongheart, and then fail to tell it all.

"Strongheart's training as a police dog of Belgium before the war and the rigorous discipline to which he was held during the war made the picture possible. In his acting he is superb and goes through the whole catalog of emotions as well as if not better than the average human being. The picture is an argument against those who claim that a dog cannot reason or think, for Strongheart certainly does both and does them well."

"Strongheart, a dog, is one of the best screen actors this writer has ever seen. He is a master of pantomime.

'He stands trial before human friends. Regretfully, they sentence him to death. That is a great scene. The dog hangs his head in shame. He beseeches his judges for mercy. No human ever mirrored such emotion for the screen.

"Returning to the savage state, he mates with a wolf. Then one day while he is foraging for food for his family a man blasts his home with dynamite. There is pathos in the scene of the dog's return. He tries to dig into the ruins. Exhausted, he stretches his length upon the ground and buries his face in his paws.

"Then there's a real battle. He wallowed the man on the ground and stripped his clothes from him. No man who sees the film would want to trade places with the villain."

—Cincinnati Post.

"'The Silent Call,' at the Liberty, is noteworthy as the first appearance on the screen of Strongheart, a European police dog, whose first work in pictures places him in the rank of a star.

"The picture is a screen adaptation of "The Cross Pull," a magazine story, and calls for just such a dog as Strongheart to play the leading role. The novelty of having a dog play the principal role throughout the picture and the excellence of Strongheart's acting form the principal appeal in the picture.

"The settings are beautiful and since practically all of the story takes place out of doors, snow peaks, streams and meadows make an attractive background for the unfolding of the plot. The story is straight melodrama, but the audiences seem to like it immensely and applaud in great excitement when the heroine is rescued by the dog in a thrilling fight."

The Big Man From the Outside

CHIEF among the industry's present discussions is the talk over the invitation extended to a big man of affairs, a national figure, a recognized man of executive strength to become either the president of the new producers' and distributors' organization or the chairman of its board of directors.

There is by no means a unanimous opinion in the matter, due, possibly, to the heavy silence maintained by the prime movers in the plan. The industry at large is a bit hazy (no pun intended) over the situation, and this condition will continue until a statement is authoritatively made. Possibly this will be made by the new big man from the outside when he decides to accept the offer.

Several facts stand out. One of these has been the inability of the producers and distributors to agree upon one of their own number, who fully met their conception of a man who could represent them and their part of the picture business before the world at large. We believe there are several men in our business fitted for this responsibility, but in each instance his business affiliations would interfere with his unanimous selection.

Another fact is the likelihood that the leader would also have to be an arbitrator. In the conflict of interest arising between rival companies he might be called upon to decide questions involving great financial loss to one company or another. Such a decision would be accepted unquestionably, with better grace if it were made by one who not only commanded the respect of all concerned, but one who hadn't a dollar's worth of interest in the moving picture business or especially in any of the companies that might be affected by the decision.

What bearing the selection of the arbiter-representative would have on exhibitor problems is not presented, but it seems likely that an authority of this calibre would be welcomed by exhibitors if they felt they could lay before him any just grievance and secure a fair, full and impartial hearing.

Possibly it is in the minds of those favoring the plan to provide a way out of the wilderness of dispute, of slander, of malice, of misunderstanding and pernicious disturbance which is a curse upon our business and a detriment to the sound progress of the exhibitor, the distributor and the producer. None save an ambitious few profit by this eternal turmoil which lowers our business to the level of cheap ward politics and makes a hero out of the man with the loudest voice and a leader of the shouter with the snappiest oratory.

Whether it will be Will H. Hayes or another, we believe his success will only be possible with the full and complete support of the producers and distributors and the sympathetic cooperation of the industry as a whole. The chief desire of the leadership of our business is fair play within, a square deal to the exhibitor and to the producer as well, and then a united industry able to insist upon fair play and to get fair play from the lawmakers and the public.

The move is regarded by many as the most definite evidence of the industry's keen desire for progress, and as such we will regard it until we are convinced to the contrary.

Arthur James

High Spots in the Week's News

WHILE Mr. Exhibitor is attending business sessions in Albany on February 14, 15 and 16, his better half will be having the time of her life. That is provided for, assured and made certain by a committee of which Mrs. George Roberts is chairman and Mrs. Jack Leonard and Miss Noma Suckno are secretaries. The program will include teas, sightseeing trips, vaudeville and film entertainment and that highly touted Movie Ball. Rather soft for the women, eh, what?

Chicago exhibitors have been planning to decrease the pay of their projectionists, effective January 11, and now the men come forth with a demand for a 15 per cent. increase. Exhibitors are said to be willing to close down rather than pay more money in salaries. Negotiations are at a standstill.

He saw a possibility that admission prices will be reduced in the U. S. and Canada.

Paramount Celebrates Tenth Anniversary Beginning March 5—Two Weeks of Solid Bookings—Advertising Campaign Planned

PARAMOUNT is going to celebrate its birthday. Ten years ago Adolph Zukor founded the Famous Players Film Company, the parent company of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation known throughout the world wherever pictures are shown as Paramount, and the organization is preparing to celebrate its tenth anniversary.

The birthday celebration will start Sunday, March 5, and will be of two weeks' duration. Following the lines of the annual Paramount Week, it is planned by General Manager S. R. Kent and his assistants in the department of distribution to book theatres throughout the country solid with Paramount pictures.

Paramount district and branch managers have been apprised of the general plan and are already enthusiastically at work mapping out the details to be followed in their respective territories. Spurred on to greater endeavor instead of being daunted by the success of the last Paramount Week, when all records for the annual event, both as to gross business and the number of theatres participating, were broken, the entire sales organization is determined to at least approximate twice that business during the two weeks of the anniversary.

For March 5, the opening of the anniversary, Paramount announces day and date release of some of its biggest productions. These include Cecil B. DeMille's "Fool's Paradise," Gloria Swanson in "Her Husband's Trademark," Wallace Reid in "The World's Champion"; and "The Dragon's Claw," the first of the spectacular UFA series, "The Mistress of the World." George Fitzmaurice's production, "Forever," adapted from "Peter Ibbetson," will also be available at that time. Hundreds of extra prints of these productions are being prepared to satisfy the demand for simultaneous showing.

Double-truck advertising announcing the anniversary event will be used in national publications and through the two weeks' advertising space in more than six hundred daily newspapers will be utilized as part of the big campaign now being prepared by the publicity and advertising department.

It was early in 1912 that Adolph Zukor set out boldly to reorganize the business of producing motion pictures. He was a successful exhibitor at the time.

Organizing his company, Adolph Zukor's first picture to be released was "Queen Elizabeth," with no less a celebrity than Sarah Bernhardt in the title role. It was not the first five-reel production ever made, but it was the first production to be released by any company under a fixed policy of making and distributing pictures of that approximate length and quality as a standard.

Other features of similar length and starring such people as James K. Hackett, Mrs. Fiske, Mary Pickford, James O'Neill and Lily Langtry followed. Their appearance attracted other producers with similar ideals into the field. Among them was Jesse L. Lasky, who interested Cecil B. DeMille, at that time a successful stage producer of the Belasco school, and others in the organization of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company. Having scraped together a small amount of capital they purchased the film rights to Edwin Milton Royle's play, "The Squaw Man."

Going to California, Mr. Lasky and his associates made "The Squaw Man," with Dustin Farnum in the stellar role. The Lasky studio, Paramount's huge West Coast production center of today, was built around the crude little building where "The Squaw Man" was filmed. The present plant affords more than twenty-five times as much floor space, covering two city blocks in Hollywood, while the nearby Lasky ranch of 1,200 acres affords a wide variety of scenery for exterior backgrounds.

To Hollywood at about that time went also other producing organizations, among them the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company and Bosworth, Inc. In July, 1916, the Famous Players Film Company and the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company were combined under the name of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The Paramount Pictures Corporation had been formed for the distribution of the product of the Lasky and Bosworth companies. On January 1, 1917, the Paramount organization was taken over by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Bosworth, Inc., and Pallas Pictures, the Morosco output, having previously been acquired. Later the Artcraft Pictures Corporation was amalgamated with Famous Players-Lasky, as still more recently was the Realart Pictures Corporation.

With the absorption of the Paramount company and the turning of the product of the combined companies for release through the exchanges of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the former organization disappeared as a separate entity, but the name was wisely retained as the trade name for all the features released by the present corporation. Today, Paramount pictures made in the huge studios of the company in New York, Los Angeles and London, are distributed through thirty branch offices in the United States, six in Canada, nine in Great Britain, two in France, one in Denmark, one in Belgium, five in Australia, one in New Zealand, one in Mexico, two in Brazil, and on contract to every other country in the civilized world.

Lest We Forget

IF it be that the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry is to pass into the discard and make way for newer bodies with a similar purpose in view it should not be permitted to dissolve without some recognition of its service to this industry. Under the leadership of William A. Brady it has proceeded constructively and efficiently—not a perfect body, not an organization able to do what everybody wanted done, or, in fact, some things that should have been done, but nevertheless valuable beyond measure in its work.

Mr. Brady's task has been as arduous as it has been thankless. He has at great sacrifices of time and money served this industry unselfishly. We had occasion to criticize Mr. Brady for what appeared to us as a standstill policy, but when we saw that policy abandoned and a hard-working, full-speed-ahead program inaugurated we were even more frank in our enthusiasm and praise than we had been in our censure.

The repeal of the five per cent. tax we have justly attributed to Mr. Brady and his associates because we had the facts in hand and we believed that in so important an achievement the credit should be given fairly, and that any other course would have been dishonest. If Mr. Brady and the National Association had done nothing else the decoration of the legion of honor of the industry should be awarded to the organization and the individual.

It so happens that this tax repeal is the crowning achievement to a veritable mountain of service, and for us, an industry, to pass it by unnoticed and unrecognized would be to stamp ourselves as wholly without gratitude or appreciation. Mr. Brady can rest content with a sense of fine and unselfish labor conscientiously performed, but the industry has no right to let this important labor pass as insignificant.

We believe that the hearty thanks of our industry should find some form of expression that will be both public and satisfying. A. J.

Harold Lloyd Has Bought Him a Business Band Wagon for All Good Boys to Ride On

By WILLIAM J. REILLY

IF we were writing this story for "Screamland" or any of the fan classics we would throw the Underwood (no adv) into high and reel off some six-cylinder soft stuff as to how Harold Lloyd looks under the glow of the Biltmore indirect lighting system, what Arrow collar he prefers, and how he takes his Cliquot Club gingerale.

But we are writing it for Moving Picture World than which there is no better trade paper so we will throw the typewriter into low for the lowdown on Mr. Lloyd. Because why? Because from our own Coast-to-Coast experience in bearding the Empy World reader in his box-office we know that Mr. Exhibitor is Mr. Showman and therefore Mr. Business Man and therefore wants to know just what Harold Lloyd is going to mean to his box-office in 1922.

For instance, although we might say here, with great pleasure and great truth, "Harold Lloyd is a bright young man—twenty-eight years old and going stronger than John W. Walker," the twelve-minute egg in the box-office would reply, "That's all right. But is it going to help me buy that new organ so I can knock the opposition cold?" And we might say, "Wonderful personality—Harold Lloyd—wonderful smile, modest unassuming. He's a violet but knows more about his business than a lot of the loud lilies." To which we can already hear the query, "Fine! What I want to know is—Does the wife get the sedan she's had her eye on, and does the boy go to prep school, and do I get that extra projection machine Daddy Keyser tells me I need?"

All right! Here is the lowdown. Tell the wife to be looking up some Sunday motor excursions. Tell the boy he's going to Lawrenceville or Swarthmore Prep or Phillips Exeter or any other good one he picks out and you—you keep your eye on "Better Equipment" in Empy World and pick the winner for your projection room.

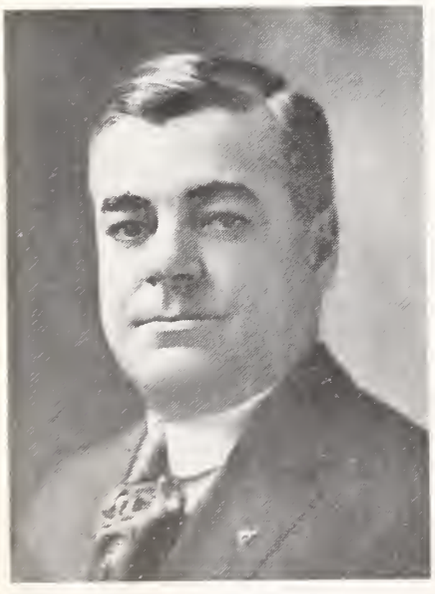
Hear that 'bus coming down the road, rearin' and tearin', all twelve hitting like Jack Dempsey's right? That's the Harold Lloyd band wagon. Get aboard. Harold came to town last week to buy the 'bus, and it's a brand spankin' new band wagon, 1922 Pathe model. He has his route for the next twelve months all mapped out. Four stops for four comedies and the showman who wants to give his bank roll a ride to several figures will get aboard.

Here is gilt-edged security dope in a portable paragraph. The Harold Lloyd public will be assured of at least four comedies in 1922. To say that they will be good comedies would be saddling a winner with unnecessary lead. In all probability the comedies will be longer than two reels. "A Sailor Made Man," the opening of which Mr. Lloyd saw at the Capitol, is a four-reel picture, and a successful four-reel picture. Think of the successful long-distance comedies of this particular school and see how quickly you can make the count.

The lengthening of the Harold Lloyd comedies comes in answer to a real demand for it. Exhibitors in many theatres have already shown what they think of the Lloyd brand of comedy by featuring his two-reelers over the 'feature." The time is not far away—in fact it is here—when showmen will present comedies such as Harold Lloyd makes as the meat of the program. Harold Lloyd wants them to do it consistently. So he intends to give them the wherewithal—the makins. He knows how.

He puts a box-office foot rule on every piece of business, every gag, that goes into his pictures. Besides, every picture is previewed at some representative theatre with absolutely no advertising or exploitation—"cold turkey"—tried on the dog, given the prussic acid test and the hydrochloric acid test, and every other test, and when the picture comes to your screen, the chances are 100 to 1 it's a money-maker. You've often heard of the business of being funny. Harold Lloyd knows it. K-N-O-W-S, knows.

And tack this under the glass-topped desk or on the ceiling if that is where you look for the Big Idea: If you have not met Harold Lloyd, himself, personal, you have something coming to you. That's an old line, but it's good. In this case very good. And that's the first "very" we've used since Grant took the breastworks.



ROY S. SMITH
Executive Manager, Albany Chamber of Commerce, who is co-operating with the Albany Managers' Association in perfecting details of the coming New York State convention of exhibitors

Are You Superstitious? See What Happened to Us

When, last week, a printer broke the mirror over the water tank in the composing room, a gent in our midst shivered with apprehension. Something was sure to happen. We laughed scornfully. It did. Excellent pictures of Roy S. Smith, executive manager of the Albany, N. Y., Chamber of Commerce, and William Berinstein, Elmira exhibitor, appeared in the issue as per schedule. But—and here's where the mirror did its dirty work—the captions identified Mr. Smith as Mr. Berinstein and Mr. Berinstein as Mr. Smith. So we hasten, this week, to print the cuts again, properly captioned. And like Max Linder in "Seven Years' Bad Luck," we are hereafter dead set against breaking mirrors and accepting third lights.

By way of explanation, Mr. Berinstein and Mr. Smith are co-operating in the arrangements for that convention you have read about in MOVING PICTURE WORLD for some weeks. The date is February 14, 15 and 16. The place is Albany, N. Y. The person whose attendance is earnestly desired is you.—Editor.

Takes Over the Pearl

Walter Powers has taken over the Pearl Theatre in Albany, N. Y., which has been operated by Gardner Brothers. The house seats about 500 persons. Three new houses have just been opened in the Albany district. These include the Casino in Schenectady, a thousand-seat first-run house, owned by G. W. Glenn, Jr.; the Smalley Theatre in Cooperstown, owned by William Smalley, and which seats about 500, and the Senate in Chatham.

Reorganization Finished, Wid Gunning Makes Important Statement of Policy

AN interesting announcement was made by Wid Gunning, Inc., this week. Mr. Gunning, on his recent trip to the West Coast, made changes in the personnel of the Chicago, Los Angeles and San Francisco offices.

The statement declares that Mr. Gunning placed the offices in those territories in the hands of men of the type that he desires to have associated with him in such a broadly co-operative proposition as he expected later to announce. These changes, it is said, had been delayed only by the fact that Mr. Gunning had not sooner been able to visit these offices.

Ben Simpson, among the best known figures in the East and on the West Coast, and one of the organizers of Realart's exchanges with Jack Woody, is now carrying the Wid Gunning banner in San Francisco. George Slater's appointment to the Los Angeles office was announced while Mr. Gunning was on the Coast. Harry Willard, the clean-cut and popular Realart representative in Chicago since that organization was started, has been secured to handle the Windy City territory for Wid Gunning, Inc.

The New Propositon

After returning to New York and making a few other minor changes in the personnel, Mr. Gunning decided that he now had throughout his organization the type of men whom he desired to be associated with him in such a proposition as he was about to announce. He then placed before the men throughout the country and the new men in Chicago, Los Angeles and San Francisco what he declares the greatest selling practical innovation ever established in the industry.

"As Mr. Gunning sees it," the official statement declares, "the Wid Gunning machine is actually, and in fact only, a selling and exploitation service charging a percentage of the gross for its operation.

"There is naturally in such an organization a certain amount of fixed overhead, such as branch office accounting, shipping and office routine. Mr. Gunning has definitely segregated his productive and non-productive forces so that the managers and salesmen do not now have the burden of the accounting particularly placed upon their shoulders, but these men whose work it is to sell film are definitely instructed that the selling of films is their chief and specific duty.

Straight Percentage

"In addition to the segregating of these departments in this simple and fundamentally correct manner, Mr. Gunning has given all his sales managers and salesmen a straight percentage proposition, which gives them an opportunity to earn two and three times what any film company has ever paid its salesmen and sales managers. Mr. Gunning is continuing the payment of the managers' and salesmens' salaries and expenses, paying these sums now as a drawing account against their percentage, so that the men, under the new system, have everything which they had in the past, with the additional incentive of an exceptional chance to make very large sums, providing they work in a manner that brings in returns.

"There have been various bonuses and percentage arrangements in the film industry, but they have been regulated in such a manner that the opportunities of the sales managers and salesmen have been limited. Overhead branch office expense has been calculated, or territory for the individual has been limited or altered, so that his earning capacity was held at a very conservative figure. Mr. Gunning, in his proposition to his men, has arranged a payment of percentage which practically gives to the men immediately their share of the profits of the selling corporation, which is entirely in accordance with his earlier statements that Wid Gunning, Inc., was really only a co-operative distribution machine wherein the exhibitor's dollar is divided between the actual creator and the actual sales force.

As High As 15 Per Cent.

"Mr. Gunning has arranged a sliding scale of percentages paid direct to the sales workers without any deduction of branch or home office overhead charges of from 8 to 15 per cent. Anyone who knows anything of the workings of film sales will quickly realize that this is a very large percentage for selling."

In discussing the organization's official announcement to members of the trade press, Mr. Gunning declared: "My reason for adopting this method of operation is that I am endeavoring to give the highest incentive to the salesmen who sell, for, in all events, they are actually the men who do the work and maintain the necessary contact between the real creator of productions and the theatre owner. Essentially, what I am doing is placing the men who are selling in my organization in business for themselves and doing this in the most attractive form possible. For Wid Gunning, Inc., pays all expense of overhead charges, weekly salaries and expenses to managers and salesmen, and supplies the productions—which means that the men conducting the branch business are taking no risk—and after that Wid Gunning, Inc., gives to these men the profits of that business.

"It seems to me that this is a needed innovation in the film business. In practice, this method of operation actually permits the exhibitor to know that when he spends his dollar with a salesman for Wid Gunning, Inc., that he is actually doing business with that salesman and the real creator of the picture and nobody else. This is a most healthy condition, one that certainly lends towards the greatest progress in the making of better pictures. From a hard-headed business viewpoint I think it is splendid business for producers to have me paying salesmen so liberally, since, while the salesmen will make more money than they would be able to in a position on a straight salary basis, at the same time, if the salesman is making more money for himself, he is, by his added effort, making more money for the producer."

Bishop Checkmates Open Sunday Move in Mechanicville

After everything appeared to have been settled assuring Sunday picture shows for Mechanicville, N. Y., Bishop Gibbons, of Albany, threw a monkey wrench in the machinery with the result that late Monday afternoon, Louis Buettner, who was interested in the project, withdrew the ordinance and as a result the city will have no Sunday shows.

It appears that Bishop Gibbons sent a letter to the Rev. Father Howard, of Mechanicville, protesting against Sunday shows. This resulted in Father Howard securing two of the five councilmen to pledge themselves as against Sunday shows. When Samuel Berman, secretary of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of the state, arrived in Mechanicville at the request of Mr. Buettner on Monday, things looked so dubious that it was decided to withdraw the proposed ordinance.

In a meeting at the city hall during the day, many persons expressed themselves as heartily in favor of motion pictures, saying that they were clean and wholesome, the main objections centering around the assertion that Sunday shows would "become counter attractions to the churches."

Studio for Semon

A separate and complete studio for Larry Semon and his company is now under course of construction at Vitagraph's Hollywood lot. The work was started just before Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, left for the East this week. Two of the large stages are to be used. One will be completely covered and it is this one which is to house the dressing rooms, appliances for aerial work and equipment for production during inclement weather. In all, about 20,000 square feet will be occupied by the new studio.

Chicago Theatres May Shut Down If Operators Persist in Demand for 15 Per Cent. Wage Increase

CHICAGO faces a shut-down of every picture theatre in the city as a result of drastic demands made by operators. The 15 per cent. increase in salary demanded by the Operators' Union has been definitely defeated by a committee from the Chicago Motion Picture Theatre Owners and one from the Allied Amusements Association, who have been holding a series of meetings for two months with the heads of the Motion Picture Theatre Operators' Union to arange the wage agreement for 1922. The present wage agreement, by which the operators receive $1.50, terminates January 11 and exhibitors contemplated a decrease in operators' wages.

A joint meeting of the M.P.T.O.C. and A.A.A. held Wednesday was attended by 150 exhibitors who professed a willingness to close their theatres. Thomas Reynolds, president of the Operators' Union, and several members, were admitted, and Mr. Reynolds read the demand for an increase, basing it on higher living expenses. He said it would be a good thing for the theatres to close if business seems poor, for the city is greatly overseated.

Full Authority

After his departure, the motion was made and approved that as a committee had been appointed and had done its best in affecting a settlement, the committee be given full authority to make any settlement possible, whether it involved closing the theatres or any other measure.

Another series of meetings took place between the operators and committee, and the committee reported at the second meeting of the M.P.T.O.C. and A.A.A. held Friday that the demand for the increase had been abandoned but certain restrictions would be imposed upon the exhibitors, which, if persisted in, would mean the closing of every theatre in the city, for the exhibitors would not submit to the hardships imposed. The 200 exhibitors at the meeting again approved the motion that the committee be given full power to make any settlement, making the restriction that no increase be allowed.

"We have the backing of every theatre in the city of Chicago," said Peter Schaeffer, head of the committee from the Allied Amusements Association. "We will close down every theatre in the city whether or not the exhibitor is a member of an association, or operate on the open shop plan if the operators impose further hardships on this industry."

Goldenberg Wants Letters

For two years Louis E. Goldenberg has been ill as the result of service in the army during the war. The former manager of the Forest and Arcade Theatres in Cincinnati is now in the U. S. Hospital at Great Lakes, Ill., and wants very much to receive letters from his old time film friends, he tells MOVING PICTURE WORLD in a letter on Red Cross stationery. Let's go!

Obtains Court Order

An order requiring Daniel G. Tomlinson to show cause why he should not supply the Fox Film Corporation with a bill of particulars, in his suit to recover $4,650 salary, alleged to be due him, has been obtained by the film corporation, from Justice William P. Burr, of the New York Supreme Court. Tomlinson was representative in charge of the Fox interests, in France and Belgium.

C. M. Hepworth Finds Good Demand Exists Here for English Made Motion Pictures

AN invasion of the American market with English productions has been determined upon by Cecil M. Hepworth, the English producer, as a result of the demand he has found exists here, during a four months' tour of this country, which he has just completed. The enlargement of the Hepworth Studios to quadruple its present facilities has already been started, as a result of the trip, and within the next six months, one of several propositions that have been submitted to the producer will probably have resulted in the regular release of Hepworth picture plays in the United States.

The enthusiasm with which "Alf's Button," the initial Hepworth picture play to be shown in this country, now being distributed by Associated First National Pictures, has been greeted by critics and exhibitors in this country, is one of the prime reasons for Mr. Hepworth's belief that there is a big field here for English-made productions. A second factor is the number of propositions that have been submitted to him since his arrival in New York four weeks ago, for distribution of his entire product in this country.

Mr. Hepworth has refused all, excepting two, of the offers he has received for the distribution of his product here. One of these offers is from one of the largest of the national distributing organizations, and the other is a proposition to put them out on a state rights basis. Both of them are admittedly attractive to Mr. Hepworth, but it is not probable that he will make an immediate decision.

SCENES FROM "THE WALL FLOWER," FEATURI NG COLLEEN MOORE. A GOLDWYN RELEASE

Fourteen Reels of "Foolish Wives" Allow Few Preliminary Flourishes

ON September 1, 1920, New York was led to expect a formal presentation of Erich von Stroheim's third super-feature, "Foolish Wives." After waiting a year and three months and absorbing weekly bulletins as to the magnificence, expense and artistry of the only million dollar picture ever made in these United States, New York on Wednesday evening saw it.

The length of the picture, fourteen reels, convinced Andrew J. Cobe, manager of the Central Theatre, who made the presentation, that it would be foolhardy to take up any time in preliminary flourishes or atmospheric effects. Twenty bars of music, from the thirty-five-piece orchestra under the direction of Frank Cork, was the only prelude.

Incidental music had been especially composed for the picture by Sigmund Romberg, composer of "Bombo," "Blossom Time," "Maytime" and all the Winter Garden Passing Shows since that of 1914.

Miss George There

Prominent in the night's gathering was Maude George, who plays one of the leading roles. Miss George came to New York especially for the opening performance, as did Mr. and Mrs. von Stroheim. Another transcontinental first-nighter was Miss Florence Lawrence, the critic of the Los Angeles Examiner.

On account of the tempestuous nature of the weather, the audience was unable to appreciate to its full the elaborate lobby and ingenious decorations which had been designed by Mr. Cobe and Harry Reichenbach. On either side of the entrance were striking panels with the name "Foolish Wives" in raised letters in imitation of white gold. Over the center of the doorway were paintings of four of the principals, Maude George, Erich von Stroheim, Miss du Pont and Mae Busch, and directly beneath them an ingeniously contrived miniature representation of the big gambling scene with the roulette wheel electrically operated and the figures around the gaming table.

Real Paintings

Inside the lobby were huge picture frames with real paintings set deep in frames illuminated with two-color lights in a shadow box effect. The six paintings on either side of the lobby took up virtually the entire wall space

Another striking feature, and the only one which was allowed to obtrude itself upon the gaze of the first-night audience, was the inspiring stage setting which had been designed by Gates & Morange under the orders of Mr. Cobe. This beautiful color scheme of cote-d'azure was admirably designed to put the audience immediately into the atmosphere of the Monte Carlo setting.

Prominent in Attendance

Among those who attended the opening of the production were Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt of 1 Sutton Place; Murray Hulburt, president of the Board of Aldermen; Thomas J. Drennan, Fire Commissioner of New York; Charles H. Sabin, president of Guaranty Trust Company; Eli Bernheim, president of Columbia Bank; M. J. A WARNING

The United States is using timber four times faster than it is growing it.

Three-fifths of this country's original timber supply is already gone.

Our supply of Southern yellow pine will be exhausted within twenty-five years at the present rate of consumption.

Furthermore, unless something is done and done quickly the total remaining stand of timber in this country will be exhausted within the next seventy-five years.

It isn't the cutting of the timber that is the trouble. It's the utter lack of practice of forestry principles and forestry conservation.

This country has never had an adequate national forestry policy!

The Snell - McCormick Bill now being heard in Washington provides for such a policy.

There isn't a business in this country that isn't going to be affected by a timber famine. That's why Moving Picture World puts these alarming facts before the motion picture industry with the earnest request that it join with the other leading industries of this country in sending an avalanche of wires and letters immediately to the House Agricultural Committee, demanding immediate action on the Snell-McCormick Bill or any other bill which will best begin to cope with this serious situation and save one of the greatest assets which any country can have—timber.

Have a heart for the future generation. Wire your Congressman and your Senator today to support this bill!

Marion Sues Hodkinson, Collins, Duell and Pawley for $500,000 Over Disposal of Stock Holdings

ALLEGING that by misrepresentation and false and fraudulent allegations, he was induced to part with his holdings in the Paramount and Progressive motion picture corporations, Frank J. Marion, who lives at Shippan Point, Conn., has filed suit in the New York Supreme Court against William W. Hodkinson, Frederick L. Collins, Holland S. Duell and Raymond Pawley, who had been treasurer of Paramount, and as a result of this alleged misrepresentation Marion avers he has been damaged in the sum of $500,000.

According to his complaint, Marion's action is the outgrowth of the formation of the Superpictures, Inc., a Delaware corporation formed in 1916 with an alleged capitalization of $9,000,000. This concern, he says, was to take over certain picture concerns and affiliate with others, among them the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Marion alleges he was told by the defendants that the Superpictures, Inc., had obtained $1,000,000 cash from a large New York banking house through the sale of its first preferred stock, and had acquired 100 per cent. of the preferred and 50 per cent. of the common stock of the Triangle Distributing Corporation, and also 12,250 shares of stock of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and the guaranty of the latter over a period of three years of the sum of $300,000, against which dividends of the Famous Players shares held by the Superpictures, Inc., were to be credited.

This and many other roseate allegations, Marion says, beguile him into parting with his holdings in the Paramount and Progressive corporations. As to the Paramount stock, Marion says it was owned by himself, Hodkinson, one of the defendants, and Alice M. Long, widow of Samuel Long, long associated with Marion in various picture enterprises, and he says all of the defendants were familiar with the value of these two concern's stocks.

Charges Misrepresentation

All these allegations, Marion says, he subsequently discovered to be untrue, and made for the purpose of inducing him to part with his holdings in the two corporations. One of the stories, Marion avers was told him, was that by acquiring the Triangle concern the Superpictures, Inc., would get from this concern in earnings $700,000 a year. Marion, through his lawyers, obtained an order for the examination before trial of Duell, who is a lawyer residing in Yonkers, N. Y., and of Collins, who he says is president of the McClure publications.

Some of the questions he wants to ask these men is what they know as to the disposition, if it ever was acquired, of the $1,000,000 the New York banking house was to turn over, how the Triangle stock and the Famous Players stock was acquired, and the alleged guaranty of the latter, and regarding an alleged deal with the McClure publications entailing an outlay of $500,000 for a national advertising campaign.

Duell has answered some of the questions and testified to the effect that the Superpictures corporation did obtain the money from the banking house, and had also acquired the Triangle stock, that he was instrumental in securing the cash for this deal, and had personally put up $400,000 of it. The acquisition of the Famous Players stock, Duell said, was paid for through an exchange of securities. Duell said he had been secretary of the Superpictures, Inc., and while refraining from stating the amount of salary he was receiving, said it was paid by an arrangement between the Superpictures and Triangle. He said that while ambitious to become a director of the Famous Players he was not allowed to be. A date for the trial of the questions involved has not been set.

Illegal Use of Seal Is Charged by the Censors

Alleged to have used the seal and serial number of the New York State Motion Picture Commission time and time again on film not submitted to the commission for inspection, an unnamed Buffalo firm may be the defendant in an action brought by the commission through the attorney-general's office in Albany, N. Y. The matter is now in the hands of Arthur E. Rose, second deputy attorney-general.

The charges follow a trip of inspection by Ansel W. Brown, who is in charge of the Albany bureau of the commission, but whose work is mainly confined to inspection trips throughout the state. The Buffalo firm is the first against which charges have been filed for alleged violations of the law.

Receivers Appointed for the Mastercraft

Judge Keating of Boston has appointed A. C. Webber, former assistant district attorney of Suffolk County, and Andrew J. Casey, acting collector of internal revenue, receivers for the Mastercraft Photoplay Corporation of Medford, Mass. This action was taken on a bill of equity brought by the Continental Products Company, of Boston, and N. A. Pelonsky, who is a stockholder in the Continental company, that claims an indebtedness of $20,000 to the Continental company on a loan.

Loew Heads Metro

Marcus Loew was elected on January 6 to the presidency of Metro Pictures Corporation, and William E. Atkinson chosen vice-president. Mr. Atkinson, hitherto general manager of the company, will continue to serve in that capacity in addition to holding office as vice-president.

The results of the election disprove the recent rumors in the industry of Metro's merging with any other picture company. The Metro policies and organization will undergo no change, it is said. Plans for production and distribution for the next six months are, Metro officials state, complete, and will in no way be affected by the recent election of officers.

Herschel Stuart Joins Gunning Home Office

Herschel Stuart, for many years associated with theatrical interests in the Southwest, and widely known in film circles, has just joined Wid Gunning, Inc., and been assigned to the home office. His experience includes practically every post offered in the administration of large film interests. His first job, when a boy, was as usher in the Dallas Opera House. He ultimately became its treasurer.

After a year's newspaper work, as special correspondent of the Dallas News and Dallas Times Herald, he became publicity writer and director of Hulsey's seven theatres of Texas. With the growth of the Hulsey chain, he became general manager of Hulsey's fourteen theatres, and finally, for the past two years, director of the Hulsey-Lynch circuit of sixty-five theatres.

Valentino Signs Paramount Contract; Lasky Names Notable Pictures Planned

THE signing of Rudolph Valentino under a three-year contract to star in Paramount pictures and the purchase of what is declared to be the greatest list of dramatic properties ever acquired for motion picture production, were announced this week by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production, just before he left for California.

"I have stated repeatedly since last summer," said Mr. Lasky, "that the only salvation for this industry during the present widespread industrial condition lay in the production of pictures bigger than any pictures ever made before. I still hold to this belief, and our production department has mapped out a program for a type of pictures which I firmly believe will give the greatest support to exhibitors at this time when widespread industrial apathy is making itself felt at the box-office.

"I appreciate thoroughly that one of the things most needed at the present time in all branches of the industry is the strictest, most unremitting economy, and we are prepared to push our economies to the limit. In the production of our pictures the same sharp campaign against extravagance and inflated costs which has been in force in our studios, will be continued in an even more intensified manner, and in announcing this program of production, big though it is, we shall not allow even the slightest excess of cost to increase the expense of our pictures. At the same time I want to make its plain that quality shall never be sacrificed.

Valentino's Vehicle

"To show that we had the courage of our convictions we made for release this season a series of productions which have been the pride of the entire Paramount organization. These pictures are among the biggest successes of the season. But we are not content to rest on this record. With the needs of the industry in mind, Paramount intends to push ahead with a program of pictures which will give the greatest possible support to exhibitors in their present great need.

"For instance, the signing of Rudolph Valentino as a Paramount star for three years insures to exhibitors who book Paramount pictures the drawing power of one of the strongest box-office personalities in the profession today. Leaping into extraordinary popularity by his work in 'The Four Horsemen,' he strengthened his hold on the public's esteem by his equally fine performance in 'The Sheik.' Today he is undoubtedly one of the screen's greatest figures.

"Mr. Valentino's first appearance under his new contract will be as the toreador in Blasco Ibanez's stirring novel and play, 'Blood and Sand.' It is a colorful story of Spanish life, centering around Spain's most picturesque institution—the bull-fight. The novel was presented this season at the Empire Theatre, in New York, with Otis Skinner in the lead.

"If Winter Comes" Bought

"We plan to give Mr. Valentino one of the greatest supporting casts ever assembled. Bebe Daniels will probably be seen as the Spanish vamp, and May McAvoy will be seen as the wife. The director has not been chosen.

"George Melford has just returned to California to produce 'The Cat That Walked Alone,' a story of strong heart appeal. Dorothy Dalton and Milton Sills will have the leading roles.

"Another big picture to go into production immediately is an adaptation of 'If Winter Comes,' A. S. M. Hutchinson's tremendously popular book, of which nearly 500,000 copies already have been sold. It will be produced by John S. Robertson in England in the actual locale used by Hutchinson. James Kirkwood will play the leading role and will be supported by a cast of well-known American players.

"The policy of using several stars in one picture will be continued. This policy has been extremely successful in several productions. Penrhyn Stanlaws' next will have a cast of stars headed by Betty Compson and Tom Moore. The picture is 'Over the Border,' an adaptation of Sir Gilbert Parker's novel, 'She of the Triple Chevron.'

"Another picture with a group of stars will be 'A Stampede Madonna,' with Jack Holt and Bebe Daniels. It is an original story of the Klondike, written by Monte Katterjohn.

The DeMilles' Plans

"William DeMille's new policy of making pictures from plays and stories of established box-office value, is now being put into effect in 'Bought and Paid For,' which is nearing completion with Agnes Ayres and Jack Holt in the leads. He will next do 'Nice People,' Rachael Crothers' comedy-drama in which Francine Larrimore has been appearing on Broadway.

"Agnes Ayres will again be starred in her next picture, 'The Ordeal,' an original story by W. Somerset Maugham. She will be directed by William D. Taylor.

"On his return from Europe Cecil B. DeMille will produce 'Manslaughter,' the successful novel by Alice Duer Miller. This picture is now being scenarized by Jeanie Macpherson and the cast calls for a group of well-known stars whose names will be made public on Mr. DeMille's return.

"George Fitzmaurice, who has just finished producing 'The Man From Home' in Italy, with a cast including James Kirkwood, Anna Q. Nilsson and Norman Kerry, will go to Egypt for the exterior scenes of his next picture, an original story of Ouida Bergere.

"Gloria Swanson is nearing the completion of 'Beyond the Rocks,' the story which Elinor Glyn wrote for her. Rudolph Valentino plays the role of the passionate lover and the director is Sam Wood. Miss Swanson will next be starred in 'The Gilded Cage,' a novelette which appeared as a comedy with music this season under the title 'The Love Dream.'

"As soon as I arrive in Los Angeles I expect to be able to announce several unusually big stories as vehicles for Wallace Reid and Thomas Meighan. Mr. Meighan's next picture will be 'Our Leading Citizen,' which George Ade wrote especially for him and on the scenario of which Mr. Ade collaborated during a stay of several weeks at the Lasky studio. Mr. Reid is now nearing the completion of 'Across the Continent,' an unusually exciting automobile story by Byron Morgan."

Carl Laemmle's Offer Brings Many Letters

Quite naturally Carl Laemmle has been intensely interested in the reaction to the bombshell he threw into the trade last week by his offer to help exhibitors who are losing money.

"Exhibitors are writing me by the hundreds," said Mr. Laemmle, "telling me what they think of Universal's offer. Many of them think there is a catch in it somewhere—it is so unlike the proposals they are constantly receiving from producers. But the great majority are full of thankfulness that one producer can be relied upon to meet exhibitors half way.

"The first letter came from William Brandt, president of the New York Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, who wrote, among other things: 'I want to congratulate you upon taking the initiative to help the exhibitor who is doing poor business. Some producers and distributors seem to think that the war is still on, and the fact that you have the guts to blaze the trail toward lower film rentals will be fully appreciated by every exhibitor.'

"That was one of the finest New Year's greetings I ever received."

William LeBaron Now Director-General of Cosmopolitan; Other Changes Made

A REORGANIZATION of the Producing Department of Cosmopolitan Productions has been effected with the designation of William Le Baron as director-general, the appointment of Verne H. Porter as scenario editor, and the appointment of Howard Irving Young as film editor.

As director-general, Mr. Le Baron, heretofore editor-in-chief of the scenario department, will be responsible for the approval of stories, for the due development and dramatic construction of the story throughout the making and editing of the picture. Mr. Le Baron, in addition to being well-known in the motion picture industry, has an enviable reputation as a dramatist. For many years he was a magazine editor.

Verne H. Porter comes to the producing company from Cosmopolitan Magazine of which he has been editor since 1918. Mr. Porter has been a newspaperman, magazine editor and scenario writer. Before his connection with the Cosmopolitan Magazine was associate editor of The Red Book, The Blue Book and The Green Book Magazines. The new scenario editor's duties are to see to the obtaining of stories, the engagement of scenario writers and the construction of scenarios.

Howard Irving Young brings to Cosmopolitan Productions, in his capacity of film editor, a ripe experience of motion pictures. He has been associated with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the old Reliance company, with Kalem, Metro, Astra-Pathe and World Film.

In the production department, under the reorganization, there will be a production board, consisting of Messrs. Joseph Urban, Le Baron, William Sistrom and Porter. There will also be an editing board, consisting of Mr. Le Baron, Mr. Young, the chief cutter and the scenario writer of each picture under consideration.

The reorganization is aimed at establishing in the producing company a division between departments, patterned roughly after the distinction in the publishing business between the editorial department and the business office. The institution has been divided into the producing department and the financial department. H. P. Carver, as general manager of the company, is in charge of the financial department with responsibility for the business conduct of Cosmopolitan Productions.

Washington Managers Ask Extension of Time for Spring-Cleaning Exchanges

SEVERAL matters of importance to film interests were taken up with the federal authorities in Washington this week by a delegation from the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

At a hearing before the District of Columbia commissioners on January 10 an application was made on behalf of the Washington exchange managers for an extension of six months in which to comply with the provisions of an ordinance effective March 1, compelling improvements in exchange housekeeping conditions there.

The delegation also suggested a modification in the ordinance requiring fibre-lined, corrugated, metal film containers. It was urged that containers without fibre-lining afford every necessary safeguard and that distributors be allowed to replace worn-out containers with a type made of heavy metal corrugated on the tops.

At the hearing the spokesman for the industry was Albert de Roode, counsel for the fire protection and regulations committee of the National Association. With him were John F. Ancona, former consulting engineer for the Eastman Kodak Company; F. V. Chamberlain, head of the physical properties department of Famous Players-Lasky, and Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary of the National Association. Samuel E. Morris, general manager of the Selznick Corporation, also attended, as well as J. H. Beaver, president of the Washington Exchange Managers Association, and several other exchange managers of that city.

With the delegation went H. Minot Pitman, chairman of the film theft committee of the National Association. He conferred with the federal authorities in reference to a proposed film-theft bill to prevent interstate transportation in stolen or duped films. He discussed with the Department of Justice plans of stopping the pirating and duping of films for Japan.

Similar to Previous Bill

The proposed film-theft bill is along the lines of one introduced two years ago, although certain changes will doubtless be made in the old bill. The film-theft bill which was introduced in the House of Representatives in 1920, but which died in committee, provided a maximum fine of $5,000 and imprisonment of five years, or both, for any persons found guilty of transporting stolen or duped film.

Chairman Pitman also conferred with several of the federal officials in reference to copyright protection for American films in foreign countries.

W. E. Greene and F. B. Warren Form a Nation-Wide Distributing System

WALTER E. GREENE and F. B. WARREN announce the organization of the American Releasing Corporation, which will distribute throughout the world motion picture productions of independent makers and lay the groundwork for later taking over the sales and physical distribution of other releasing companies. It is stated that the corporation is exclusively a mercantile sales organization that will not enter into the productions or ownership of pictures, and that it is owned privately by its officers, Mr. Greene being president and Mr. Warren vice-president.

A long lease has been signed for a suite of offices in New York, and it is announced that the executives will be assisted by a well-trained staff, including several men who have been prominent in national distributing organizations.

The company plans, beginning late in January, to issue one high-class picture a week until June, and a total of twenty-six pictures during the first calendar year, more than half of which are said to be completed or under production.

Mr. Greene was one of the founders of Paramount, then organizer and president of Artcraft and later vice-president in charge of distribution for Famous Players. Mr. Warren was formerly vice-president in charge of distribution for Goldwyn and then organizer and general manager of Associated Producers.

Recent Incorporations

The following firms, engaging in the motion picture business in some form or other, according to advices from Albany, were incorporated in New York State last week, the capitalization and the directors being also given:

C. R. Isaacs Cinema Equipment Company, $2,500, J. H. B. Donaldson and A. J. Donaldson, of Yonkers, and C. R. Isaacs of New York City; James Picker, Inc., $250,000, James Picker, Nathaniel Vadell, Henry Sinclair, New York.

Pathe Transfers Moran to Pittsburgh; Loughborough Succeeds Him in Albany

BERT M. MORAN

BERT M. MORAN, manager of Pathe's branch in Albany, N. Y., since 1918, has been promoted to the management of the company's Pittsburgh branch, and is succeeded by James M. Loughborough, a former newspaperman, who has been with Pathe for some time and who handled the publicity in connection with the recent tour of Marshal Foch in this country. Mr. Moran will leave this week for Pittsburgh. Mr. Loughborough is already at his new desk.

When Mr. Moran came to Albany the Pathe branch was located in a tumbledown two-story structure. About that time two exchanges closed because of poor business. Mr. Moran organized a highly efficient sales force, so that the company soon moved into a new building. Today the branch is among the ten leaders in the national standing of the thirty-three Pathe branches. From the Albany branch twenty-six prints of Pathe News are now released, as compared with three in 1918, while other Pathe product has increased accordingly.

World of Experience

Mr. Moran has sold film in twenty-three different zones in this country and Canada. In Canada he worked out of Montreal, Toronto, St. John's, Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver, specializing on serials. He has also worked out of Cleveland, Detroit, Buffalo, Boston, Kansas City and Minneapolis, and managed branches for the George Kleine system in New Orleans, Dallas, Boston and Philadelphia.

The Albany branch of Pathe in competition with New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Boston, Washington, Buffalo and Newark branches, won first prize money for the eastern division in three Pathe sales and collection contests, Mr. Moran in each instance winning the prize of $500, while each salesman, cashier and booker in the office, received $100.

His Views on Service

Mr. Moran has been president of the Albany F. I. L. M. Club since its formation and was largely instrumental in bringing about the recent agreement between exchanges and exhibitors. At a dinner given in his honor the other night, he said:

"The signing of a contract is not half so important as to giving service and attention to the customer after the signing. It is our belief that the contract starts after the signing and that first, last and always, every customer must be satisfied."

James M. Loughborough, who succeeds Mr. Moran, was born in Little Rock, Ark. He attended school in St. Louis, and later on worked on the Globe-Democrat and the Post-Dispatch of that city. Later he went to Chicago and was a reporter on the Daily News, eventually landing in New York with the Evening World. Leaving the newspaper field, he associated himself with Metro in the home office publicity department. Then he went with Pathe, selling film out of St. Louis and later joined the Albany office. Mr. Loughborough served overseas with the 77th Division.

Dined by Exhibitors

Albany exhibitors dined him at Keeler's last Thursday night. Louis A. Buettner of Cohoes, vice-president of the New York State Motion Picture Theatre Owners, was toastmaster. Mr. Moran was presented with a diamond studded Elks' pin by the Albany Theatrical Managers' Association, while the Albany F. I. L. M. Club gave him a solid silver cigarette humidor.

Present at the affair were J. M. Loughborough, his successor; James L. Rose, John H. Krause, Samuel Hochstein, Charles Charles, Bert A. Gibbons, Harry Over, Marvin Kempner, N. B. Freeman,

Fox Anniversary Week Commemorates Eighteen Years of Picture Progress

A Modern Story of the Oak That From the Little Acorn Grew

EIGHTEEN YEARS of motion picture progress! To celebrate his eighteen years of motion picture industry William Fox has set aside the seven days from January 29 to February 4 inclusive, as "Fox Anniversary Week" —for which hundreds of exhibitors throughout the country have booked Fox pictures solid.

The following dates tell the story of Mr. Fox in the picture business:

1904 to 1913—Greater New York Film Rental Company.

1913 to 1915—Box Office Attraction Company.

1915 to 1922—Fox Film Corporation.

"Fox Anniversary Week" will, in a great measure, be a tribute to a man who not only is a pioneer of the silent drama, but who has fought for its progress—who has helped immeasurably to make it the best entertainment for the peoples throughout the world.

Once a Gallery God Himself

Because every impulse which beat in the bosom of a man who had himself been of the world's great category of gallery gods, led him first and directly to the hearts and not the purposes of the people, William Fox has gone rung by rung up the ladder of progress and development in the industry until today Fox Film Corporation stands among the greatest motion picture organizations in the world.

An intense humanitarian himself, Mr. Fox got his ideas of what the people wanted from his early experience as a theatre patron and subsequently as the owner of several playhouses in New York City. He had keen visions far into the future, and saw the possibilities of the industry. He proceeded, along lines entirely original and independent of all trusts and combinations, to honestly achieve his goal—to secure a fair return on his great investments, to entertain and enlighten the people, and, best of all, to attain the place he now enjoys throughout the world as a friend and benefactor of mankind.

A Personal Triumph

That is the Fox personal triumph! Along with it has been the extraordinary success of the entire Fox Film Corporation, encircling, as it does, the globe; reaching out to the remotest units of civilization with the character of motion pictures which appeals to every tongue and enlightens and entertains the universe. The whole world is the stage of the Fox productions. Not only are the thrilling scenes and heart-throbs of the drama mingled with the human interest comedies which appeal to the humor of the young and old, but Mr. Fox is also sending broadcast every day news features of world-wide importance, which give graphic visualization on the screen of the world's greatest activities and history making events.

In keeping with the swift progress of the Fox enterprises, a score of aeroplanes attached to the Fox News Service make distance of little concern. Today's parade in New York, for instance, will be seen in Chicago tomorrow and the same speed and enterprise mark the service to all points at home and abroad.

Crushing the Film Trust

There is no abatement in the "Forward with Fox" ideas. Always on and on to greater endeavor. That has been the slogan from the humble beginning of eighteen years ago. To do something nobody else had done and to do everything else better than anybody else has attempted. With this determination in mind Mr. Fox defied the men and the combines which controlled the industry in the old days. He questioned their claim to the ownership of patents and rights that compelled abject submission to their rule. The move initiated by Mr. Fox to give more to the people, if loss to the treasuries of the trusts, was in 1911, when the trust had been built up under the names of the Motion Picture Patents Company, General Film Company and allied concerns.

At that time nearly every film exchange had been bought up or put out of business. The trust left Mr. Fox for the last. Flattering offers were made to buy him out. When he refused, the combines declined to give him any more film. But Mr. Fox was not to be subdued. Within a few months he had turned up evidence for the Department of Justice at Washington and it took steps which resulted in the trust methods being wiped out entirely. That meant freedom for the renter of the motion pictures and freedom as well for the exhibitor.

A decisive victory had been won by Mr. Fox, and he then determined to go into the industry on a greater scale than ever before had been attempted. He knew what the public wanted. He had been the owner and manager of several theatres, including the old Academy of Music on East Fourteenth street, New York City, where stock productions were presented at popular prices.

The Old Academy of Music

Mr. Fox secured the best actors and actresses of the day to appear at the Academy, sometimes at a loss to himself, but always with great benefit and pleasure to his thousands of patrons, in whom Mr. Fox had always had the keenest interest. As a result there are thousands of "grown-ups," of the East Side especially, who remember with fondest affection those early efforts and who saw many ambitious men and women aspiring before the footlights in the "10, 20 and 30-cent" Academy who subsequently saw their names in brilliant electrical illuminations on Broadway—and Mr. Fox saw the same possibilities, the same progressiveness, the same development in the industry.

Mr. Fox organized the Box Office Attraction Company. He sent Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager, to organize exchanges throughout the country. He dispatched J. Gordon Edwards, his stage manager at the Academy of Music, to Europe to learn how pictures were made there and to get the best ideas as to studio construction.

His First Picture

When everything was in readiness, a studio was rented in Fort Lee, N. J., and there the first Fox picture, "Life's Shopwindow," was made. Picture followed picture, and in a short time Mr. Fox was issuing fifty-two pictures a year, or one a week. Those first pictures called forth all the energy, all the resourcefulness, all the daring that Mr. Fox and his small corps of assistants possessed.

While other men believed in the slow, steady, careful methods of building, Mr. Fox, with a firm faith in his knowledge of what the public wanted, plunged into picture-making on a big scale, at times having many thousands of dollars invested in a host of productions awaiting release. He was looking ahead, and believing he was on the right road, never stopped to count the cost. That he was right has been proved by the great strides the company has made in the nine years it has been producing and releasing.

"Daughter of the Gods"

It was only a short time after he began picture-making that he signed a contract with Miss Annette Kellerman, the Australian swimmer, to star in a picture called "A Daughter of the Gods." The cost of this picture, with the stupendous advertising campaign put behind it, staggered picturedom. The money spent in its making was five times the amount spent on some of the big pictures of today. And when this was released to the public Mr. Fox had another big picture ready, "The Honor System."

Both these pictures were a revelation to picture followers, and they went on their way and are still being shown, so advanced were they at that time.

Other Remembered Successes

"A Fool There Was," "Carmen," "Regeneration" were a few of the other pictures of those early days that stand out in the memory of producers and exhibitors. They were milestones on the way to modern pictures. They have stood the test of time, too, for when Mr. Fox reissued them recently they held their own against the competition of present day productions.

The growth of the Fox Company was so steady and so rapid that addition floors were taken over in the building at 130 West Forty-sixth street for offices. British branch offices, with headquarters in London, were opened. Exchanges were organized in Canada, in Australia, in New Zealand, in South America and finally in France. And in addition, Fox representatives were travelling throughout the Far East arranging with agents to handle the Fox product, which is as popular in Japan and China as it is in the United States.

Never Hesitated

During all this time Mr. Fox never hesitated to give to the world picture public the best in pictures that money and brains could develop. He had William Farnum star in "A Tale of Two Cities," which, after four years, is still being called for by exhibitors for special runs. It is today, as it was then, a classic in motion pictures. It was acclaimed by the critics and the public in England and France—a true test of its value as picture history, because in England and in France Charles Dickens' great book was held in high affection as telling a vivid tale of the French revolution. If any picture could be said to help cement the friendship of England, France and America, "A Tale of Two Cities" was that picture.

Big Productions

Among the other Fox pictures that have received world-wide praise from both exhibitor and public were "Cleopatra," "Les Miserables," "Salome," "If I Were King," "The Spy," "Jack and the Beanstalk," "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," "Du Barry," "Checkers," "Evangeline" and "Ali Baba."

Early in 1919, when Fox Film Corporation had grown so big that more rigid efficiency methods were necessary to keep supplying the demands of the world for Fox Film, William Fox began the building of his present headquarters at Tenth avenue and Fifty-fifth street. When the offices were in Forty-sixth street, he had studios in Fort Lee, N. J., and several in New York and other places, in addition to the big studios in California. The laboratory for all the studios was also in Fort Lee.

Under One Roof

To Mr. Fox this meant much valuable time wasted. He wanted all the branches of production under one roof. Today he has accomplished that desire, for in the Fifty-fifth street, New York, studio he turns out a completed picture, from negotiation with the author, the engagement of star and cast, and the taking of the scenes on the third floor, to the final printing of the positive film in the modern laboratory on the ground floor. The studios in California have been maintained to diversify the scenery, and because western pictures should be made in the West.

The latest venture of Fox Film Corporation was to open studios in Rome, where J. Gordon Edwards began the making of pictures that would show great events and great figures of world history. It is possible that other studios will be opened in the eastern hemisphere—in England, in France, in Russia. For Fox pictures have become international, like literature. Mr. Fox made "Cleopatra," "Salome," and now he has brought forth "Queen of Sheba," pronounced even more stupendous, more lavish, more beautiful than its prececessors.

"Over the Hill"

But the triumph to date of all the unique achievements of Fox Film Corporation is the realization of the great aim of Mr. Fox to get into the very heart of the home, to accomplish something of perpetual benefit to humanity, to give to the present and leave for posterity the lessons of the most powerful human-interest story ever screened, "Over the Hill." Nothing gives Mr. Fox keener satisfaction than the indorsement by the press, the laity and the clergy of the world, of this masterpiece of picture art.

It is a satisfaction based on the fundamental goodness and sweetness of it all; the thrill of mother-love and devotion which it arouses in every human heart—a thrill which teaches the young the joy and consolation of filial love and obedience; the thrill which has made many men and many women "drop everything" and wire or write or go "straight back home" to visit "Mother," after seeing the wonderful screen visualization of Will Carleton's famous poem. No compensation could be or can be as great to Mr. Fox as the love and the gratitude which "Over the Hill" revives and intensifies for "the hand that rocked the cradle."

Year's Run on Broadway

"Over the Hill" had an uninterrupted run of an entire year on Broadway. Its intense human appeal was responsible for capacity audiences at every performance. It had a record in six of the Broadway theatres—an achievement unparalleled in motion pictures—and is now being shown throughout the world. Mr. Fox believes in continual progress and development, the creation of new ideas and the elevation of the industry to a standard higher each season than the record of the year before, but "Over the Hill" is destined to stand pre-eminent as a Fox achievement of lasting benefit and incomparable worth to the industry and to humanity.

Other big special pictures that Mr. Fox has for the millions of picture followers the world over are "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," "A Virgin Paradise," "Shame," "Perjury," "Foot-Falls," "Thunderclap," "The Last Trail." Gratified by the world-wide commendation his efforts have met, Mr. Fox plans productions that will surpass even his stupendous successes of the present day.

The Fox Sunshine Comedies are known, too, throughout the world, and share the prestige enjoyed by the popular Mutt and Jeff animated cartoons and the Fox News service.

Stockholder Attempts to Get His Money Back

"Determination," the production said to have been promoted by F. F. Stoll, who is alleged to have disappeared when the film was half finished, and was later completed by the United States Moving Pictures Corporation, was attached in Cumberland, Md., on Saturday, December 31, after it had played the week at the Maryland Theatre in that city, by Sheriff Peter McFarland.

Reece Files Suit

This action took place after suit against the picture company had been filed by Sutton E. Reece of Westernport, Md., who alleges that the stock he bought was purchased when he was a minor and that he was refused the money when he asked is back again from the United States Moving Pictures Corporation, which was reorganized by the receivers out of the former United States Photoplay Corporation.

Say Nationalization Has Been Completed

Final plans for standardizing film exchange managers' organizations and nationalizing the Hoy Reporting Service were agreed upon Friday, January 6, at a conference of distribution company executives at the New York headquarters of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

Presented for Ratification

Saul E. Rogers, chairman of the special committee in charge of this work, presented for ratification the forms of agreements and rules and regulations for the exchange associations which will be organized in the various distribution centers. P. L. Waters, chairman of the distributors' division and executive committee, presided.

Indigo Blue Bill for Washington, D. C.

Blue Sundays of the deepest indigo are proposed for the District of Columbia in a bill introduced in Congress by Representative Fitzgerald of Ohio. Section 2 specifically prohibits the operation of any theatre, bowling alley or other place of public assembly or amusement for secular purposes on Sunday, and provides a fine of not less than $5 nor more than $50 for the first violation of this provision and from $25 to $500 for subsequent violations, which latter fine may be accompanied by imprisonment of from one to six months in the discretion of the court.

A Million! A Million!

FOOLISH WIVES" has reached the screen, and a new moving picture sensation has been provided by the Universal Company. Its greatest asset is that it cost a million, everything being builded for it except the ocean. An eager gathering greeted it at the Central Theatre, New York, at its premiere showing on Wednesday evening, and there were those among the spectators who felt that it should have been described in the main title like this:

Erich von Stroheim
presents
Erich von Stroheim
in the Darwinian Phantasy of Bad Manners and Sneers entitled
Erich von Stroheim

"Foolish Wives" is Erich von Stroheim's million-dollar idea of America, a view obtained from the particular low stratum of society from which he took his look. He paints himself in the bright colors of what he conceived to be a fascinating and irresistible villain, a Galician devil amongst the women, strutting in imitation of a sassy Prussian.

The spotlight was ever upon Erich von Stroheim, and what Frank O'Malley would call his "Lynnhaven ears." His simian effronteries to women will offend all decent members of the sex and his cheap sneering at the supposed bad manners of American marines could better have been omitted. Von Stroheim strutted and made leering love in a manner that possibly meets his own conception of the jolly rake from Vienna. The American diplomat was made into a bowing, scraping jackass, the like of which we never have seen before, and the entire play was a studied and flippant slam at all things American. The final flag waving couldn't save it.

We believe that Universal may get its million back, and possibly the screen will profit immeasurably by this striking example of what not to do in making moving pictures. The technical details are fine, the musical score is delightful, and, in fact, everything about it is satisfactory except the picture and the silly villain that shot the bank roll in an egotistic endeavor to glorify himself.

If Mr. Carl Laemmle were of a homicidal turn he might either shoot von Stroheim at sunrise or step on him and squash him.

Plan Grand Ball

The F.I.L.M. Club of St. Louis will give a grand ball this winter. The time and place will be decided later. Floyd Lewis, president, has been appointed a committee of one to make the preliminary survey. He will reports his findings January 20, when sub-committees will be named to take up various matters if it is voted to go ahead. Last year the ball given by the St. Louis Film Board of Trade was a big success.

Fred A. Kilgour Promoted

Fred A. Kilgour, former Hodkinson salesman in the Brooklyn and Long Island territory, has been promoted to the important position of branch sales manager of the Hodkinson New York exchange.

Maine Exhibitors Form M. P. T. O. A. Unit; Pennsylvania Meeting Nominates Officers

TWO important exhibitor meetings were held the week of January 1, that of Maine theatre owners on January 4 and of Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey showmen on January 6. Sydney S. Cohen, national president, and M. J. O'Toole attended the latter gathering, the former continuing his attack on First National.

The Maine meeting was to form a unit of the national body. Theatre owners came from all parts of the state, some travelling a distance of 200 miles, and assembled at the Penobscot Exchange Hotel. Scores of contracts to show the Urban Movie Chats were signed and the proposition indorsed. The following officers were elected: President, Charles Stern, Bangor; vice-president, Wendell Hone, Presque Isle; treasurer, William McPhee, Oldtown; secretary, A. S. Goldman, Bangor; executive committee, William Stitham, chairman, Pittsfield; Wilbur Shea, Lubec; Charles Rush, Millinocket; Charles Uson, Old Orchard; Richard Flora, Caribou; J. Harrison, Portland; C. Hanson, Camden; Robert King, Ellsworth.

President Stern spoke briefly on the value of organization. The old organization, known as the Allied Theatres, is now disbanded, according to reports. The convention was brought to a close with a banquet attended by 100 exhibitors and exchangemen.

The other was the monthly meeting. The exhibitors gathered in Philadelphia and discussed lower admissions, lower film and poster rentals and civic development of the screen, besides voting to combat daylight saving and street carnivals. It was pointed out that taxes paid the internal revenue office on admissions for November, 1921, were $1,000,000 less than those of the same month of the preceding year, while taxes on films showed an increase of twice the amount during the same stated period.

The Nominations

Nominations of officers to be elected January 20, were as follows: Harry Stevenson, Knickerbocker, president; H. J. Schad, Carr and Schad Enterprises, Reading, vice-president; Charles Rappaport, second vice-president; Al Fischer, Sr., treasurer, and George P. Aarons, secretary. Also the following were named to fill four vacancies on the board of managers: B. Chamberlain, Shamokin; C. Floyd Hopkins, Harrisburg; John Evans, retiring president, and George Kline.

Earlier Delivery of Selznick News

To expedite deliveries of Selznick News prints a new mailing schedule has been worked out which will result in the Selznick News reaching the chief cities from 12 to 24 hours earlier.

All shipments will be made from the New York Central Post Office on release days in line with a prepared chart that is calculated to do away with delays and bring Selznick News into the hands of exhibitors at the earliest possible moment.

New Paramount Distribution Contract Covers Six South American Countries

THE signing of important contracts for the distribution of Paramount Pictures in six South American markets was announced this week by E. E. Shauer, director of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Effective April 1, Paramount Pictures will be distributed in Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chile, Peru and Bolivia by Max Glucksman, one of the South American leaders in the film industry.

Through this new contract increased facilities are obtained for the distribution of Paramount Pictures in the southern republics, as Max Glucksman has been an important distributor in these countries for a number of years. A New York office is maintained at 220 West Forty-second street, with Jacob Glucksman, a brother, in charge.

"The signing of the contract with Max Glucksman adds still further to the plans we have been making for some months for wider distribution of Paramount Pictures in South America," said Mr. Shauer. "The southern countries will be well taken care of through this new arrangement. In Brazil we operate through our own exchanges, and plans have been made which we expect will increase our business in this republic considerably beyond our record-breaking business of last year.

"The distribution of Paramount Pictures in Colombia, Venezuela, Ecuador, the Guianas, Central America, Cuba, Porto Rico and the West Indies is being handled by Caribbean Film Company of New York and Havana. For some months this company has been making arrangements to increase its activities throughout this large territory, and the outlook for 1922 is brighter."

A. E. Smith Has New Production Details for Vitagraph; Now on Way to New York

PRESIDENT ALBERT E. SMITH, of Vitagraph, is now enroute to New York after a visit of several weeks at his California studios. He has new production details for Vitagraph completed. It is understood that Vitagraph intends to begin production in the near future on "The Magnificent Ambersons," the film rights of the Booth Tarkington novel having been bought by Mr. Smith, who has ambitious plans for its adaptation.

Four companies are now working at Vitagraph's California studios and further production is being planned by W. S. Smith, studio manager. Alice Calhoun will continue to produce at the Coast. Her great success in "The Little Minister" under the direction of David Smith, has resulted in continuance under his direction. Her present production is not yet completed.

Director Edward Jose has the Earle Williams' production, "The Man From Downing Street," well under way. His picture is said to be a radical departure from any previous Earle Williams' production. Larry Semon has rounded into the home stretch in the production of his latest comedy which is of a special nature. Lucille Carlisle is his leading woman.

William Duncan is working on "Man Hunters," a picture that requires him to play two parts. Edith Johnson plays opposite the star. Jimmy Aubrey, who recently completed "A Charmed Life," is starting on a new comedy. It is understood that John Smith will be his new director. The greatest production activity of years, it is stated, compelled W. S. Smith, studio manager, to cut short a visit last week to his ranch near Colton, Cal.

Albany in Uproar

Without anyone really knowing who started the movement, and with the exhibitors themselves divided on the question of Sunday picture shows in Albany, N. Y., the entire city became all wrought up last week, and there was a rumor that under the new city administration an effort would be made to enact an ordinance permitting Sunday shows.

Church opposition developed at once, while Bishop Gibbons sent a letter to all Catholic priests in Albany to work against Sunday shows. The Catholic women of the city held a meeting and also protested against the theatres opening. Delegations flocked to the city hall, where they were met with a statement from Mayor William S. Hackett that there was no ordinance likely to even be introduced. The whole thing subsided as quickly as it had started.

New York Censors Seek an Increase in Power

In an effort to broaden the power of the New York State Motion Picture Commission, bills will shortly be introduced in the Legislature at Albany. Concerning this, Chairman Cobb says:

"We propose to seek an amendment which will clearly define educational pictures. There is no such definition now and producers are trying to pass all kinds of pictures as educational ones. I can not say how broad or restricted the definition of what really constitutes educational pictures will be."

An amendment may be asked prohibiting the presentation of unpatriotic films. While no such pictures have been produced lately, the commission desires to safeguard the future in this respect. The report of the commission will be submitted about January 15.

455 Film Companies Incorporated in Year

During the past year a total of 455 motion picture companies were incorporated in New York State, these having a combined capitalization amounting to $28,373,400. The largest month in point of capitalization was last May, when fifty companies incorporated with a capitalization of $3,848,500. All told, there were 16,089 companies of all sorts which incorporated in the state during the year, these having an aggregate capitalization which amounted to $657,956,645, these figures showing the relative importance of the motion picture industry to all other industries in the state.

The following gives the number of companies, as well as capitalization each month last year, for motion pictures: January, 50, $3,383,400; February, 32, $2,710,250; March, 42, $3,322,000; April, 49, $2,529,500; May, 50, $3,848,500; June, 44, $2,036,000; July, 31, $1,284,200; August, 29, $1,685,750; September, 34, $2,199,700; October, 28, $1,452,500; November, 33, $1,563,500; December, 30, $2,358,100.

Exhibitor Dies

William D. Scoville, owner of the Idle Hour Theatre in Kansas City, Mo., died at his home January 1, following an illness of several months. Mr. Scoville was one of the leading sportsmen of the West, being president of the National Athletic Club of Kansas City. Funeral services were held Tuesday.

G. F. Stanton to Handle Transportation

G. F. Stanton, New York City passenger agent of the New York Central lines, has just been designated by Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the New York State Motion Picture Theatre Owners, to handle all matters pertaining to railroad transportation, and procure Pullman reservations for all persons planning to attend the state convention of motion picture exhibitors in Albany, February 14, 15 and 16. Mr. Stanton's telephone number is Murray Hill 8000. He plans to be present in Albany during the convention.

Sues German Company in Alleged Contract Breach

Justice William P. Burr of the New York Supreme Court has signed an order directing the Universum Film Actien Gesellschaft, of Berlin, and Fred S. Sells of 126 West Forty-sixth street, to show cause why an injunction should not issue barring them from selling or disposing in the United States of any films of motion pictures owned or controlled by them.

The order was obtained in a suit brought by the Hamilton Theatre Corporation. The allegations are attested to by Benjamin Blumenthal, its president, who says that he contracted with the Universum Corporation, to have the exclusive right to act as its selling agent in this country, but that the latter broke the contract.

Bank Files Judgment Against Film Company

Judgment against the Ziegfeld Cinema Corporation, William K. Ziegfeld, William W. Clark, Charles L. Lanigan and Silas M. Smith has been filed in the New York County Clerk's office by the International Bank.

The judgment is the result of an action brought by the bank to recover the value of two promissory notes. One of the notes was for $5,000 and the other one for $9,514.50.

One Long Series of Good Times Is Planned for Women Attending Exhibitor Convention at Albany

WITH Mrs. George Roberts as chairman, and Mrs. Jack Leon- and Miss Noma Suckno as secretaries, a committee has just been named in Albany, N. Y., to entertain all women attending the annual convention of New York State exhibitors in the Capital City on February 14, 15 and 16. The committee was formed at a meeting at the Hotel Ten Eyck, which incidentally will be the headquarters of the convention. Associated with the three ladies named, there will be Mrs. Harry Hellman, Mrs. O. H. Stacy, Mrs. Samuel Suckno, Mrs. Fred P. Elliott, Mrs. Harry Lazarus and Mrs. William Berinstein.

The committee has already started arranging its program of entertainment. During the convention week the committee will be at the Hotel Ten Eyck almost continuously looking after visiting women. Rooms will be assigned to the committee on one of the floors of the hotel and which will at all times serve as a headquarters for the women, no matter at what hotel they may be stopping. As soon as women arrive at the convention headquarters, they will be greeted by one of their sex, and given a badge which will at all times tell from what city or village they are from.

Sightseeing Trip

On Tuesday afternoon, the opening day of the convention, all women in attendance will be taken on a sightseeing trip of the city, which will include the beautiful residential sections and which will also take in a visit to the state buildings, including the Capitol and Education building. On their return to the hotel, tea will be served.

On Wednesday, the Albany Chamber of Commerce will serve a luncheon to all women at the convention. The afternoon will also include a theatre party, the managers of all Albany houses having come forward with an offer to entertain the women on any or all convention days. On Wednesday night, of course, the Movie Ball will attract.

On Thursday, the concluding day of the convention, the women will be entertained in one of the parlors of the Ten Eyck with a program which will include some of Albany's best known talent. At the present time, efforts are being made to arrange a dance by a number of Albany's talented children. There will be a number of soloists on hand.

In connection with the convention itself, it has been decided to open the sessions on Tuesday at 12:30 o'clock, at which time Mayor Hackett will welcome the delegates.

To Advertise With Slides

It has been decided to ask all picture houses as far north as Glens Falls, west to Amsterdam and south to Poughkeepsie and Binghamton, to use slides for six days the forepart of February in advertising the ball. Announcement that many of the stars will be present has already aroused so much interest that parties are assured from many cities in the vicinity of Albany.

It is now planned to announce all stars at the ball in a spectacular manner. From the band of sixty pieces which will furnish the music, a trio will be selected which will result in a fanfare of trumpets just previous to the entry of this or that star on the ballroom floor, when, with spotlight focused, the star will be escorted to the boxes provided.

The Albany F.I.L.M. Club will meet this week and outline its plan of co-operation with the Albany Theatrical Managers in carrying forward convention plans.

Word reached Albany this week that Joseph Klein of the Robertson-Cole Company, New York City, who had previously been named by President Roberts, of the Albany Theatrical Managers' Association, as one of three chairmen from the exchanges to advertise the convention, had named as his assistants in New York City: William E. Rayner of Pathe, I. E. Chadwick of Merit and Samuel Eckman of Goldwyn.

Globe Suit Against Rock and Gates Discontinued

Justice William P. Burr of the New York Supreme Court has signed an order discontinuing the suit brought by Globe Productions, Inc., against Henry L. Gates and Allen Rock. The order was the result of a stipulation signed by William Klein, attorney for the plaintiff, and Henry O. Kalk, attorney for the defendants, which stated that, as the controversy between the litigants had been settled, the plaintiff desired to discontinue the suit and withdraw the motion for an injunction restraining the defendants from continuing a suit in the name of Globe Productions, Inc., against Tiffany Productions, Inc., over the production of "Peacock Alley."

Herbert E. Cronenwith, president of Globe Productions, Inc., in his suit against Gates and Rock held that Gates had no right to institute the suit against Tiffany Productions in the name of Globe Productions, Inc., for the reason that he claimed Gates had resigned as vice-president of the Globe concern, and with it all his rights and interests in the concern and its contracts. As to Rock, who was secretary of the Globe corporation, Cronenwith charged that Rock had taken possession of the books and contracts of Globe Productions and refused to surrender them to Cronenwith. For this reason Globe Productions made Rock a co-defendent with Gates when it began suit. Rock has denied the charge.

Hodkinson Leaves for Coast in Search of New Product for the Coming Season

W. W. HODKINSON, president of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, left New York Tuesday on his annual trip to the Pacific Coast in search of new productions for the coming season. He will proceed direct to Los Angeles. On his return, probably by March 1, he will endeavor to visit a number of the new Hodkinson branch exchanges, all of which have been established since his last visit to the Coast.

Though many of the productions for Hodkinson release have been filmed on the Coast, this is the first time Mr. Hodkinson has visited western studios for the avowed purpose of encouraging production, his contention long having been that the over-production of indifferent pictures was at the base of most of the troubles of the industry. Up to now, he has shown a tendency to handle only the work of those independent producers who broke away from the existing order but since the doctrine of mass production has shown very definite signs of failing, general interest is manifested in what policy Mr. Hodkinson will adopt on his present trip.

Of his plans for 1922, Mr. Hodkinson said: "I am more than confident that the quality of product is destined to play a very much larger part in the motion picture industry during 1922 than it has ever played before, and I shall endeavor to conclude as many contracts as I can with those who are seriously and sincerely trying to place screen production on the artistic and industrial plane to which it is entitled.

"We tried to keep our last year's product above the average run, and that we succeeded is borne out by a rather unusual tribute accorded our pictures by the national Committee for Better Films of the National Board of Review. Among forty-seven productions chosen by the Board's Committee as the 'finest year's group since the photodrama was created,' five bore the Hodkinson seal—'Jane Eyre,' 'A Certain Rich Man,' 'Rip Van Winkle,' 'The Man of the Forest,' and 'Lavender and Old Lace.'

"This is practical proof of the soundness of the principle of selecting pictures solely on merit from various sources of supply, and it is all the more important because it coincides with one of the most ambitious moves yet made to get away from factory production on the part of screen artists desiring to form a direct contact with the exhibitor. I allude to the recent formation in Los Angeles of the Screen Artists' Guild, which also has for one of its objects the elimination of salacious and suggestive pictures from the motion picture theatre. Certainly, until the men and women who make their living in moving pictures take firm hold of this situation and insist upon a wholesome screen, there will be continually hanging over them the bugbear of Federal, State and even municipal censorship.

"If the efforts of this and other strong bodies can be merged in the common good, in encouraging serious-minded advocates of a clean screen, the producer with the off-color picture will find few doors open to him. This is the easiest, best and most efficacious way to beat censorship."

Kniskern Joins Hodkinson

Announcement is made by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation of the appointment of L. W. Kniskern, formerly manager of the contract department of Realart Pictures Corporation, to become manager of the contract bureau in the Hodkinson home office.

This publication is dedicated to the service of the moving picture industry in all of its elements. Its foundation is character, its watchword is enterprise, its aim is betterment.

WE publish in the text pages of this issue the formal announcement of the new distributing organization formed by two well and favorably known men, Walter E. Greene and F. B. Warren. Offices have been opened at 15 West Forty-fourth street, New York, and from the ability, experience and standing of both men we are inclined to expect much.

The company has been named the American Releasing Corporation and it is understood that they have already secured product, important in quality and quantity, for the market. A surprise is promised in the initial offering. We wish for the new company a royal prosperity and a success which we believe the confidence of the industry will assure. Both are men of leadership and show judgment and we extend to them our cordial good wishes.

They announce that the stock of the company is held by its officers and that they propose an economical and careful operation of distribution. The company will be wholly free of production activities.

William Fox, Son of Courage

EIGHTEEN years ago William Fox entered the moving picture business. Then he was unknown and unrecognized. Today he is receiving words of congratulation from the four corners of the earth, for his name is known wherever the screen is known, and that covers most of the populated parts of the world. No record of moving picture achievement is complete without his fact story, a tale of a fascinating career of progress, reading like the brilliant romance of a gifted genius of fiction.

William Fox's first venture would have been his last venture if he had been another kind of a man. He faced a flat failure. He could have closed up the place, pocketed his loss and started with something more promising, but he didn't. He set his mind to work and he added the sweat of industry to his problem, the showman's problem of bringing the people into his place of amusement.

It was a man's fight and he won it, and that began a series of hard encounters against heavy odds. Each struggle made a bigger man out of him, and he fought his way up with undiminished courage, with unvarying vigor and with his eyes set on the star of big accomplishment.

He thought big things and then he did them. His success has been an earned success, torn from the unwilling fates that beset his path with a thousand discouragements. It is a fact, known to those who have worked with him, that he knows more of the essentials of drama than any of his directors, past or present, that he understands the human heart and reads the mind of the masses with a certainty that amounts to genius. He is what he set out to be, a great showman, and he is justly proud of his calling, for he has delighted the millions, instructed the millions, satisfied the millions and brightened their lives.

It is interesting to note that William Fox has anticipated each changing demand of the public in the matter of entertainment. It is this faculty of reading the public pulse that stamps him as by instinct and experience the showman. In his years of extraordinary activity and hard work, that would have destroyed a man of less natural vigor, he has found time to give of his best to charity and his country's needs. Not only did he win the fight for business independence against powerful monoply, he ran also Red Cross drives that set new records, conducted relief activities in behalf of Jewish and Christian humanity that was suffering and in want, and at all times was immediate in his response to the appeals of his industry and his fellow men. When the Prince of Wales visited America, William Fox was the only showman of either the screen or the stage who received recognition, and William Fox entertained a prince with as much facility as he had entertained the masses of the people.

Having had the privilege of observing William Fox at close range, it is a pleasure to write this tribute to him as a man, to present his fearlessness and courage as an example to the industry and to hail him as a great exhibitor, a great distributor and a great producer of moving pictures.

San Francisco in No Need of Censors Say Officials at T. H. Ince Luncheon

SAN FRANCISCO officials, including the president of the Supervisors and Senator Edward I. Wolf, take the position that censorship of motion pictures, aside from the regulatory powers invested in the police authorities of cities, is unnecessary. After an experience of more than five years without censors these officials have gone on record as believing that producers, exhibitors, the public and an intelligent police chief are fully capable of keeping the screen "clean."

These statements were made at a testimonial luncheon given in honor of Thomas H. Ince, producer of "Hail the Woman," in the Italian room of the St. Francis hotel recently.

Mr. Ince was unable to attend, having been taken suddenly ill. J. Parker Read, Jr., and Clark Thomas went in his stead. The luncheon was arranged by city officials to honor Mr. Ince for his contribution to the city of a fire prevention picture and to urge upon him consideration of doing a part of his producing in the Golden Gate city.

Tribute to Ince

Tribute was paid to Mr. Ince as artist, business man and citizen by prominent speakers. Joseph Mulvehill, president of the board of supervisors, detailed the history of uncensored pictures in San Francisco. After praising the men who have built modern theatres for the city and pledging the aid and co-operation of its authorities in fostering the industry whenever possible, he said:

"Over five years ago San Francisco had a board of censorship composed of five members. In 1916 an amendment was offered to increase the board to nine. The Board of Supervisors voted that amendment down, and I had the pleasure of introducing an amendment abolishing the board of censorship in San Francisco, placing the censorship of motion pictures with the people of San Francisco themselves, as well as the producers.

"The only censor of motion pictures in San Francisco today is the Chief of Police. He was authorized and empowered in that license to look at the pictures that perhaps at some time might need censorship; and I can honestly tell you, gentlemen, that I don't believe there has been three occasions in almost six years where the Chief of Police has been called upon to prohibit the exhibiting of a motion picture in San Francisco. And we are proud to tell you that San Francisco was one of the first, if not the first, large city in the United States to abolish the censorship of motion pictures."

Buhler Appointed

Frank W. Buhler, general manager of the Stanley Company of America, has been appointed chairman of the National Prosperity Campaign being conducted by the Rotary Clubs throughout the country. Owing to Mr. Buhler's affiliation with the picture industry, the co-operation of theatres is anticipated in displaying 3,500 slogans on the screen.

Mississippi Senator Censures Will H. Hays

Will H. Hays, postmaster general, who may enter the industry about March 4, after having completed a term of one year as a member of President Harding's cabinet, was roundly censured in the Senate on January 7 when Senator Harrison, of Mississippi, delivered an address on "The Motion Picture Industry in Politics."

Senator Harrison, who is one of the Democratic leaders in the upper house, waxed sarcastic when he declared that if the industry needs the assistance of "the biggest politician in the Republican Party," the Democrats must look upon it with suspicion.

Claims Tax Violations

According to Charles H. Lynch, chief field deputy in the Syracuse Internal Revenue district, 90 per cent. of the theatres, both motion picture and otherwise in Syracuse, Utica and Binghamton, N. Y., have been violating regulations as regards the collection of the amusement tax.

Approximately 10 per cent. of the theatres received a clean bill as a result of the recent check-up. According to Mr. Lynch, penalties imposed and collected by his force, from the theatrical interests in that district alone, totaled $10,000, and this does not include the shortages in taxes. The theatres will again be checked up about March 15.

Selznick Hints at Strong Trade Alliance with Canadian Firms; Foresees Decreased Admissions

LEWIS J. SELZNICK, of New York, gave a valuable and interesting talk on the occasion of a one-day visit at Toronto, Ontario, on January 6 when it was intimated by him that prominent picture interests of Canada, including J. P. Bickell, vice-president; N. L. Nathanson, managing director, and others of the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Famous-Lasky Film Service, Ltd., Regal Films, Ltd., Eastern Theatres, Ltd., and affiliated companies in Canada, would shortly be identified with him in a strong trade alliance.

"Canada is missing a big opportunity in profitable publicity in not making more government scenic releases," declared Mr. Selznick. He felt that they could be somewhat improved, however, if more human interest and humor were woven into the official Canadian scenic pictures. He pointed out that the Canadian pictures were immensely popular in Australia, where they are being distributed by him. "If Canada studies the possibilities of such advertising and adopts a general immigration policy, the country will forge ahead fast."

Fighting Long Enough

With regard to general conditions in the moving picture business, Mr. Selznick declared that the film men had been fighting each other long enough. "They are now getting together to eliminate wastage," he said. "We propose now to get together with Postmaster General Hays of the U. S., and are looking for an announcement of action by January 14. If the organization goes through as planned, it will make for better, cleaner and greater pictures. There will be fewer pictures but larger and better in every way.

"There are now hundreds of producers in the game but only about fifteen big distributing agencies by whom practically all producers are controlled. Working out the scheme on the lines now being discussed with limitation of production, it will be possible for admission prices to be reduced in both Canada and the United States."

Canadian Production

Mr. Selznick insisted that he is not a believer in Canadian production of moving pictures for Canadian fans. He said:

"It can only come when you have the population to warrant it. At least 75 per cent. of our revenue is from the United States. You cannot hope for business success if you look for profits outside your own land. If Canadian stories are worth while for making into pictures, companies will be sent to Canada to make them. We have a new Canadian story, the scenes of which are laid at Banff and at Field, B. C. Our company was at Banff for seven weeks in order to take the scenes there."

Note Causes Suit

Suit has been filed in the New York Supreme Court by Joseph Farnham to recover $1,250, the value of a promissory note, from the Gibralter Operating Company and Sidney Garrett, well known in English motion picture circles.

Comedy and Serial Episodes for Release by Pathe January 22

Pathe Exchange, Inc., announces that the re-issued one-reel comedies, starring Harold Lloyd, have been highly praised by exhibitors. "That's Him," the latest re-issued comedy, and one serial episode are scheduled for release January 22. "The Lost Trail" is the title of the fourth episode of "White Eagle," the new Pathe serial, starring Ruth Roland.

"The Bear and the Bees" is the latest animated cartoon of the series of "Aesop's Film Fables," produced by Fables Pictures, Inc. "Call the Witness" is the title of the latest Hal Roach comedy, starring "Snub" Pollard. Marie Mosquini has a prominent part. Pathe Review No. 139 is, it is said, filled with interesting and entertaining subjects, the outstanding feature being "Getting Through to Baroda," a Pathecolor offering showing an expedition into the little known wilds of Abyssinia.

Pathe News, Nos. 8 and 9, present current events of the world photographed by the staff of Pathe cameramen stationed all over the globe. "Topics of the Day," No. 4, supplies the motion picture screen with the latest bits of wit and humor culled from the presses of the world.

Alice Calhoun in "Angelface"

Alice Calhoun will again be seen as an old-fashioned girl in her forthcoming production, "Angelface," which is being directed by David Smith at Vitagraph's West Coast Studios.

Books "Chums"

Sid Grauman has booked "Chums," the Century Comedy in which Baby Peggy, the two-year-old star, appears with the noted dog, "Brownie." Mr.Grauman is said to be considering signing for the whole series.

Gloria Swanson to Star in New Production "Beyond the Rocks"

The veranda of the Cafe Ritz in Paris affords one of the interesting scenes in "Beyond the Rocks," Elinor Glyn's novel which is being filmed as a Paramount picture with Gloria Swanson starred. Here at the customary tables are grouped exactly the types that one would find in this exclusive establishment for satisfying the inner man and also pleasing the eye and ear.

In this picture, which Jack Cunningham adapted and Thompson Buchanan supervised, Gloria Swanson is the star and her role, it is said, affords her unusual opportunities for the display of her skill and talent in emotional acting and enables her to wear exquisite gowns and look her loveliest. Rudolph Valentino has an important part.

Completes Retakes

Robert G . Vignola has just completed several retakes for the Cosmopolitan production, "The Young Diana." This is not Mr. Vignola's own production. Marion Davies is the star.

Censor Congratulates Paramount

An unqualified endorsement of the wholesomeness as well as the entertainment value of three Paramount pictures, "The Sheik," "Miss Lulu Bett" and "Just Around the Corner," was recently received by the Detroit Paramount exchange from Royal A. Baker, one of the Detroit local censors. The letter says in part:

"The Paramount company deserves great credit for the maner in which 'The Sheik' was handled as a drama. Two of your late plays are most significant. They point out a new field with new elements which heretofore have been overlooked. One is 'Lulu Bett,' a very remarkable play which carefully points out the satirical side of life. The other picture is 'Just Around the Corner.'"

"The Iron Trail" Wins in Chicago

Rex Beach's "The Iron Trail," produced for United Artists by the Bennett Pictures Corporation, met with praise from the Chicago newspaper critics at its premier showing at Ascher's Roosevelt Theatre, while the public showed its appreciation by capacity audiences. "'The Iron Trail' is all in all a 'he-man' picture," said the Chicago Tribune. "Rex Beach's stories certainly lend themselves exceptionally well to picturization," said the Chicago Evening Post, "and when they are given as careful and accurate production as 'The Iron Trail' received, the result is a gratifying success. "'The Iron Trail' is a vitally interesting drama," says the Chicago American, "and its men and women are very real and very earnest. Its settings are gorgeously done and you ought not to miss it." The Chicago Daily News says: "As an art production, it is as good as one of Rex Beach's best selling novels."

Ray Film Showing at Many Theatres

Newspaper reports and records of house managers coming to the Arthur S. Kane offices this week give an indication of the results being obtained by Charles Ray's latest release, "R. S. V. P.," in many cities outside of New York. This First National attraction is going over big in widely separated centers, it is stated.

The feature was shown at the Rivoli, Baltimore: the Metropolitan, Atlanta; the Hippodrome, Buffalo; the Strand, Cincinnati; the Des Moines, Des Moines, Ia.; the New Garrick, Minneapolis; the Monticello and National Theatres, Hoboken, N. J., and other first run houses in many sections.

Meighan Expects Fine Photography

Thomas Meighan, Paramount star, has declared that he expects to have a perfect picture, photographically, in his latest vehicle, "The Proxy Daddy," now being filmed. It is being "shot" by two noted cameramen, William Marshall and Gilbert Warrenton.

FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY PRESENTS MARION DAVIES IN "THE BRIDE'S PLAY." A PARAMOUNT PICTURE

"Theodora" Smashes Records at Capitol and Other Big Theatres

Reports received by Goldwyn are said to indicate its Italian spectacular photoplay, "Theodora," has shattered house records, wherever shown. At the Capitol, in New York City, it did $23,240 in its first two days; paid admissions were 37,081, and business kept up for the week. Despite its four months' run at $2 top at the Astor Theatre, the engagement at the Capitol was extended for a second week.

"Theodora" has broken house records at the Roosevelt, the big, new picture house in Chicago; at the California Theatre in Los Angeles; the American Theatre in Denver, and at the Majestic in Wilmington, Del.

At the New York Capitol on the first day, it was necessary to call out the police, to handle the crowds, and many were unable to get in.

Edward J. Bowes, managing director of the Capitol, reported after the first two days' showing: "'Theodora' has received the greatest reception ever accorded to a picture in the Capitol Theatre. The receipts and attendance record is beyond all precedent and makes a new mark which is so high that it seems impossible for any picture to come along and beat it."

Fred Miller, manager of the California Theatre, Los Angeles, wired: "'Theodora' has done a record Los Angeles week. Our house record has been shattered. The most wonderful week in the history of the California."

A. G. Talbot wired regarding the Denver screening: "'Theodora' opened to the biggest success ever made by any picture in Denver. We have done as much business in two days as we usually do in a week."

Oscar Ginns, of the Majestic, Wilmington, Del., wired: "'Theodora' opened wonderfully, with theatre packed solid at five performances, breaking all house records. Results are far ahead of my most sanguine expectations." This picture is being heavily booked by first-run houses throughout the country, according to reports from all Goldwyn Exchanges.

Mack Sennett Begins "Suzanna;" Mabel Normand Is Again Starred

At the Mack Sennett studios work is now well under way on "Suzanna," an original story by Mack Sennett, which has been chosen as the next starring vehicle for Mabel Normand. A notable cast has been engaged to support the star. "Suzanna" is being directed by F. Richard Jones, who also directed Miss Normand in her previous Sennett successes, "Mickey" and "Molly O."

"Suzanna" is a colorful story of romantic youth interspersed with pageantry, spectacle, comedy and drama. The story is said to bristle with action and be filled with the merry humor of "Mickey" and "Molly O." It portrays the romantic lives of the dons of the early "50's" in California. Into this story of love, romance and adventure, Mr. Sennett has woven an ingenious plot to rob a beautiful child, a girl known as Suzanna, of her aristocratic parentage, by placing her in the home of a peon, while the child of a laborer, Chiquita, is smuggled in to the home of a don.

Mabel Normand is cast as Suzanna, a tom-boy girl; Winnifred Bryson has the role of Chiquita. Carl Stockdale, who did admirable work in "Molly O," is cast as Ruiz, Suzanna's foster-father. Eric Mayne as Don Diego assumes the obligation of bringing up as his daughter, Chiquita, and dislikes Suzanna, not knowing her to be his child.

George Nichols is seen in the character of a wealthy Spanish rancher, with Evelyn Sherman as his wife. His son is played by Walter McGrail. Others are George Cooper, Leon Barry and Minnie Ha Ha.

Gunning Gets Reports of Large Sales

With the Wid Gunning month sales drive half over, reports received at the Gunning home offices are daily piling up evidence that the exchanges are beating all their past performances for the amount of business brought in during a single month, the Gunning organization says.

Jack Lawrence, managing director of the new Loraine-Fulton Theatre, of Cleveland, Ohio, booked "What Do Men Want?" as the first Gunning picture he showed. After the opening, he sent a telegram to the Gunning offices, saying: "To say the least, every one of our thousands of patrons was fully satisfied."

Charles Olsen, of the Alhambra Theatre, Indianapolis, played "What Do Men Want?" as a first-run special in his territory, and broke a lote of house records. Now he has booked "Our Mutual Friend" for a special engagement, and is preparing a big publicity drive to put it over.

Tully and Post Begin Picture

This year will witness the screen debut of two of the foremost figures in the "legitimate" field—Richard Walton Tully and Guy Bates Post. They will begin their motion picture activities by filming "The Masquerader," which was written and staged by Mr. Tully, and in which Mr. Post played for years in all sections of the country. It will be released by Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

Production has begun in the United Studios in Los Angeles. James Young is directing, Wilfred Buckland is art director and George Benoit is at the camera.

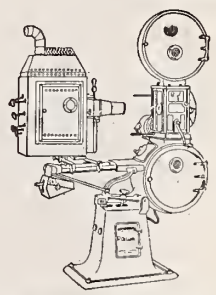
Exploitation for Hodkinson Film

The Hugo Ballin production of "Jane Eyre" for W. W. Hodkinson release, has received high commendation from the Stanley Company, of Philadelphia, according to word received by the Hodkinson offices, and is to be one of the most extensively exploited productions the Stanley Company has ever sponsored.

The Loew Orpheum Theatre in Boston has obtained the picture for first-run in the New England territory.

Emerson's First

John Emerson, one of the most noted of directors and photoplaywrights, has become a producer also. His first picture, "Red Hot Romance," is now being released by Associated First National Pictures, Inc. It was written by Mr. Emerson and his talented young wife, Anita Loos, and satirizes, the type of novel made famous by Anthony Hope, Richard Harding Davis and George Barr McCutcheon.



The New Motiograph DeLuxe for durability and perfect pictures. First and last cost $750.00.

First views of Marshall Neilan's latest production, "Penrod," starring Wesley Barry. The picture has been completed, and is one of First National's big features for 1922

Loew Takes All Educationals

Marcus Loew has just signed a contract for the entire output of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., for the 1921-1922 season. Throughout his thirty-five theatres in Greater New York City and the nearby sections of New York State and New Jersey, Educational Pictures will form the bulk of the short subject presentations during the coming year.

This contract calls for seventy-one two-reel comedies, besides such subjects as Sketchographs, Robert C. Bruce Scenics Beautiful, World Wanderings, Kinograms, the news reel, etc., which the Loew theatres already are showing. So complete will Educational's service to the Loew Circuit that there will be no room on any of the Loew theatre programs for any short comedies besides Educational's, with the exception of an occasional comedy by Chaplin or some other very well known star.

The two-reel comedies to be shown in the Loew theatres include twenty-four Christies, thirteen Mermaids, thirteen Campbells, twelve Torchy Comedies, three Punch Comedies and six Toonerville Comedies by Fontaine Fox.

Says Picture Follows Story

Critics who decry the practice of changing a stage play in adapting it for the screen, says a statement from Paramount, will be left without an argumentative leg to stand on in the case of the photoplay presentation of "Bought and Paid For," which William De Mille is now producing.

According to Mr. De Mille and Clara Beranger, the scenarist entrusted with the adaptation, the photoplay will be a faithful reproduction of the famous George Broadhurst story.

Fine Support for Priscilla Dean

Universal is said to have a fine cast in support of Priscilla Dean in "That Lass o' Lowrie," the Universal-Jewel production which has just been started at Universal City. Among those who already have been selected are Fred Kohler and Beatrice Burnham.

"My Boy" Is Big Hit in Albany

The drawing power of little Jackie Coogan and his popularity with motion picture theatre-goers was evidenced when his latest production, "My Boy," a First National attraction, opened at the Mark Strand, in Albany, N. Y., on December 28.

At the close of the first day's business Uly S. Hill, managing director of the house, sent the following telegram to Sol Lesser, the producer:

"Jackie Coogan in 'My Boy' opened to capacity all day long. Everyone pleased. Story one that makes them hold sides in laughter and the next minute dims the eye. Full of pathos. Sentiment is the kind that brings them in and holds them and makes many oral boosters. Jackie Coogan is at his best in his latest. Looks like a line-up all week long. Albany is talking Jackie Coogan everywhere."

New Leah Baird Film Finished

Leah Baird Productions have completed the first of a series of feature attractions for Associated Exhibitors, and it is expected that an announcement concerning its release will be forthcoming shortly. The production is entitled, "Don't Doubt Your Wife," and the cast, in addition to Miss Baird, includes Emery Johnson, Edward Peil, Mrs. Mathilde Brundage and Catherine Lewis. The production was supervised by Arthur F. Beck and directed by James W. Horne.

Cuban Papers Record Triumphal Entry of Mae Murray Into Havana

The Havana newspapers recording the arrival of Mae Murray in Cuba for the Tiffany production of "Fascination," to be presented by Robert Z. Leonard and released by Metro, have just reached New York. Column after column, and, in some cases, entire pages were devoted to descriptions of the ovation she received. Ramon Becali, editor-in-chief of La Noche, who took advantage of the occasion to interview her himself, devoting five columns to the story, said that no screen star had ever stirred the enthusiasm of Havana to such a tremendous extent, but that the enthusiasm was easily understood, as Miss Murray was easily the favorite star among the Cubans.

Preliminary announcements had stirred the picture fans' curiosity and thousands of people swarmed to the harbor to await the arrival of the seaplane by which Miss Murray arrived, with her husband-director, Robert Z. Leonard, flying from Key West, Florida. Hundreds of them had waited from early in the morning to get a glimpse of her. Huge floral pieces spelled out the word: "Bienvenida!"—Welcome. Crowds lined the streets as the star motored to her hotel. The climax was reached with a special showing of "Peacock Alley," the first of the series of pictures that Miss Murray is making for Metro.

"Peacock Alley," a Metro Film Opens New B. S. Moss Theatre

"Peacock Alley," a Metro release starring Mae Murray, was the opening attraction at B. S. Moss' new Cameo Theatre, Forty-second street, New York. Both photoplay and playhouse scored instant hits with the metropolitan public, it is said—hits so decisive that "Peacock Alley" is to be held on the screen of the Cameo for an indefinite run.

General release of "Peacock Alley," a Tiffany Production, directed by Robert Z. Leonard, will not be forthcoming from the Metro exchanges until the last week in January. Only in view of the occasion of the house-warming of the Cameo was the pre-release given. T. J. Connors, assistant sales manager of Metro, arranged for the early showing with the B. S. Moss organization.

Lloyd's "Sailor Made Man" Making Box-Office Records

Harold Lloyd's "A Sailor-Made Man' is proving to be his greatest box-office comedy, according to reports from many first-run theatres throughout the country, Associated Exhibitors say. In proof of this fact, Associated Exhibitors have published the following telegrams sent to Sales Manager John E. Storey. First, John Hamrick, of the Blue Mouse Theatre, Portland, Oregon, says:

"'A Sailor-Made Man' is by far the best audience picture I have yet seen." A similar wire from Salt Lake City states that: "Harold Lloyd in 'A Sailor-Made Man,' playing at Pantakes Salt Lake for week of December 21, broke all house records." Harmon Perry, of the Ogden Theatre, Ogden, Utah, reports that "'Sailor-Made Man' did more business on Sunday and Monday (January 1 and 2), than anything he ever had in the house."

In Cleveland, the Allen and Circle Theatres ran the comedy day and date and had capacity houses for every performance during the week of January 1. In Des Moines, Iowa, it was the feature attraction at A. H. Blank's Strand Theatre.

The following list provides an idea of the manner in which it is being booked: Capitol, New York; Strand, Brooklyn; the entire Loew circuit; the Merrick, Jamaica; Elsemere, Bronx; Colonial, Allentown; Wells, Norfolk and Richmond; Keith's Rivoli and Central, day and date, Jersey City; Regent, Rochester; Allen and Circle, day and date, Cleveland; Orpheum, Ft. Wayne; Liberty, Youngstown; Orpheum, Akron; Royal, Sioux City; Rialto, Lincoln; the entire Lynch Circuit, Atlanta; Strand, Charleston, W. Va.; Capitol, Little Rock; Symphony, Los Angeles; California, San Francisco; Regent, Billings; Blue Mouse, Portland and Rialto, Missoula, Mont.

To Make Record of Each Employe

Julius Stern, second vice-president of Universal, has appointed Zion Myers, his secretary to be personnel adjutant of Universal City, with instructions to compile an accurate service record of every employe.

The information will be used for the individual advancement of workers and for reassigning men who, by reason of experience and aptitude, are fitted for positions of more importance.

Mayor Rolph Sees "Hail the Woman"

At the invitation of Mayor James Rolph, Jr., of San Francisco, Thomas H. Ince celebrated Christmas by viewing the premiere of his latest and greatest production, "Hail the Woman," distributed by First National, at the Tivoli Theatre in company with the Bay City's chief executive.

Mayor Rolph and Mr. Ince were the guests of honor at the opening, which was an individual affair attended by a large number of San Francisco notables. Following the premiere, a banquet was tendered to Mr. Ince by Mayor Rolph and a number of prominent San Franciscans.

In addition to opening in San Francisco on Christmas Day, "Hail the Woman" was presented for the first time in New Orleans and a number of other large cities. It's Los Angeles premiere will be held at the Mission Theatre sometime during the middle of January.

Five First National Pictures on "Times" List of Big Films

Five First National attractions are included in the New York Times' list of the "most important pictures of 1921."

These five comprise one-third of the number selected—an exceptionally high average, exceeding that of any other company.

The five productions named are:

"The Kid," with Charles Chaplin.

"The Old Swimmin' Hole," with Charles Ray.

"Gypsy Blood," with Pola Negri.

"One Arabian Night," with Pola Negri and Ernst Lubitsch.

"All for a Woman," the Continental sensation.

In addition four other First National pictures won honorable mention in a list of twelve which can "Claim a place in any record of the year's achievements," and which were "good entertainment and an important contribution to the screen." They are:

"The Passion Flower," with Norma Talmadge.

"A Small Town Idol," a Mack Sennett five-reel comedy.

"Woman's Place," with Constance Talmadge.

"The Lotus Eater," a John Barrymore production directed by Marshall Neilan.

Bert Lytell on National Tour to Make Personal Appearances

Bert Lytell left Los Angeles this week for the first lap of his national tour, a six weeks' round of visits to the motion picture theatres of the country. The Metro star is scheduled to make as many personal appearances before photoplay audiences as his allotted time will permit.

The Bayard Veiller production, "Sherlock Brown," Mr. Lytell's most recent stellar vehicle, was completed only the day before his departure from Los Angeles. Plans for Mr. Lytell's screen play to follow "Sherlock Brown" have been worked out to the last detail.

SCENE FROM GOLDWYN'S "THE WALL FLOWER"

Preferred Signs Violet Clarke

Violet Clarke's story, "Domestic Relations," which Katherine MacDonald has just completed and which will be released by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., won for the young writer a long term contract with B. P. Schulberg, president of Preferred Pictures, the corporate name of the organization that makes the Katherine MacDonald screen product.

Miss Clarke is now engaged in preparing the scenario of Miss MacDonald's next First National offering, "White Shoulders." This new work is by George Kibbe Turner and originally appeared as a serial in the Saturday Evening Post. Recently it has been published in book form. Under her contract with Mr. Schulberg Miss Clarke will confine her writing exclusively to the Katherine MacDonald productions.

Makes Tie-Up for Paramount Film

An effective exploitation tie-up for William S. Hart's production, "The Whistle," has been made by the Paramount publicity department with the Whistle Idea, the house organ of the National Whistle Companies, manufacturers and distributors of the popular beverage known as "Whistle."

The Christmas number of the Whistle Idea carries a fine portrait of Bill Hart in character on the cover and inside is a full-page article on the advantage to agents in hooking-up with the Paramount picture. This article cites the tie-up recently made by Manager Kennedy of the Galax Theatre, Birmingham, Ala.

Walthall Heads "One Clear Call"

Henry B. Walthall heads the all-star cast in Louis B. Mayer's "One Clear Call," a John M. Stahl special now in the making, which is an adaptation of the book by Frances Nimmo Greene and will be released through First National.

Mr. Walthall has the role of a man who, in spite of his several crooked deals and the fact that his hotel-cafe is a blot on the civic honor of a small Alabama town, nevertheless commands a certain amount of admiration and respect for his deep love and great reverance for the young wife who deserted him.

Others in this cast are: Claire Windsor, Milton Sills, Irene Rich, Joseph Dowling, Shannon Day, Fred Kelsey, Nick Cogley, Annette De Fos and Edithe Yorke.

Perfects Plans for an Extensive Sales Drive

Plans were perfected during the past week by Sales Manager Andrew W. Smith, Jr., of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation for one of the most extensive sales drives yet launched by the Hodkinson Corporation in the interests of the Dial Film Company's production, "The Light in the Clearing," for the week of Lincoln's birthday.

Pathe Review No. 138 presents a series of interesting and entertaining subjects "The Devil's Pool" shows views of one of Nature's natural wonders in Bermuda; "Two Men and a Pickle" is a slow-motion study in facial expression; "The Little Mountaineers" presents views in the vicinity of Vonga, Portugal; "A Bare-Hand Alligator Hunt" is an exciting adventure tale of the Florida Everglades; and "The Holy City, Today," is a Pathecolor presentation showing places of interest in Jerusalem, Palestine. Pathe News Nos. 6 and 7 present the latest current events of the world of importance, photographed by the widespread staff of Pathe cameramen. Topics of the Day No. 3 presents the latest bits of wit and humor of the world culled from the world's presses.

Prologue for "My Boy" Proves Big Success at Brooklyn Strand

"In a Toy Shop," a prologue dance ıumber for First National's "My Boy," with Jackie Coogan, was the avory morsel presented Brooklyn udiences by Managing Director Edward L. Hyman at the Brooklyn Mark-Strand Theatre Christmas veek. This number, while making direct appeal to the children, was lso intended for "grown-ups" and udging from the reception it re-eived from both, it is one of the nost successful numbers Mr. Hyman ıas yet presented at Brooklyn's lead-ng photoplay house.

The setting used was a toy shop. A drop in the background was painted with toys, and in the centre was an entrance through which Mme. Sonia Serova, premier danseuse, as a sort of fairy god-mother entered to awaken the eight animated "toys" and "teddybears" placed about the shop.

The dancer was attired in a red ballet costume and carried a muff, which was probably the stimulant that awoke the "toys," for when she touched each of them with it they immediately stretched their tired joints.

The next number in their specialty was a dance in which all partook. The dancing "toys" slowly went through their motions with stiff muscles. A quarrel which led to a fist fight between the two "teddy-bears" afforded much amusement. The third number was a very lively affair, and at the conclusion the "toys" again became inanimate and assumed the positions in which they were first seen.

For this number the stage was flooded with a white light. The orchestra was light green and the transparent windows at the side of the stage were green.

Gerard's New Role

Joe Girard, the "heavy" of Ben Wilson serials the "Blue Fox" and "Nan of the North," is to be seen in the role of a sympathetic doctor in the forthcoming Arrow-Ben Wilson attraction "The Price of Youth" starring Miss Gerber.

Prologue designed by Edward L. Hyman for First National Picture, "My Boy," during its run at the Brooklyn Strand

All Classes Praise Arliss in "Disraeli,,

From representatives of various classes there continue to come indorsements of George Arliss and his film version of "Disraeli."

Adolph Steiner, rabbi, of Salt Lake City, Utah, writes: "The production is superb. It inspires loyalty and the highest type of service to one's government. Every man and woman should see this marvelous play and I am sure that they will learn a lesson of priceless worth." "The 'Disraeli' picture is a masterpiece," says George Emory Fellows, head of the Department of History and Political Science, University of Utah. "I have seen 'Disraeli,' writes Elmer J. Goshen, pastor of the First Congregational Church, Salt Lake City. It is a wonderful picture, fascinating and magnificent." Walter H. Golding, manager of the Imperial Theatre, St. Johns, N. F., writes: "'Disraeli' brought to our theatre the very best classes of our citizenship and I am happy to state that the picture not only delighted the so-called 'high-brows,' but that the less discriminating persons felt edified, instructed and got a good, old-fashioned thrill out of it in the bargain."

Fred Stone in R-C Picture

R-C Pictures announces for release on January 29, Fred Stone in "Billy Jim." The story was written by Jackson Gregory. It is a humorous Western picture.

Press Book and Complete Aids to Be Issued on Pathe Playlets

Every possible assistance will be rendered exhibitors by Pathe Exchange, Inc., in "putting over" the series of three reel "Pathe Playlets," the first of which will be Frank Keenan's "The Midnight Stage," set for release on January 29th.

Selling aids will be issued on each of the series of fifteen. Pathe is preparing an elaborate campaign book. Press stories will be included on each picture.

One, three and six sheets have been ordered, and star cuts will be available. Lobby displays, a slide and five black and white photographs will complete the exploitation material. From almost every branch comes word that exhibitors are keen for these three reel condensed features. The casts appeal greatly to the exhibitor, for each of the series contains one or more names that appear today in electric lights in front of the finest theatres in the country.

The return of Irene Castle to vaudeville, at a high salary, serves to again establish the popularity of this star who will appear in several of the "Pathe Playlets." Another prominent figure in the film world today and who appears in the "Pathe Playlets" is Helene Chadwick, who has starred in a number of recent big successes.

Frank Keenan, Elliott Dexter, Gail Kane, William Courtenay, Bruce McRae, Warner Oland, Florence Reed and Antonio Moreno, are all motion picture names to be conjured with, and they all figure in the principal roles of "Pathe Playlets."

Pathe believes it has picked a most opportune time for releasing its three reel attractions, for there are more exhibitors than ever before playing programs composed entirely of short subjects.

Good Business on "Manger to Cross"

Vitagraph's six-reel feature, "From the Manger to the Cross," is being used by many showmen as a special holiday-time offering. Many ran it for the entire week starting Christmas Day.

Manager Beretta of the Laughlin Theatre of Long Beach, California, circularized his patrons with the special heralds and a program on the back page of which he quotes Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst on the merit of the film.

Many exhibitors of large theatres throughout the country have made generous use of the newspaper on "From the Manager to the Cross," including the attractive 24-sheets. The seasonal appeal of the film is reported to be great.

Trade Press Critics Give High Praise to Tom Mix in "Sky High"

"Sky High," the Fox picture featuring Tom Mix, scheduled for January 22, received praise of the trade paper critics. In the role of a United States Immigration Inspector, Mix fights a gang of smugglers of Chinese coolies on the heights of the Grand Canyon of Arizona, where most of the scenes were filmed. Riding a horse up the precipitous cliffs of the great chasm and dipping deep into its perilous air pockets in an airplane, are merely details of this true thriller.

A few of the reviews follow, in part:

Wid's Daily, under the caption "Mix's Best Picture, with the Grand Canyon for a Background," says: "Tom Mix's current production is the best he has ever offered and one of the finest stunt pictures ever seen. The star's maneuvers on the dangerous precipices are likely to cause shortage of the breath and quite certain to bring spectators to the edge of their seats. There is one especially fine shot in the Grand Canyon that seems almost too impossible to be the real thing, where one plane flies low enough between the cliffs to drop Mix into the river. It is worth all the advertising and publicity you can give it."

Motion Picture News: "There is probably no doubt that every exhibitor and patron thought that Tom Mix had reached the peak of his pictures—that, having conquered the west, the star was up against it for novel ideas. But Tom Mix has shown in his latest release that he is a figure to be reckoned with. 'Sky High' is well named and before you know it you are in for a pictorial treat which is positively amazing in its scenic scope. There is Mix cutting up some new stunts. They are going to sit on the edge of their chairs, for it carries one big thrill from beginning to end. Hats off for Lynn Reynolds and Ben Kline, director and cameraman."

Moving Picture World: "'Sky High' appropriately describes this latest Tom Mix feature, as it ranks with his other success. Spectacular cliff formations, picturesque mountain paths over which the star does some dangerous swift riding, canyons, gorges, creeks of corresponding beauty, might be called a rival attraction to Tom Mix, so important is their appeal! The story is romantic and replete with opportunity for the star to exploit his own particular brand of stunts."

Exhibitors Trade Review: "Mr. Mix is at his best. Scaling perilous mountainsides, riding like a demon along rugged paths thousands of feet above the roaring Colorado River, or giving bad men a beating, he never pauses in his assiduous efforts to give the best that's in him. Fans who will travel miles to see Tom Mix will find this one worth the trip".

Alhambra Leased by Group of Five

The New Alhambra Theatre, the Home of First National attractions in Canton, O., has been leased by William H. Cavnah, John F. Dougherty, Elizabeth Dougherty and John Kessler, the latter being the present manager of the theatre. The lease was given by Samuel Luntz, Louis Kaven and Darwin Luntz for the period of five years with an option of an additional five years.

The lease states that the building is to be used for theatrical purposes including motion pictures and legitimate plays and that the lessees are to have the privilege of erecting a balcony in the building. A company to be known as The Kessler Theatre Company is now being formed for the purpose of conducting the theatre. Kessler will be president and general manager.

"The Ruling Passion" Selected as Title of New Arliss Picture

George Arliss, star in the successful film version of "Disraeli," and officials of Distinctive Productions, Inc., have decided on "The Ruling Passion" as the title for the new Arliss picture, which has been completed and is now being assembled and titled for an early release.

It is an adaptation of a short story by Earl Derr Biggers, published in the Saturday Evening Post under the title, "Idle Hands." Mr. Arliss will be seen in a role entirely different from anything he has ever presented, either on the speaking stage or on the screen. "The Ruling Passion" is a comedy drama, wherein Mr. Arliss stars as a benevolent philanthropist who resumes business life after making a fortune and retiring, finds therein the key to health and greater contentment than he had known since success first crowned his early efforts. The role is filled with delicious and delicate humor.

The scenario of "The Ruling Passion" is the work of Forrest Halsey, with the direction of Harmon Weight. The photography is by Harry A. Fischbeck, while Clark Robinson acted as art director.

With Mr. Arliss in the cast of "The Ruling Passion" are Doris Kenyon, Edward Burns, Ida Darling, J. W. Johnston, Ernest Hilliard, Harold Waldrige and Brian Darley. Mr. Burns plays the part of the young man who is the protegee of the character portrayed by Mr. Arliss.

R. Stanton Goes to British Firm

Recent reports that Richard Stanton had cabled his acceptance of an offer to direct and supervise productions for an important foreign concern are verified. Mr. Stanton is sailing on the New Amsterdam, leaving New York on January 4, under contract with the British International Film Corporation, Ltd. This is an organization of comparatively recent advent in the film world, largely controlled by English and Scotch capital, and is said to have for its executive heads several of the best known motion picture men in the United Kingdom.

A few days before sailing, Mr. Stanton said that the policy of the company was to make pictures for distribution in the United States, as well as abroad. His arrangement calls for distribution of "Richard Stanton Productions"—special features, for which three stories by celebrated authors already have been decided on.

Mountain Climbing in Goldwyn Graphic

"Climbing Mazamas," the title of the new Goldywn Graphic, produced by Bray Pictures Corporation for distribution by Goldwyn, and edited by Jack Eaton, is the name of an organization of amateur mountain climbers and not of a particular peak or range.

The pictures were taken by William and Irene Finley of the National Association of Audubon Societies and were titled by Katharine Hilliker. The views of mountain landscapes are some of the most beautiful which the camera has ever caught.

The Climbing Mazamas (or at least the male contingent) are shown ascending perpendicular cliffs, hacking out steps in the ice peaks and tobogganing down snowy inclines. A mountain lake, fed by water from the eternal snows, is seen and in this the young women of the party took a dip before descending to the plains.

Marion Davies in New Production

"When Knighthood Was in Flower," one of the most widely read novels in the English language will be made into a film starring Marion Davies of Cosmopolitan Productions. Work will begin on the new picture at the Jackson Avenue studios in a short time. Robert G. Vignola will direct.

Pollard Finishes One Hundredth Comedy for Pathe

At the Hal Roach Studios, the one hundredth comedy featuring "Snub" was practically finished on December 15 and without even pausing to take a full breath he immediately plunged into the hundred and first!

The new comedy plot, seemed to have been invented for this special occasion, for the subject relates to "Goat Glands." The comedian confesses that he earned his first money in the office of a dentist—sweeping the floor and washing the windows. He has done these things on the screen, too, but for considerably more money. Also he has elevated his social status with much comical effect as Governor, Judge, Mayor, millionaire, with occasional relapses into the roles of "ham" actor, policeman, carpenter, blacksmith, dog catcher, gardener, prize fighter, baker, cook, grocer, convict and "stage door Johnnie."

Harry "Snub" Pollard is a native Australian. He is now planning for a three months' vacation. He hopes to sail about April 1st for his home in Melbourne, where his parents still live.

New Williams Film

Earle Williams has begun a new Vitagraph production at the Hollywood studios, under the direction of Edward Jose, who has gone to the West Coast expressly for that purpose. It is called "The Man From Downing Street," and was written especially for the Vitagraph star by Clyde Westover, Lottie Horner and Florine Williams, the last named being the wife of the actor.

26 Cameramen Used

Harry Plimpton, cameraman of the Fox company that went abroad last May to make "Nero" in Rome, arrived in New York the first week in December. He reported the Americans as having a fine time between work periods in Italy, and was bubbling with enthusiasm for the picture for which he turned the crank.

Serial Story of "A Man's Home" Published in Many Newspapers

The publicity department of the Selznick organization made an unusual experiment in the preparation of a serial story, written by Anna Steese Richardson, co-author of the play on which the screen drama, "A Man's Home," was founded. The serial was cast in mat form and offered in four installments to 300 daily papers. Miss Richardson, as an active newspaper woman, and associate editor of Woman's Home Companion, had a personal standing through her visits to scores of newspaper offices throughout the country. The "Man's Home" serial was declared to be a well written and as engaging as any of the stories regularly syndicated and nearly one-third of the papers accepted the proposition, the Cleveland Daily News being the first paper to print the novelization.

The Washington (D. C.) Post printed the story in one Sunday installment. The Rochester Times-Union, Salt Lake City Telegram and Albany Journal were among the papers that ran the story when it was first released. Since it was first "planted" local managers have taken up the matter of placing the serial in their home papers in conjunction with the showings of "A Man's Home" and the matter has now passed to branch managers who are using the serial in co-operation with theatres.

In conjunction with the engagement of "A Man's Home" at the New York Capitol, week before Christmas, the Brooklyn Daily Times ran the serial and an arrangement has been made with the Newark (N. J.) Theatre. Several other instances have developed where newspapers have agreed to run the serial as a direct tie-up with local showings of the photoplay thereby giving help to exhibitors.

"Foolish Age" Has Premiere at State Theatre, Los Angeles

Loew's New State Theatre, Los Angeles, did record-breaking business when Doris May's first Hunt Stromberg Production, "The Foolish Age," an R-C Picture, was given its Los Angeles premiere last week.

Preceded by a publicity-exploitation campaign which heralded the advent of Doris May as a star in her own right, and enhanced by presentation music and features singular to the standards of the new Loew house, "The Foolish Age" won the plaudits of both public and critics, it is said.

On the opening night, Sunday, December 18, waiting lines that extended for a block bore testimony to the interest assumed by the film capital in the first Doris May picture bearing the R-C Pictures trademark. Manager Nat Holt of Loew's had exploited the picture generously during its run.

The Los Angeles newspapers cooperated with a volume of feature publicity. According to Manager Holt, the engagement of "The Foolish Age" was marked with more constructive straight newspaper publicity than was jointly given any three preceding pictures, combined.

New Renco Film Production for Release by Hodkinson

"At the Sign of the Jack O'Lantern," a Renco Film Production directed by Lloyd Ingraham, is the next picture scheduled for early January release by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, according to an announcement from the Hodkinson home office. This is the second Renco production to be released by Hodkinson, the first having been "Lavender and Old Lace," by Myrtle Reed. "At the Sign of the Jack O'Lantern" is also a Myrtle Reed story.

The exploitation possibilities of "At the sign of the Jack O'Lantern" has prompted the Hodkinson advertising department to issue an unusually comprehensive plan book, which is now in the course of completion and will be ready at the time the production is released.

Barbee's Loop Books Seven from Hodkinson

Seven Hodkinson released productions have been booked for Barbee's Loop Theatre in Chicago to be shown at the rate of two a month, according to an announcement form the Hodkinson home office in New York. They are "The Mysterious Rider," "Rip Van Winkle," "Jane Eyre," "Cameron of the Royal Mounted," "Fifty Candles," "French Heels" and "The Light in the Clearing."

Each production in the list is scheduled for a minimum showing of one week. At the rate of two productions a month, the Hodkinson showing at Barbee's Loop will be extended over a period of three months, with the possibility that some of the productions will be held over for two weeks.

June Elvidge in Paramount Film

June Elvidge, former star in World Pictures, concert singer and member of the Winter Garden Passing Show, has been cast in an important role, that of Lady Anningford, in "Beyond the Rocks," Elinor Glyn's second story for the screen, which Sam Wood is now directing at Paramount's West Coast studio with Gloria Swanson in the stellar role.

With the addition of Miss Elvidge and also of Mabel Van Buren, former Paramount star, and with Rudolph Valentino playing the male lead, the cast of "Beyond the Rocks" has assumed truly all-star proportion.

"Why Men Forget" an R-C Picture

Scheduled for release during February, is "Why Men Forget," presented by R-C Pictures. The play is adapted fro mthe novel, "Demos," by George Gissing, an English writer. Denison Clift was director.

Shipman Handling Bollman Interests

Henry O. Bollman, manager of the Dial Film Company, who fostered "The Light in the Clearing," announces that Ernest Shipman with offices at 17 West Forty-fourth street, New York, has been appointed New York representatives for his company. Mr. Shipman will represent the interests of Bollman in his two former productions, "King Spruce' 'and "The Tiger's Coat," as well as in his new production.

King and Queen See Educational

A cable was received from London recently by E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., stating that Lyman H. Howe's "Ride on a Runaway Train," the single-reel thriller, was shown before the King and Queen and all the royal family. The showing took place in Buckingham Palace, London. Five hundred guests and servants of the royal family attended.

Selects Name for Pathe Serial

Ever since Charles Hutchison and his supporting company started work on the serial planned to succeed the popular "Hurricane Hutch," the selection of an appropriate title for Pathe's new "thrill a minute" chapter play has been a problem vexatious to the most competent word-jugglers in and about the Pathe executive offices. Projections of the first three or four episodes are said to have made the problem all the more difficult of solution, it being apparent, it is said, that both in the vigor and intensity of the action and the wealth and startling character of the "stunts," the record even of "Hurricane Hutch" would be eclipsed.

However, a title has finally been selected, that of "Go-Get-'Em Hutch." The picture is being produced and directed by George B. Seitz and Marguerite Clayton is the heroine.

San Francisco's Granada Opens with Bosworth's "White Hands"

"White Hands," the Max Graf production of C. Gardner Sullivan's story, a Wid Gunning release, starring Hobart Bosworth, was given a pre-release showing at the opening of the new Granada Theatre in San Francisco on Monday, January 9, before a distinguished audience which included city officials and leading citizens.

A wire received at the Wid Gunning home offices immediately after the opening, told briefly of the great reception given the latest of Bosworth's appearances on the screen. The occasion, according to this information from a special representative of the Gunning organization, took on a triple significance.

First, it marked the opening of the Granada Theatre, a beautiful new 3,000 seat, first-run house, said to be on a par with the finest picture theatre in the country. Second, it marked the first public showing of a picture which had aroused great interest because of its plot and production.

But of the greatest interest to the San Francisco audience was the fact that it is the first picture made at the new studios at San Mateo, near San Francisco, which were erected by business men of that city anxious to induce producers to settle permanently there. Mr. Graf was the first producer invited to take advantage of the elaborate and up-to-date equipment installed there.

Unusual Cast Portrays Leading Characters in "The Sin Flood"

The great cast of players in Goldwyn's six-star special, "The Sin Flood," from Henning Berger's drama, "Syndafloden," has been one of the factors arousing keen interest among exhibitors, exceeding that in any Goldwyn film before its showing.

In its cast are six stars, while five other players measure well up to them. Two players are featured, Helene Chadwick and Richard Dix, a popular new leading man recently recruited from the stage. Miss Chadwick has appeared in the several Goldwyn productions. Richard Dix made his first appearance as a Goldwyn leading man opposite Miss Chadwick in "Dangerous Curve Ahead" and plays opposite her in three unreleased pictures. He has also played in other Goldwyn films. James Kirkwood appeared on the speaking stage with prominent stars, was later a motion picture director, and has been prominent in many recent photoplays. Ralph Lewis is one of the screen's foremost character actors. He is another recruit from the speaking stage. Will Walling also appeared in many roles on the speaking stage, and more recently in several Goldwyn pictures. John Steppling used to play Shakespeareon roles on the stage, and has for several years been identified with screen successes. Other players with fine records, who appear in "The Sin Flood," are William Orlamond, Otto Hoffman, L. H. King, Darwin Karr and Howard Davies. Frank Lloyd directed.

Kunsky Books Inkwell Comedies

Striking proof of the nationwide popularity of Max Fleischer's "Out of the Inkwell" comedies, came this week from the headquarters of John Kunsky's new 4,000-seat picture palace, the Capitol, at Detroit.

The request for this single-reel subject came in the form of a wire addressed to the "Out of the Inkwell" Corp. at 220 West 42nd street. It read: "Can we rent 'Out of the Inkwell' comedy for opening of the Capitol, new 4,000-seat house, for ten days, starting January 12? Please wire immediately."

It was purely on the merit of the subject that the Capitol forces made the request, it is said. "Out of the Inkwell" creations played at the Criterion eight weeks, and then at the Rialto and Rivoli houses in New York. When the management of the Capitol in Detroit cast about for a suitable short subject to mark the opening of Kunsky's latest link in his theatre chain, the first selection that came to mind was this Max Fleischer's single-reelers, according to reports.

Two subjects were shipped to the Capitol, "Fishing" and "Invisible Ink," and it was left to the recipients to decide which to use.

Vignola Making Supreme Effort

Robert G. Vignola's supreme effort as a director will be "When Knighthood Was in Flower," according to present indications. Mr. Vignola will begin shortly the production of this famous stage play with Marion Davies in the role of Mary Tudor, sister of Henry VIII. It is stated that it is planned to make this production not only the greatest Mr. Vignola has ever turned out, but also the greatest yet sponsored by Cosmopolitan.

Changed Titles

Announcement of changes in the titles of two of its current releases is made by Associated First National Pictures, Inc. "Polly of the Follies" is the new title of the Constance Talmadge production, formerly called "Good for Nothing." "A Bride of the Gods," produced by J. L. Frothingham, has been renamed "Shattered Idols."

New York Newspaper Critics Praise "Pardon My French"

Vivian Martin, pleased New York newspaper critics again in her impersonation of the stranded actress in her second Messmore Kendall production, "Pardon My French," distributed by Goldwyn. It was the offering at the Capitol Theatre, New York, week of Dec. 18. "Pardon My French" is an inconsequential little farce, filled with gaiety and good humor, adapted from a story by Edward Childs Carpenter called "Polly in the Pantry," and directed by Sidney Olcott.

The New York Tribune said of it: "An interesting amusing picture. Sidney Olcott has missed no opportunity to infuse his own humor into the picture. American: "Gay, not to be taken seriously. Has all of the farcical situations of a popular variety of cartoons. You find yourself laughing. Irvin S. Cobb has injected some of his luscious humor into the subtitles."

Herald: "Miss Vivian Martin plays an actress as an actress should." World: "Really funny subtitles by Irvin S. Cobb. But Miss Martin is the real attraction. Mail: "Subtitles, written by Irvin S. Cobb, are just about the best titles that Mr. Cobb has given to the screen. The film has a goodly number of laughs of its own." Journal: "The story is broadest farce, built for laughter purposes only." Telegram: "A charming farce-comedy that gives Vivian Martin a chance as a comedienne in a story half comic and half dramatic, full of entertaining moments and fun." Eve. World: "As foamy and frothy as an over-yeasted batch of bungalow brew.

Added to Cost

Mary Thurman, well-known screen beauty and leading woman, has been added to the cast of "The Paramount picture which is now in production at the Lasky studio under direction of William D. Taylor.

First National Film for Opening

The Hollywood Theatre, 7725 New Utrecht Avenue, Brooklyn, although still under construction, promises to be one of Brooklyn's prettiest moving picture houses. It will be an 1100 seat house. The opening date is set for January 15 with "The Child Thou Gavest Me," a First National picture produced by John M. Stahl.

The management of the Theatre signed a pledge card to play First National Attractions solid the week of February 18 to the 25th. First National Anniversary week.

First Pathe News for 1922 Shows Important Events of Past Year

The new year confronts the editor of Pathe News with a painful duty in order that subscribers may enjoy a swift review of the important events of the year past. Accordingly, Pathe News No. 1, the first issue of 1922, released on December 31, "scraps" interesting pictures to gain footage sufficient in which to present vivid flashes of news highlights in the "passing show" of 1921 events.

The task was not an easy one, owing to the exceptional richness of last year's news output. It finally sifted down to the following: The inauguration of President Harding; scenes of the last days and the burial of the great tenor, Caruso; the Dempsey-Carpentier fight; U. S. Naval aeroplane demonstrations of the ease and comparatively insignificant expense of destroying battleships by bombing them from the air; the wreck of the great dirigible Z R-2 on the eve of its proposed voyage across the Atlantic and the loss of nearly all of the crew and passengers.

Burial of America's unknown war hero—final scenes of those comprising a series of ceremonies here and abroad, and which were compiled by Pathe News for a two-reel War Department permanent record. Outstanding scenes of American cities' receptions to Marshal Foch and other great war leaders. Scenes at the Disarmament Conference in Washington, picturing the more famous delegates. Settlement of the Anglo-Irish disagreements which had harrassed both sides for 750 years.

Carew May Return to West Coast for Big Picture

Having launched his histrionic career under the Belasco tutelage coincidently with Jane Cowl, Arthur Edmund Carew now in New York, is one of the most sought-after performers before the camera.

Carew came from New York to appear with Jean Paige in "The Prodigal Judge," the Vitagraph special which has been heralded so widely and in which his work is said to be noteworthy.

While still working under the direction of Edward Jose, Carew was engaged to play one of the featured roles with Sigrid Holmquist and Monte Blue in Ray Smallwood's Pyramid production of "My Old Kentucky Home."

He has just returned from the south; the company was shooting exteriors at New Orleans and still has a fortnight's work until the completion of the Smallwood offering.

For a long time a well known stage player, Carew has definitely thrown his lot in with the silent drama and is considering offers to return to the west coast to appear in productions soon to be launched there.

Pathe Serial Upsets Precedent

Another precedent has been upset by the newest Pathe serial, "White Eagle," starring Ruth Roland. Beginning January 7, this continued story opened at Barbee's Loop, in downtown Chicago. The strong appeal of the West in the Pathe attraction has met with remarkable response from exhibitors, who remembered Miss Roland's triumph in "Hands Up," "Ruth of the Rockies" and other Western serials in which she appeared. But the unusual construction of "White Eagle" is what is making the precedent. A Western serial without gunplay would have been laughed at a couple of years ago, but such is "White Eagle," and as such it is meeting with a response from exhibitors that will make it exceed, it is stated, the returns on "Huricane Hutch," which thus far holds the record for Pathe serial bookings.

"Battle of Jutland" Screened for Students at Naval Academy

A special showing of "The Battle of Jutland" was given by Educational at the Naval Academy at Annapolis the evening of January 7. With a midshipmen's "hop" going on at the same time and a local theatre near the post running two very popular pictures, students, officers and their guests turned out in such numbers to see "The Battle of Jutland" that the Academy auditorium, which seats 1,100, was jammed to overflowing. With 400 people standing in the rear of the main floor and balcony, and with midshipmen sitting on the floor in the aisles, there were still more than one hundred who were unable to get into the hall at all.

Captain Kurtz, commandant of midshipmen at the Academy, declared the audience was the largest in his recollection at the Academy, in spite of the two big rival attractions. An official invitation to the showing had been extended to "all hands," and the turnout was remarkable. A complete program of short subjects also was given for the entertainment of the middies and their guests. The same program was repeated at the Marine Barracks in Washington, on the evening of January 9.

"Quo Vadis" Is Breaking Gate Records

"Quo Vadis," the famous Italian spectacle, released in its 1922 form by Wid Gunning, Inc., is breaking one attendance record after another, both in this country and in Canada, according to reports received at the Gunning home offices.

In Canada, it is reported "Quo Vadis" opened at the Strand Theatre, Toronto, for a week's run. So great was the success of the picture, it was held over for a second week, against the established house policy. It was then booked over the Famous Players Canadian circuit of forty-two houses, following this in the same towns with second-runs over the Allen circuit.

After its Toronto engagement, it was held for one week, then went into Loew's Young Street Theatre, Toronto, for a second run. Then it was booked over the Canadian Pantages circuit, playing houses in Regina, Saskatoon, Edmonton, Calgary and Vancouver.

Royal Showing

"The Kid" has appeared befor the crowned heads of Europe b royal command. This epochal ever occurred in the royal residence a Sandringham. In addition to th King there were present Quee Mary, Queen Mother Alexandri the King and Queen of Norway and more than 500 other titled per sonages.

Lionel Barrymore Is Star in Production, "Boomerang Bill"

"Boomerang Bill," featuring Lionel Barrymore, created by Cosmopolitan Productions, under the direction of Tom Terriss, is said to be the best screen work of Mr. Barrymore's career. Cosmopolitan says it is a virile, straight-from-the-shoulder, red-blooded character drama. It is the story of a gunman—not a narrative of crime, but an analysis of the heart of a "white" crook.

The original story was written by Jack Boyle for Cosmopolitan Magazine. The scenario was written by Doty Hobart, who prepared the script of "The Woman God Changed." It was Tom Terriss fiftieth production and his first for Cosmopolitan Productions. Jack Boyle, the author, is well-known to magazine readers as the author of the "Boston Blackie" stories which have aroused much interest.

Mr. Barrymore is aided in "Boomerang Bill" by a strong supporting cast. Marguerite Marsh is the leading woman. Margaret Seddon, who played in "Just Around the Corner," again has a mother role. Frank Shannon, scoring a great success in the stage production of "Anna Christie" in New York, has the role of a genial policeman.

First National to Revive Four of Chaplin's Comedy Successes

The first comedies made by Charles Chaplin for First National are to be revived. The comedian made four two-reelers before embarking upon the ambitious undertaking which resulted in "The Kid," and there has been such a perennial demand for the short comedies that it was decided to re-issue them, with new prints and advertising accessories.

The order of release will be as follows: February 6, "A Dog's Life;" March 6, "Sunnyside;" April 3, "Shoulder Arms;" May 1, "A Day's Pleasure."

Like a certain commodity now forbidden by law, Chaplin's first four comedies for Associated First National release seem to improve with age. It is a rarity for a print of any of them to lie idle on the shelves of the exchanges; at times there is spirited competition among the theatres, large and small, for them.

The experience of the Plaza Theatre, Madison avenue and Fifty-ninth street, New York City, illustrates the keen and constant demand for these pictures. This house, which has a high-class clientele, and whose night prices range up to 75 cents, has brought back "Shoulder Arms" four times and "A Dog's Life" three times. Manager Leo Brecher has discovered that his patrons never tire of them and therefore shows them at frequent intervals.

SCENES FROM "CALL THE WITNESS," FEATU RING "SNUB" POLLARD. A PATHE RELEASE

"Without Benefit of Clergy" Praised by the Toronto Globe

Rudyard Kipling's "Without Benefit of Clergy," released by Pathe, registering a big success in Canada, according to all reports coming from the Dominion. This story of India had its premier recently in Toronto, and the motion picture critic of the Toronto World says in part: "Two weeks ago, the opinion was expressed in this column that the present season had, so far, brought us only two pictures of the first rank, 'The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse' and 'The Old Nest.'

"Things are beginning to improve, for we can now add a third one, 'Without Benefit of Clergy.'

"I am quite aware that an enthusiastic reference to this picture may raise again the old discussion as to whether movies of quality are calculated to win popularity. I am not going to claim that 'Without Benefit of Clergy' will prove a big drawing card as a picture. But I do say that it ought to be.

"The beauty of 'Without Benefit of Clergy' is that the producer did not start out to show that fellow Kipling how his story could be improved. A very earnest effort has been made to put this lovely idyl on the screen so that it would ring true and be appealing.

"The sincerity of the production is what makes it stand out among the pictures that I have seen this season. It has a great deal of atmosphere. It gives you somewhat the same feeling to watch that you get when you read Kipling's story, and that is more than can be said of the majority of picturized tales or novels.

"Now it so happens that I have more faith in movie fans than the majority of people. I am convinced that a great many of them do not lock their intelligence in the bureau drawer when they go to the picture theatre. That is why I feel convinced that 'Without Benefit of Clergy' is going to be liked and remembered by more people than the majority of silent dramas.

Playgoers Statement Shows It Has Films in Many Theatres

In announcing the continuation of its policy to release features on the basis of thirty-six a year, Playgoers Pictures has issued a statement calling attention to progress made during 1921, which shows that more than 500 theatres have contracted for its product on that basis.

A complete list is not included in this statement, but it is evident that exhibitors in every section of the country have taken up the Playgoers proposition and are showing its features at regular intervals. The system was inaugurated last September. The Playgoers statement shows that up to the present time the Playgoers program has been marked by a high percentage of excellent features.

In concluding the statement, Playgoers lists the following theatres which are using their features, and says that, while not numerically representative, for such a list would be too lengthy, the line-up affords a good idea of the manner in which the plan is taking hold from a national point of view: Strand, Key West, Fla.; Grand, Chattanooga, Tenn.; Gem, Knoxville, Tenn.; Dixie, Galveston, Texas; Majestic, Bowie, Texas; King, Forest Park, Ill.; Strand, Morris, Minn.; Isis, Fargo, N. D.; Booth, Arcade, New 125th St., West End, Yorkville Casino, New York City.

Belvedere, Brooklyn; Olympia, Bangor, Maine; Orpheum, Dover, N. H.; Elen, Portland, Maine; Richmond, North Adams, Mass.; Hippodrome, Oswego, N. Y.; Delmont, Oakmont, Pa.; National and Queen Anne, Cincinnati, Ohio; Grand, Dayton, Ohio; Overland, Liberty and Strand, Toledo; Orpheum, Youngstown; Penn, Philadelphia; Central, Atlantic City; Brooklyn, Kansas City, Mo.; Star and Model, Sioux City, Iowa; Dreamland, Saginaw, Mich.; Crystal, Milwaukee; Casino, Spokane; Circle, Portland, Ore.; Isis, San Francisco; Hipodrome, Sacramento.

Board of Review Honors Fox Films

Five Fox productions are in the list of forty-seven motion pictures which the National Committee of the National Board of Review considers, from the viewpoint of entertainment, to be the "finest year's group since photodrama was created."

The Fox pictures are "Over the Hill" and "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," "Sky High," starring Tom Mix; and to be released in January; "Jackie," with Shirley Mason, and "Trailin'," Tom Mix's current release.

"Over the Hill" Breaks Gross Revenue Record

"Over the Hill," which ran a year on Broadway, has created another record. According to the Fox Film Corporation, the picture's revenue has totalled more than $2,500,000 since its release to first-run houses in the key cities of the United States alone.

These statistics for period prior to December 15, are said to show the greatest returns ever achieved by a single production where the expense of producing was so comparatively small. This amount includes only the actual receipts, and not estimated returns from small cities and towns.

Its fame has spread throughout the globe and demands for prints are being received from the Orient. In response, William Fox is arranging for a broader system of distribution in the Far East.

"Sailor-Made Man" Wins Praise from the New York Newspapers

In commenting upon the Christmas week program of the Capitol Theatre, Associated Exhibitors says New York newspapers lay particular emphasis upon the Harold Lloyd feature, "A Sailor-Made Man."

The Evening Globe said: "Most of the freaky speed films are as uninteresting as an automobile race, but Lloyd speeds along so nonchalantly and has such fun himself (apparently) that you laugh and do not even wonder how he manages to keep his shell rimmed glasses on."

The Evening Mail said: "Harold Lloyd seems to take new strides in his progress as a screen comedian with every new production in which he appears." Harriet Underhill, in the Morning Tribune, remarks that "'A Sailor-Made Man' is quite as amusing as Harold Lloyd's comedies have been in the past, which is the highest form of praise."

The Evening Sun says: "Harold Lloyd is the hero of the bill at the Capitol, in his latest comedy, 'A Sailor-Made Man,' in which he dives into a sea of trouble."

The New York World says: "The young man, Harold Lloyd, who is at this time our most prolific comedy star, appears here in his latest photoplay, 'A Sailor-Made Man,' and it is enormously funny."

Seena Owen Star in "Back Pay"

The Cosmopolitan production, "Back Pay," by Fannie Hurst, author of "Humoresque," is the feature scheduled for release by Paramount January 8.

Frances Marion wrote the scenario and Frank Borzage directed. Chester Lyons was responsible for the photography. Seena Owen has the leading role playing opposite her is Matt Moore.

SCENES FROM "FIVE DAYS TO LIVE," STARRING SESSUE HAYAKAWA AND TSURA AOKI. RELEASED BY R-C PICTURES

This Pathe Playlet Series Provides Good Small Features on Double Bills

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

ANOTHER step in the provision of small features for the exhibitor who desires a varied program is found in the Pathe Playlets which will be released in three-reel form, once a week, commencing January 29. They will be particularly valuable to the manager who desires a second dramatic title, yet who does not wish to unduly lengthen his program by the use of a second five-reel release. Because of their general availability, these playlets should be widely booked, and consideration of the exploitation angles should be of interest.

It should be understood by your patron that these are not new productions, but are re issued stories, cut to three-reel length and re-edited, for sub-titles, but retaining the original release title. They are not new, and should not be offered as such. To the contrary the manager should make distinct advertising capital of the fact that in these playlets he offers the pick of the Pathe releases in tabloid form.

Sell the Names

The releases will be booked as a series and not independently, and the wise manager will set out to sell the entire series before he offers the first. If time permits he will devote a couple of weeks to paving the way, selling the two big ideas of the pick of the plays and the number of the stars.

Tell the patrons that of all of the plays released by Pathe in the past two years the best fifteen have been selected for re-issue in condensed form. Tell that in this period many in the then supporting casts have been elevated to stardom.

Has Two Stars

Perhaps the best illustration of this is to be found in "Convict 993," in which Mrs. Castle is supported by Helene Chadwick, now a Goldwyn star, and Elliot Dexter, who is close to Paramount stardom.

The general campaign book, which is to be issued on the series, will give you the complete list of stars who appear in the various plays, both in the mass and by productions. You can get the best effect by listing all of the stars in the preparatory articles, taking up the individual players as they appear in the various releases.

Taking by and large, this release series offers a larger number of present day star names for the money than any other series, and this fact should be worked to the limit.

Start off with a list of the stars. Head it "You know these stars," then list the names and add: "They will appear at this theatre shortly." It will make an imposing list. Then follow with the details in a second advertisement.

Then work your second big angle. Point out that time and again the patron has seen plays which would have been infinitely better had they been shorter. More than one otherwise good story has been spoiled by padding.

Tell Them They Are Crisp

Tell your patrons that you are going to show a series in which there is not a single inch of padding. Tell them you will show five-reel stories cut right down to the meat, fast in action, crisp in plot and complete in story.

And tell that these will be the pick of several hundred plays done by Pathe and not the regular run of program.

Play up the cream of the product idea. Get two milk bottles. Fill one nine-tenths full of white flour and the top with fine cornmeal. That's the program cream. Then fill the other with cornmeal alone, the Pathe Playlets. Then write a card to fit the cream idea and display the bottles in your lobby. Keep this display and bring it out each time you have one of the playlets, if you have a daily change. If you book for three days, the display will become hackneyed, but it will stay fresh if used only one day each week.

Directors, Too

You can get some selling from the directors. George Fitzmaurice directed about half of these plays and these are the productions on which he made his reputation. The Fitzmaurice name also has a box office value, so use it to get what you can.

Invent a name for the series. Call it an "All Star Revue" or something of that sort, that will suggest that the series will call into new prominence the successes of the immediate past, but don't permit the suggestion to creep in that these releases are "has beens." They are not.

New and Fresh

Don't use anything smacking of "Old Timers' Week." Use instead, something to suggest the stars of today in the successes of yesterday. Make it "yesterday" and not "other years."

Tell that the series is all new, new prints, new sub-titles and cut according to the latest ideas in editing. You will have new paper to help along, for each title carries one—three and six sheets of new design, in addition to which you get star cuts, lobby displays, a slide for each release and a set of black and white stills for lobby and newspaper work. A single campaign book carries the press and billing matter for the entire series.

Play Them Up

And don't permit the suggestion that this is a filler series. Don't go by the price, but by your opportunities. You can make this of equal importance with your lately released feature and the pictures will stand up in comparison. Only the first two have been cut for showing at this writing, "The Midnight Stage," with Frank Keenan, and "Convict 993," with Irene Castle, but these have not been specially selected and they show the good average of the series. Were it not for the fact that the titles are old, these might be offered as the newest releases.

Be Honest

But because the titles are well-known, don't try to camouflage. Tell that these are re-issues and gain merit from the fact that they are well worthy of repetition.

Spend money on a form letter or in special advertising. Talk to your patrons on the screen, and in person, if you have opportunity. Break away from the exploded first-run idea and make your supporters realize that the value of the play and not its date is what determines its entertainment value.

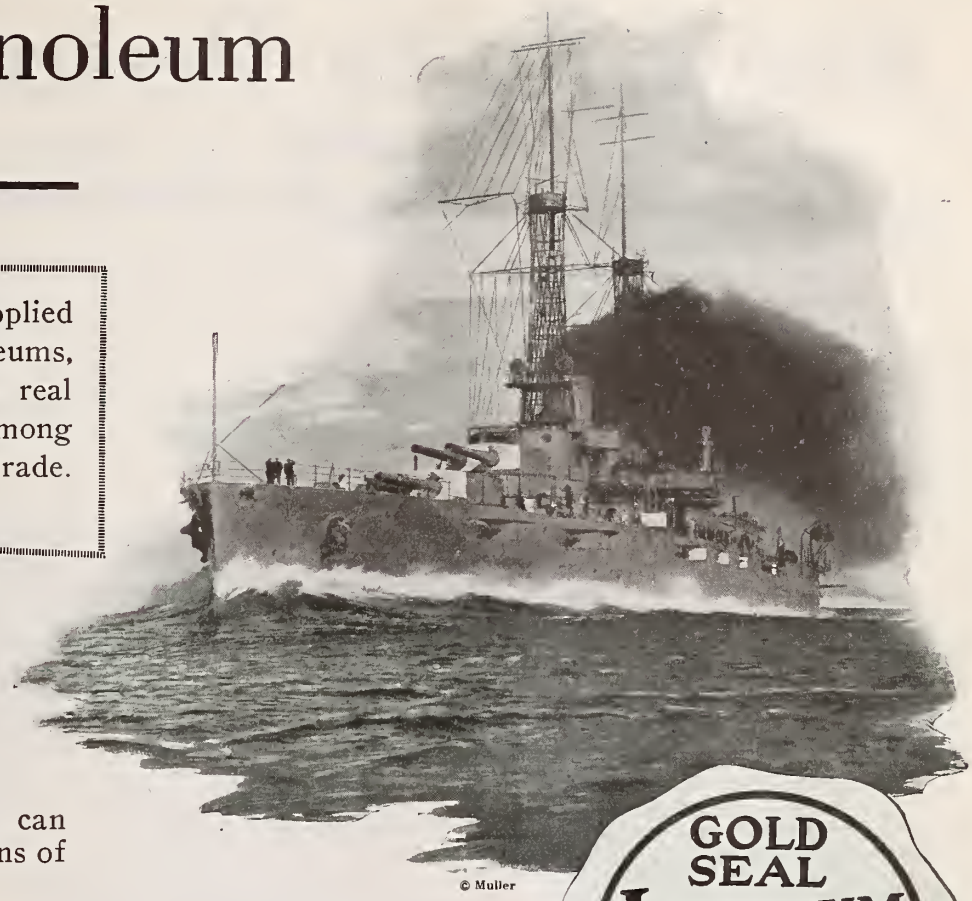
If you can do this, the playlets will make both money and reputation for you.

TWO INTERESTING SCENES FROM FORTHCOMING RELEASES IN THE PATHE PLAYLET SERIES

On the left is a scene from "The Midnight Stage," with Frank Keenan and Ernest Warde, his director. The other shows Mrs. Irene Castle and Warner Oland in a scene from "Convict 993," in which the gentlemanly master mind seeks to draw the persecuted heroine into his trap and finds himself caught. Two of the Pathe hits which have been condensed into three reels for this fifteen title series released at the end of the month

Battleship Linoleum Defined—

The term "Battleship" has been misapplied so widely to solid-color heavy linoleums, regardless of their quality, that its real meaning is often lost sight of, even among architects and in the floor-covering trade. Here is the explanation.



In the first place, the designation "battleship" linoleum is not now, and never has been, the trade name of any single manufacturer's product. Instead, it stands for a fixed and inflexible standard of quality—a standard so high that this material can withstand even the most severe conditions of battleship service.

"Made According to U. S. Navy Standard"

Genuine battleship linoleum—of U. S. Navy Standard—is made according to the exacting specifications of the Navy Department for linoleum to be used on the decks of naval vessels. It must prove up under various tests, some of which are: the bending test, indentation test, absorption test, and burlap test. Other requirements concern the necessity for highest grade materials, uniformity of color and finish, seasoning, etc.

Gold-Seal Battleship Linoleum is genuine battleship linoleum. It conforms in all respects to U. S. Navy Specifications and should not be confused with so-called battleship linoleums which do not conform to the Navy Standard.

Purchasers of Gold-Seal Battleship Linoleum are doubly protected—first, by the specifications prepared by the United States Navy Department, which insure the very highest quality; and, second, by our Gold-Seal Guarantee, which pledges "Satisfaction or Your Money Back."

Keeping in Personal Touch

By FRITZ TIDDEN

NOWADAYS the easiest—hence the most common—exploitation of one's critical faculty is found in slanging the movies," says Robert E. MacAlarney in The Forum.

To enforce how easy it is to get an arraignment of the movies published we will recite a little tale that actually took place just long ago enough so that it may be called up to date and still far enough away that it will be difficult to trace.

It seems that a young gentleman of our intimate acquantance made a wager with a friend that he could get anything he said against movies published in a magazine of wide national circulation, stipulating that he would write the article on a false premise and proceed along absolutely untruthful lines. He stated that editors of magazines did not care how truthful the arraignment might be as long as it took a resounding wallop at moving pictures, and that practically any editor would accept for publication such an article providing it was bitter in condemnation.

The friend said he was wrong and took the wager, but not until it was agreed upon that the article must be accepted by one of a certain group of magazines, all of which, for convenience sake, are called nationally famous and important. Then the young fellow who was to write the article, who he will call Z, sat himself down to his Remington and dashed off the most bitter arraignment of moving pictures that has ever been written, even by the screen's most prejudiced enemies.

Z was a movie man himself and knew all the real shortcomings of the industry, but he went to his task with all the venum, unfairness and bias that is customarily evident in the usual slams at the movies. And he took great pains to base his attack upon the most preposterously untrue premise and went after pictures with false statement after false statement about their worth, cultural significance and art, not neglecting to make the usual cracks about the low brows engaged in the promotion of pictures. The whole thing was a monument of lies built upon a lie, but it was hot stuff. It was so preposterous on the face of it that any man, woman or child would have staked their lives that it would not be accepted by any magazine editor.

It was accepted by the first editor to whom it was sent! And it appeared in print in an unusually short time, considering that the particular magazine buys its stuff, and frequently gets it set, on a distant future schedule.

But you don't know the half of it. Z, of course, wrote the article under an assumed name and was well paid for it, regardless of the fact that the editor did not know whether his opinions were of any value. And then the following month he wrote on assignment from the same magazine a denial of the facts in the first article under his own name.

Easy? It's a cinch. But the public is wise to the procedure of slanging movies. It knows that nine-tenths of the arraignments published in the magazines are the billious outpourings of men who do not know a thing of what they are writing. It takes these articles for their full worth—the easy manner in which anybody that can hold a pen or do general housework on a typewriter may grab a few easy dollars.

Coming! The Old-Timers Dinner!

HOW long have you been in, on, or of, the moving picture business? Has it been ten years?

If it has, you are an old timer, a young old timer, and you are eligible to attend the

which will be held in the month of March and in a place, at a time, and price decided by the committee. Joseph Miles has consented to act as chairman of the credentials committee. Harry L. Reichenbach has agreed to serve as master of ceremonies. The sentiment has been sounded and it's for the dinner and all that it will mean to those who are eligible to attend.

The committee will pass on your status promptly. If you have put in ten years in this, the greatest of all businesses, the finest of all human endeavors, send word to the undersigned in care of Moving Picture World, 516 Fifth Avenue, and send word today. You will want to be a part of it.

The industry has been requested to aid in the campaign for the suppressing of all jokes ridiculing prohibition enforcement.

Miss Adella Potter, chairman of the Committee on Patriotism and Law Enforcement of the New York City Federation of Women's Clubs, has written to the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry enclosing a resolution recently adopted by the committee and requesting that the picture interests co-operate in endeavoring to prevent the ridiculing of a national law.

The resolution was a follows:

"RESOLVED: That every theatrical manager, movie manager and editor, whether of a daily, weekly, or monthly publication, be requested to see that all jokes ridiculing prohibition and its enforcement, are eliminated from any production, film or article coming under his jurisdiction, and that the matter be treated with the seriousness that the subject merits; and that this resolution be thrown on the screen and printed in the different papers and magazines throughout the country."

Which reminds us of the story of the man who went up to a prohibition enforcement agent and asked him if he had any kangaroo whiskey to sell. Whereupon the agent replied that he never heard of kangaroo hootch, but he had a little Old Crow he would dispose of.

"I don't want to fly, I only want to hop around a little," retaliated the potential customer.

Two members of the Goldwyn organization were invited to lecture at Columbia University on phases of motion picture production. Rupert Hughes, who has recently become a full-fledged director, as well as writer of scenarios for Goldwyn, addressed the classes in motion picture production and composition on Tuesday evening, January 10.

Paul Bern, editor-incharge of the Goldwyn studios, who has just arrived from the West Coast, also accepted the invitation of Mrs. Frances Taylor Patterson to address her classes in photoplay composition. He will speak on Monday, January 16, at 8.00 o'clock, in room 206, Journalism. Goldwyn has recently made it possible for Mrs. Patterson to add a unique and valuable feature to her photoplay instruction by opening its library of continuities and synopses to students of the advanced class. The library has one of the most complete and extensive collections of scripts of photoplays produced to be found in the film industry.

Speaking of Paul Bern, it is our personal opinion, which is offered even considering the little it may be worth, that he is the kind of man the picture industry needs most. We have been taking an interest in watching the young scenario editor, not with the idea of being patronizing about it as the foregoing phrase may sound, but for the reason that we have had occasion to note that he was striving to do something significant in the promotion of a better grade of pictures—principally regarding the underlying themes. Witness "The Sin Flood," which he probably chose in his line of duty for Goldwyn.

We were invited to meet Bern at luncheon the other day, and personal contact with man more than carried out our former convictions regarding his ambitions in picture production. To hear him speak, which he does in a quiet, restrained manner that carries absolute conviction, of what he intends doing in the way of selecting scenarios or promoting the writing of them by the best people stamps him as utterly sincere about the improvement of pictures along the lines of better basic material and a closer alignment with significant literature. And at the same time he has one eye on the box office, as it were, and is out to prove that what for want of a better designation may be called literary art may be projected on the screen and at the same time accomplish the rather important factor of making money.

Bern has vision. He also has artistic preception. And he is young, with the courage of youth. But his courage to do things away from the beaten track is tempered with business sense, which precludes him doing impractical things or going too fast. He is a demon for improvement. And thereby hangs the tale.

A letter that explains itself comes to hand:

Dear Toucher:

The first thing I did after the Export and Import Film Company engaged me to handle "The Jungle Goddress" campaign, was to have an actual count made of the animals in Col. Selig's Zoo. I thereupon announced (truthfully) that 470 wild animals were available for use in the serial.

Someone now pops up and says they are using 1,500 in an American-made picture. As Selig has the largest collection of wild animals in the United States, I was surprised by this statement and immediately investigated.

I am sorry to say that Col. Selig cannot boast of 1,489 flees in his collection and that his figure of 470 jungle beasts must therefore stand undefended.

This is the third time we have heard it in two weeks. But it is the first time in our life that we ever heard the words except "Where the best is like the worst." Mr. Waterous' diction and annunciation should be studied by all those who contemplate rendering the selection in the future.

F. H. Croghan, a capitalist, of Los Angeles, has been elected president, and well-known players to be identified with the company are Lewis S. Stone, Lon Chaney, Noah Beery, Henry Otto, David Hartford and Jack Donovan.

The company is capitalized for $250,000, and expects to begin work shortly in rented quarters at the Universal City studios. Business offices are at 3274 West Sixth street. Options on a number of stories for filming have been secured.

Besides Mr. Croghan as president, other officers are David M. Hartford, vice president; Edward Alexander, secretary, and E. F. Kelton, treasurer.

The principals, such as directors, stars, actors and cameramen, used in making a picture, will receive a part of their salaries in cash and the balance will be invested by them in the picture.

HOBART BOSWORTH IN "WHITE HANDS," A MAX GRAF PRODUCTION, RELEASED BY WID GUNNING, INC., OF WHICH BIG THINGS ARE EXPECTED

Cullen Landis in "Watch Your Step"

Goldwyn's young leading man, Cullen Landis, is featured in "Watch Your Step," a picture of small town life written directly for the screen—and for Landis—by Julien Josephson.

Mr. Josephson is the man who started Charles Ray on the way to stardom with his screen plays about small town characters. "Watch Your Step" is in much the same vein and is a comedy with romantic trimmings with an especial appeal to young folks and to all old folks who remember that they were once young.

William Beaudine directed "Watch Your Step." Youthful Patsy Ruth Miller plays opposite Landis, while others in the cast are John Cossar, Bert Woodruff, Raymond Cannon, Henry Rattenbury, L. H. King, Cordelia Callahan, Albert Lee and George Pearce.

The Passing Week in Review

AN apparently despondent distributor has intimated that he will revive an old, poorly directed and amateurishly acted "Ten Nights In A Barroom," which more than a year ago was kicked about the country and offered literally for a song. The cheaper houses were induced to show the picture. Now that the Arrow-L. Case Russell version of "Ten Nights In A Barroom" has succeeded so admirably in attracting record-breaking crowds to the box office, this despondent firm threatens to "revive" this impossible mass of junk. In the first place, the Arrow version is so far superior to the impossible hokum that is about to be "thrown" on the market that it would be an insult to producer, director, author and actors of the new picture to attempt to make a comparison. An idea of the impossibility of the old picture can be obtained from the fact that it cost a little more than $1,500 to make.

BUT the issue is not entirely the lack of entertainment value of the old version. It is this practice of "reviving" ancient pictures, when some enterprising producer comes along with a modern version on which thousands of dollars are spent in exploitation, that is taxing the patience of respectable producers, distributors and exhibitors. These "revivals" are a menace to the trade in the first place. In the second place, they serve no one, excepting a lot of "get-rich-quicks" who can see no further than the dollar sign. Such a practice is unfair to the trade in general. It leaves a trail of destruction in its wake. And what is more it is the surest way of keeping the public away from the theatres.

THE time to deal a death blow to these money grabbing operatives has come. The State Rights market has no room for them and the exchange patronizing them is jeopardizing its future. It is the duty of every man and firm in this branch of the industry to discourage such practice. And this can be accomplished only by refusing to do business with those who persist in trying to cash in on the success of some worthy production by "reviving" stuff that long ago became useless. This practice, some apologetically will say, is nothing more or less than competition. If it is it's the lowest and meanest sort of "competition." What the State Rights market needs is men of backbone, business integrity and not self-styled "sure things" who seek a living by victimizing the exhibitors and eventually the public. It can't be done. A bluff will live just so long—and then it's over. P. T. Barnum years ago is reported as having said that the "public liked to be fooled." Perhaps, it did in P. T.'s day. But today the public dictates its wants.

REVIVALS" may deceive the public into attending the first show, but after that the deception is discovered—and it's the exhibitor who pays. Mr. Independent Distributor stop "kidding" yourself that you can fool the public and the trade in general. Remember you are not the only one who has been blessed with brains. We all have our share—and you never can tell when the other chap has the jump on you. There is no room in the State Rights market for these petty "revivalists." If you can't release pictures that will sell on their merit, get out of the business before you are forced out. If you have junk you're not a film man—you're a junk dealer. And exchanges have no use for junk. When the patrons pay hard-earned money at the box office they purchase their way into a theatre—a temple of amusement—not a junk shop. And when an exhibitor flashes these impossible "revivals" on the screen he's peddling junk. Think it over. The issue is worth giving all the time and consideration you can allot it. The time has come for action. Incidently, it presents a problem that the Independent Producers and Distributors Association should lose no time in solving.

CONGRATULATIONS to the I. P. D. A. on their stand in the war against "fly-by-nights" and "film pirates." The Federal Trade Commission is investigating these illegitimate practices and no effort will be spared to expose and prosecute the guilty. The movement deserves the co-operation of every person in the trade. These operatives are a hindrance to the business and the sooner they are eliminated the better it will be for the field in general. This effort is a good omen for a year that promises to bring about many constructive reforms in the State Rights market.

NEVER before in the history of the State Rights market have prospects for the future been as bright as they are at present. Producers and distributors have joined hands and the coming few months promises to see the release of productions that not even the most optimistic State righter two years ago dared to dream would be available in this market. The confidence of the independent exhibitors has been won. It has been a hard struggle, but it was worth while. The past year was a trying one; the coming one will be a survival of the fittest—but the fittest will be rewarded, for at no other time was the demand for State Rights attractions of merit as great as it is today.

THAT distributors look forward to a big season is evinced by the announced plans of many of them. For instance, Equity Pictures Corporation is reported to have acquired "The Wandering Boy," one of the most talked-of pictures of the season. Virtually every big program company entered a bid for this feature, but Equity outbid them. A splendid box office title, a wonderful story, "The Wandering Boy," will find a market that will receive it with wide open arms. C. C. Burr, too, has demonstrated his confidence in the future by arranging for the production of a series of Edwin Carew Northwestern features with a cast that will furnish a pleasant surprise to the trade in general when its identity is disclosed. Mr. Burr also is planning a series of Johnny Hines productions, which exchanges and exhibitors will welcome as "Burn 'Em Up Barnes," the first Hines feature, is still "cleaning up." Arrow's "Ten Nights In A Barroom" is the miracle picture of the season and this week added new records to its already long list. And along come the Warner Brothers with announcement that Wesley Barry, star of "School Days," will be starred in two more equally big features.

THESE announcements testify to the optimism and confidence of independent producers. And the year is less than a month old.

PROOF that the public will virtually destroy any picture it does not want or that has been "wished" on it, was given last week in New York. Fred Beauvais, who has been mentioned in a divorce scandal, was starred in a "film." The public never accepted the Indian guide as an actor and the attempt to "wish" him on motion picture patrons was immediately frustrated. Let this be a warning to those who entertain the suicidal idea that the motion picture theatre is any man's dumping ground.

In the Independent Field

Federal Trade Commission Will Investigate Activity of "Flyers"

The Federal Trade Commission will co-operate with the Independent Producers' and Distributors' Association in ridding the independent field of the so-called "fly-by-nights" and crooked operatives. This information was disclosed at a meeting of the I. D. P. A. held Saturday night, January 7, in New York City. Virtually all the representative distributors and producers in New York were in attendance and voted to spare no effort to eliminate and prosecute these operatives.

The question of "shoe-string" exchanges whose illegitimate dealings with exhibitors have brought forth many complaints from exhibitors was gone into thoroughly by the association and it was decided to take immediate action against their dishonest practice. Many complaints have come to the attention of the association and these have been carefully considered. The situation insofar as the "fly-by-nights" is concerned is considerably better than it was a year ago, but the association has gone on record as determined to continue the fight until "they all have been thrown out."

The association, too, will work in closer co-operation with the exhibitors in an effort to locate "shoestring" exchanges. It is understood that a representative of the official will shortly make a tour of the country for the purpose of getting first-hand information concerning conditions.

Fighting "Pirates"

However, the most encouraging piece of information demonstrative of the progress of the I.D.P.A. war against dishonest operatives was that concerning the co-operation that the Federal Trade Commission is giving. It is understood, too, that that Commission already has started a nation-wide investigation of the situation and that prosecutions will follow any discovery of illegitimate transaction.

However, not all of the time consumed by the meeting was taken up with consideration of the "fly-by-night" question, for the problem of "piracy" also was taken up and discussed from every angle. Following a lengthy discussion a system was adopted whereby the film laboratories will co-operate with distributors in tracing every print leaving their plants.

The contract problem, too, came up and it was decided, finally, that the members of the association shall act collectively with exchanges who fail to live up to the contractual obligations. An official of the association said: "This contract violation business must stop and we are determined to put an end to the practice of certain individuals who make contracts without any intention whatsoever of living up to them. The only way to check this evil is through united action and that is what we intend doing. Any exchange that fails to live up to its contract with any member of this association can not expect to acquire any more product from the other members. Either live up to your contracts or get out of business.

E. O. Van Pelt Is Promoted

E. O. Van Pelt, the enterprising exploitation and publicity director for Producers' Security Corporation, was this week promoted to the position of manager of the foreign department of that concern. Mr. Van Pelt will continue handling the publicity of the firm, however.

The promotion of Mr. Van Pelt does not come as a surprise to his many friends, who have watched his work. He is well known both in trade circles and the legitimate show business. He has publicized many big legitimate and screen attractions and has been associated with Producers' Security Corporation for several years.

Arrow Comedies

Arrow Film Corporation announced the following addition to its comedy release: "Rented Troubles," a Broadway comedy; "Put on the Brakes," a Cruelywed; "Just a Minute," Eddie Lyons; "Keep Moving" and "Are Husbands Happy?" and "Papa's Night Out," Speed.

Burr Closes Big Production Deal; Wesley Barry Signed by Warners

Official confirmation of exclusive reports published in this department concerning the invasion of the State rights field by notable screen stars was made this week. C. C. Burr, producer of "Burn 'Em Up, Barnes," starring Johnny Hines, and the "Torchy Comedies," starring the same comedian, officially announced this week the consummation of a deal with Edwin Carewe whereby the latter will produce two northwestern feature productions with an option for more. Mr. Burr is associated in this enterprise with Bernie Fineman and Bennie Zeidman.

Warner Brothers also closed this week an important production deal whereby they obtain the services of Wesley Barry, star of "School Days," which that enterprising firm is now distributing, for two features to be made in ten weeks. This engagement was made possible through an arrangement with Marshall Neilan. May 1st is the date set when Barry will officially start under the Warner banner.

Wesley Barry's first Warner production under the new arrangement will be entitled "From Rags to Riches," the famous Joe Santley melodrama which A. H. Woods produced years ago. The other will be "Little Heroes of the Street," also a famous melodrama, written by Lem Parker. Both these productions are particularly adapted to the unusual ability of the young star. Harry Rapf will produce both pictures, which William Nigh will direct. They also produced "Why Girls Leave Home" and "School Days" for the Warners.

Creates a Star

The C. C. Burr announcement also will create a stir among State righters and exhibitors in general for his first independent production, "Burn 'Em Up, Barnes," is cleaning up throughout the country. It is one of the biggest money-makers of the current season and exchanges and exhibitors who made use of it have besieged Mr. Burr with requests for other similar box office attractions. Mr. Burr also has in prospect another Johnny Hines feature on which work will begin within a few weeks.

The title of the first production will be "Hell's Highway," a dramatic offering dealing with a struggle between two brothers. Production on this picture will start immediately upon the arrival on the Coast of Mr. Carewe who left New York for Los Angeles on Thursday of this week. The production will be ready for State rights distribution probably by March 1.

Exclusive News of Trade

National to Handle Ray Two-Reelers

National Exchanges have acquired the distribution rights to the Charles Ray two-reelers, which were taken over some time ago by Joe Brand and Bert Adler under the firm name of Art Brandt Pictures Corporation. The series includes 15 productions.

Federated to Meet in February

An important meeting of the Federated Film Exchanges of America has been called for early in February. The meeting will be held either in New York or Chicago. A number of changes in the personnel of the exchanges is expected to be effected as the result of deliberations scheduled for this meeting.

Lon Chaney Is Reported Signed

Lon Chaney, the character lead, who has starred in many "crook" pictures, is reliably reported as having signed a contract to produce several features in which he is starred, for National Exchanges, Inc. Mr. Chaney was in New York last week, but left after closing the National deal, according to the report, for the Coast.

Arthur G. Whyte with Keith

Arthur G. Whyte, formerly New York manager of the Paramount Exchange and interested in State rights exchange in Buffalo, this week signed a contract with John A. Murdock, general manager of the B. F. Keith Enterprises, whereby he will be virtually in charge of the bookings of pictures for the entire Keith circuit.

Warners, Arrow, Exceptional and Kineto Figure in Foreign Deals

The past week was marked with unusual activity among the foreign buyers of State rights productions. In fact, there was more buying of American-made pictures during the past week than was recorded for the previous 14-month period. Virtually all of the big concerns reported foreign sales. Among these were Arrow Film Corporation, which led the list in the total number of sales transacted; Warner Brothers, Exceptional Pictures Corporation, and Kineto Company of America.

European buyers were unusually active and they reported improved conditions abroad. The past season was an unusually trying one and the list of bankruptcies was the largest known in the history of the cinema on the continent. However, the buyers spoke optimistically and added the information that they seek as many big features and short subjects as is available.

David J. Mountan, foreign manager of Arrow Film Corporation, in announcing the Arrow foreign sales, said that he accepted the boom as indicative of a healthier condition of the field abroad. This, he adds, bids fair to improve as 1922 improves.

Bobby North, who represents many foreign buyers, is also particularly enthusiastic about the foreign situation as it affects the distribution of American pictures. The demand for pictures abroad, he stated, in acquiring the foreign rights to Exceptional's "His Nibs," starring Chic Sales, is on the increase, and American features lead in this demand.

"Mabel" Debut

"Oh Mabel, Behave," the Photocraft Film Corporation five-reel comedy starring Mabel Normand, Owen Moore, Mack Sennett and Ford Sterling, was given its premier on Thursday, January 12, at the Strand Theatre, Perth Amboy, N. J. The following night it played the Plainfield, Plainfield, N. J.

New Buyers

William Steiner Productions this week announced the sale of two more franchises for the Neal Hart Western series. Greater Features, Inc., of Salt Lake City, has purchased the Utah rights, while Lannon-Sheffield Exchange of Denver has taken over the Colorado rights.

Foreign Field Improving Says Mr. L. Auerbach

"The foreign field," said L. Auerbach, of Export and Import Film Company, Inc., which is State righting the Col. W. N. Selig animal serial, "The Jungle Goddess," in a statement made this week, "is gradually coming back to normal. The prices for pictures have necessarily been reduced to prevailing conditions, but the foreign market is eager for American pictures at the right price."

The Export & Import Film Company's survey on the foreign market follows: Spain and Portugal improving gradually, but surely. France, which was hardest hit, is also recovering and demanding more and better American pictures.

William Alexander of Alexander Film Co., just back from England, reported this week that the American State rights pictures abroad are reaping a good harvest. Mr. Alexander's firm is State righting Stoll's 15 two-reel Sherlock Holmes pictures.

It became known this week that Swedish Biograph's program for 1922 calls for four pictures by Maurize Stiller and Victor Sjostrom, who is now in England. The latter is expected to visit the United States in March.

Kilner's Exclusive Films, London, Eng., is giving "The Lost City" and "Miracles of the Jungle," the two American serials, an elaborate exploitation and getting plenty of good publicity, too.

The Bioscope reviewer commenting on Warner Brothers' "Why Girls Leave Home," which Pearl Films is handling in England, characterized the feature as one of the most wonderful cinematographic offerings of the season that no kinema can afford to pass up." Quite a feather in the cap of the Warner organization.

Charles Stephenson of Stephenson's Attractions, Toronto, Can., has bought the Canadian rights to Warner Brothers' "School Days."

An agent of an Italian producing concern was in New York this week and made a vain effort to tie up with several firms. His price was far in excess of the actual value of the pictures here, and he returned a wiser but disappointed tourist.

Adams to Co-Star with Sid Smith

In all future Hallroom Boys Comedy two-reelers, according to Hallroom Boys Comedies Corporation, Jimmy Adams's name will be co-featured with that of Sid Smith. With the addition of Adams, the comedies, which have grown to be immensely popular with the public are materially strengthened, for Jimmy is a versatile comedian who needs to bow to no one in his line.

Federated Exchanges, which are distributing the comedies, report a big business on them.

"Ten Nights" Accomplishes Miracles in Two More Fastidious Show Towns

That Arrow Film Corporations' miracle picture, "Ten Nights in a Barroom," is a box office magnet was again proven conclusively this week when the L. Case Russell version of that famous melodrama shattered every theatre record at the Arcadia Theatre in Reading, Pa., and at the Modern Theatre, Lawrence, Mass. Incidentally, the production created such a furore in Reading, Pa., that virtually every big circuit in the country has wired into the Arrow offices for dates, offering unheard-of terms.

The Arcadia in Reading, Pa., is a Carr-Schadd house. William Hagerty of the De Luxe Exchange, Philadelphia, which owns the Eastern Pennsylvania rights to the picture, spent a week in that city exploiting the production. He plastered the city with paper, negotiated valuable tie-ups with local merchants and succeeded in planting a novelized version of the story in a leading paper as well as more than twenty columns of news publicity by creating stunts with news value.

The result of this splendid exploitation campaign showed its effect at the box office on Monday, January 9, when a crowd of 600 persons jammed the lobby of the theatre an hour before the opening. Twenty minutes after the house opened the "S. R. O." sign had to be displayed. As the first performance continued a line five blocks long and a crowded lobby awaited the commencement of the second show. This continued to be the case for the entire day, and when the receipts were counted up they showed that every record, for the day, for the performance, had been broken—and three hundred were turned away at the last show.

L. CASE RUSSELL
Whose version of "Ten Nights in a Barroom" Arrow is releasing

Newspapers raved over the picture and the satisfied patrons of Monday quickly passed along word of the presence of the attraction, its star, John Lowell, and Baby Ivy Ward, at the Arcadia, with the result that an early opening was necessary on Tuesday. By 7.30 o'clock Tuesday evening the gross of the first day was bettered with one whole show remaining. Wednesday the jam was equally as great and indications were that a new gross and net receipts and attendance record for the week would be established and bettered by several thousands of dollars. A wire from the Carr-Schadd offices in Philadelphia stated that "Ten Nights in a Barroom" grossed in two days more money than any of the houses on that circuit had recorded on any other picture shown at the same prices.

The Modern in Lawrence, Mass., also promised to experience a record-breaking week, for the receipts on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday set new marks. In fact, "Ten Nights in a Barroom," in three days, brought more business than the house made in five days on any picture in the past two years.

S. J. Jossey Back with Good News

S. J. Jossey, special representative of Arrow Film Corporation, returned this week from a tour of the South and Middle West. He reported conditions generally improved and added that in his opinion State rights exchanges are in for a healthier regime.

The year of 1922 he says looks rosy and that the exchanges are preparing for a big business. Big pictures, he added, are making the most money.

Snapshots Popular

Loew's State Theatre, Newark, N. J., has placed the Screen Snapshots on the regular booking list, according to Warner's Exchange, which is handling the C. B. C. one-reel "magazine" feature. Harry Charnas of Cleveland reports heavy bookings in his territory.

Zierler Scores

Sam Zierler, of Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, New York, closed his December 12-31 drive on "The Adventures of Tarzan" serial, starring Elmo Lincoln, and reported a gross booking of $9,009.50 for that period alone.

"His Nibs" Pleases Kansans; Many First Runs Scheduled

First-run bookings on "His Nibs," Exceptional Pictures Corporation's feature, starring Chic Sale, are in record-breaking demand, according to a statment of L. L. Hiller, president of His Nibs Syndicate, Inc., which is State righting the production. Sam Rothafel, of the world's largest theatre, the New York Capitol, already has booked the picture at that house. It will be generally released this month.

Elaborate presentations at representative houses already have been arranged. The Rivoli, Toledo, O., will present the picture shortly with an extensive program. Phil Selznick, of Cleveland, who controls the Ohio rights to "His Nibs," is cooperating with the house in exploiting the feature and many box office tie-ups have been arranged.

At the Liberty Theatre in Kansas City, December 28, "His Nibs" was given a special showing. Critics there enthusiastically praised Chic Sale and the picture. It was characterized as " a distinct novelty, a charming bit of artistry, rich with humor and a picture that will please any audience."

That the Liberty Theatres Corporation, of Kansas City, also is pleased with the picture is evidenced by the letter George A. Levy, its head, sent to A. S. Kirkpatrick, of Exceptional.

Spectacular Warner Animal Serial Is Almost Completed

What is declared to be one of the most pretentious serial productions filmed reported containing a story replete with thrilling adventure, romance and intrigue in the African jungles, is the Warner Brothers latest fifteen episode animal chapter play, "Shadows of the Jungle," co-starring Grace Darmond and Philo McCullough. The serial is being produced at the Warner west coast studios by Sam and Jack Warner.

According to recent dispatches received at the Warner offices, the first three episodes are en route East. The first episode is called "The Stolen Medal," the second "The Sacrifice," and the third "The Lion Pit." Virtually the entire west coast studios are said to have been converted into a veritable wild African jungle. The magnitude of the sets, in addition to the menagerie of Al G. Barnes's circus and the thousands of players engaged for the chapter play, will, in the estimation of Sam Warner, set a new standard in serial picturization.

The Al G. Barnes collection of animals is credited with containing more lions, tigers, leopards, elephants, camels, zebras and monkeys than any two circuses combined. Under the assistants, these animals are also transferred to the studios during the making of the picture.

Joan Announces Distribution Plans for Its Latest Film

Joan Film Sales Co., Inc., announces that the distribution of its new picture, "Nine Points of the Law," will begin immediately in the independent field. Although asked to hold this picture back until later in the season, Joan officials decided that the present was the opportune time to give exhibitors a chance to make some money for themselves, now, when it is most needed.

From those who have seen the picture in the past few days have come words of praise for its box office appeal, not alone from the point of entertainment value and power as an audience picture, but because of its box office title that offers no end of strong-arm exploitation stunts.

Exhibitors have come to realize that now of all times in the history of the business, good titles are absolutely necessary, more so, perhaps, than at any former period for the industry has never before passed through such a stage as now.

To Road Show Hines Picture

True A. Thompson, of True Film Exchange of Dallas, Texas, announced this week that he will send out three road shows on C. C. Burr's "Burn 'Em Up Barnes," starring Johnny (Torchy) Hines. The first show opens at the Criterion, Oklahoma City, January 15.

"Rangeland" Is Neal Hart's Next

"Rangeland," a story of the Texas cattle ranges, is the title of the next feature starring Neal Hart, according to an announcement made this week by William Steiner Productions, which is State righting the Neal Hart Western series. The first picture was "Tangled Hearts," which, according to franchise holders, is in big demand among exhibitors. Work on the third picture is already well under way.

Wild Animals Play Spectactular Role in Selig's "Jungle Goddess"

Wild animals play a most important role in the new Col. Selig serial, "The Jungle Goddess," which is being State righted by Export and Import Film Company, Inc. Benefiting from the experience gained in making the two other big serials, "The Lost City" and "Miracles of the Jungle," Col. Selig has evolved a series of startling animal stunts. Five completed episodes of the serial already have reached New York and were shown to one of the trade critics last week.

Among the many spectacular stunts is one staged on an immense jungle god set which is said to have taken two months to construct. The stone god houses twenty lions, who take part in a thrilling scene involving a most hair-raising rescue of the daughter of the English lord. In this scene, too, an elephant swings his trunk about a trapped lion and throws him to the ground, stamping out his life.

Film Daily last week said of the serial: "Selig has made an animal serial which judging from the start, has enough thrills produced from animal sequence to make even the hardest boiled fan admit it is there."

"Four Seasons" on the Market

Kineto Company of America this week announced that "The Four Seasons," which has been so unanimously endorsed by the most fastidious trade and newspaper critics, is being made ready for national release. All the advertising accessories, press books and complete exhibitors' aids are being prepared by the various departments of Kineto.

Kineto announced that it will be ready for national distribution about February 1.

Between You and Me

A CERTAIN distributor some two months ago sent out letters to exchanges announcing that he would distribute a particularly good box office picture on a $75,000 basis following a premier he was about to stage as proof that the feature would draw. The picture did draw—bigger than the distributor had expected it would. Thereupon he raised his ante 300 per cent., but he isn't selling. And he is one of those who is "kicking" about "hard times."

This department has for the past two weeks published the names of certain big stars about to invade the independent States rights production field. This week we publish official confirmations of these reports. We also told you about C. C. Burr's production plans and the acquisition of "My Wandering Boy" by Equity. Both these exclusive reports are this week officially given out. Moral: If it is about the State rights field—The Moving Picture World has it first.

Some very important changes are slated when the regular meeting of the Federated Exchanges of America is held in February.

An idea of the extent to which censorship cuts in on the current expenditures of an independent exchange is given in the fact that one office in Philadelphia parted with $2,760 to the Quaker critics.

Speaking of Philadelphia reminds us that things are not what they should be there among members of the F.I.L.M. Clubs. Already two State rights exchanges have resigned with others threatening to follow suit unless a number of problems effecting the State rights members is settled satisfactorily.

Arthur G. Whyte, formerly New York exchange manager for Famous Players, who is interested in a State rights exchange in Buffalo, this week signed with the Keith Vaudeville Exchange and will henceforth take care of the picture booking department for that circuit.

A certain young man, associated with a producer-distributor who is making great headway in the State rights field, pulled a nasty trick. The latter confided in him an outline of a certain picture he was about to produce as well as its title. The young man quickly rushed to a competitor's office, outlined the story and title, after outlining the yarn. The next day the producer heard of the tale and immediately took steps to copyright the story and title. Two weeks ago the other producer started production on the film. This week he was acquainted with the facts. However he had spent several thousands on the picture in the course of production and the only way out was to buy the other producer's copyright. However, he has not done so yet, but you can bet a Seteson he'll do so.

With the holidays at hand the week was a particularly dull one so far as buying was concerned. With two exceptions the buyers remained at home and applied the finishing touches to their celebration.

Clark-Cornelius to Distribute Emil Chautard's "Living Lies"

Clark-Cornelius Corporation this week announced the acquisition of "Living Lies," a feature production based on a Saturday Evening Post story by Arthur Somers Roche. Emil Chautard, who has produced many big productions released by national distributing companies, directed this picture. The cast includes Edmund Lowe, Mona Kingsley and Kenneth Hill. According to this week's announcement, the picture is ready for release to State rights' exchanges.

Originally entitled "A Scrap of Paper," the story deals with Dixon Grant, a reporter, who delves in betting on horse races. He places his bankroll on a tip. Meanwhile a scandal involving financiers breaks and Grant is assigned to run it down. In covering this assignment Grant encounters adventure after adventure with a surprise climax. There is also unfolded an interesting romance.

Russell Clark's "The Offenders" in Big Demand By Exhibitors

With choice territory sold before the release announcement of "The Offenders," starring Margery Wilson, increased selling activity followed, is the report from the Russell Clark Syndicate, Inc., which is distributing this Margery Wilson production, presented by Fenwicke L. Holmes. Publication of the titles of three others now in production has aroused interest in the entire series. These titles are short and calculated to excite curiosity and were personally selected by Miss Wilson. They are "Miss Paul Revere," "Insinuation" and "Woman's Woman," and are to be released in the order named. The first mentioned, "The Offenders," bears the same title as the magazine story by Katherine Eggleston from which the continuity was made. First National Exchanges, Inc., have secured rights to all four of the Margery Wilson productions in New York State.

Elmo Lincoln to Open Tour in Philadelphia on Jan. 16

Ben Amsterdam, of Masterpiece Film Attractions, Philadelphia, distributing "Adventures of Tarzan" in Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey, has arranged for Elmo Lincoln to begin his personal appearance tour in Philadelphia on Monday, January 16.

The star of the Tarzan serial will play several theatres nightly during his engagement in Philadelphia, and in the larger cities of Eastern Pennsylvania.

C. C. Burr on Future Prospects

★★★★★ ★★★★★ ★★★★★ ★★★★★ ★★★★★

Newsy Observations of the Week

IN my opinion, prospects for the independent field for 1922 are the brightest in the history of our line of endeavor," said C. C. Burr of Master Films, Inc., and Affiliated Distributors, Inc., the other day. "Exhibitors throughout the country have finally become convinced that the independents can furnish them with productions that can be booked reasonably and also assure them of a maximum profit on their investment. The independents themselves are producing better pictures—and this is as it should be. It was because I was acquainted with these facts that I went ahead and contracted with Edwin Carewe to produce big pictures for me."

T. A. Brennon of the Eltabran Film Company of Atlanta, Ga., was in town this week. The writer ran across Mr. Brannon at the Arrow office where we had the pleasure of exchanging views with the Atlantan. Mr. Brannon stated that conditions in the South are improving rapidly and that 1922 promises to be the best year in the history of the independent exchanges in the South. "Business would be better, too, if admission prices were lowered," he said.

Exchangemen in many sections of the country are making a more concerted effort to co-operate with exhibitors. This is starting the new year right. From Kansas City this week we received a letter from an exhibitor who commended the State rights exchanges in that territory for the "splendid co-operation the theatre men were receiving from them." That's the spirit that can not help but win.

Eddie Polo, the serial star who recently severed his connection with Universal, may go into independent production. Negotiations are pending for a serial in which he will be starred. Eddie is said to have the backing of a well known business man. Three distributing firms already have entered bids for the serial, which may not be started until some time in the Spring. The deal, according to our informant, has not yet been closed.

Hepworth, English producer, visited New York during the past week and chatted with a number of State rights producers. The Hepworths, according to rumor heard in film row, are about to make a series of productions for the international market and are seeking an American affiliation, but up to the time of going to press nothing definite had been done along these lines. State righters have learned their lesson and are thinking twice before taking ovr a foreign-made picture.

A certain very well known producer on the Coast this week sent six wires to State righters in New York, offering the services of two stars he has under contract. The offer was turned down, however. Never before in the history of motion pictures has there been such a willingness on the part of international stars to affiliate themselves with independent concerns. One star whose popularity is on the wane even offered to interest a certain capitalist in a venture in which he and his wife were to be starred.

"This practice of reviving a 'has-been' simply because a modern and better adaptation of the same story is making money," said a well known exhibitor, "should be stopped at once. I had a certain exchangeman offer me a picture that I had shown eight years ago. I acquainted him with the fact and he replied: 'But look at your chance to clean up. Mr. So-and-So is about to release a big picture with the same title and here's your chance to cash in on his advertising and get the cream.' I told the small-timer to get out of my office and to do so as fast as his legs could carry him. Since that reception this gentleman has offered me other stuff, but I wouldn't handle his pictures if he gave them to me for nothing." Think that over, Mr. Exchangeman, for the statement comes from an exhibitor whose feelings typify those of other enterprising showmen.

"This is going to be a hard year for the insincere distributor and producer," said Ray Johnson, the entergetic Vice-President of Arrow Film Corporation, this week. "Exhibitors, true, are patronizing the independents, but our field representatives report that only the established exchanges are getting the business. And that is as it should be. We have rid the field of many shoestring operatives, but there are a few remaining who should be rushed out, for they are a hindrance to the reputable exchanges."

First South Sea Picture Arrives

The first motion picture drama made in the South Sea Islands arrived in New York this week. S. M. Unander, the producer, reached New York this week with a print of the picture, which will be State righted. It is entitled "The Lagoon of Desire," produced by the Far East Productions. Arthur Rosson directed. The players include Ruth Renick, Edward Hearn, Walt Whitman and Frederick Stanton.

How Eddie Bonns and Marangella Titled Picture

When Warner Brothers assigned to Eddie Bonns and Lou Marangella the task of titling the feature now known as "Ashamed of Parents," the two enterprising publicity purveyors de luxe lost no time in plunging into real work. They knew their picture, the theme and its possibilities, and also realized its exploitation value provided a good box office title could be conceived. And they found one.

They went to the Domestic Relations Court, New York, and studied figures and cases for days and days. They were impressed with the vast number of cases showing gross negligence of parents by grown-up children. The idea came: Why not be frank and tell it straight from the shoulder with a title? Righto. And that idea gave birth to the title "Ashamed of Parents," a capital box office asset, for the title has inspired national editorial comment from prominent writers.

Backer Agent Returns with Glad Tidings

Lester M. Scott, Jr., field manager for Amalgamated Productions, Inc., distributors of East Coast Productions franchises, of which Franklyn E. Backer is the head, returned this week from a two-week tour of the country. Mr. Scott found exchangemen and exhibitors generally optimistic and stated that the crisis has been passed. The exchanges, he added, are now entering a career of slowly improving business.

Mr. Scott visited Chicago, Minneapolis, Omaha, St. Louis, Dallas, Atlanta, Washington and Baltimore, while Mr. Backer recently covered all the territory east of Minneapolis.

In the Independent Field

Gossip of the Trade

Niagara Pictures Corporation has opened an exchange in Buffalo on the third floor of the Warner Building, 257 Franklin street, with David Levy in charge of sales. George Williams has been engaged to cover the Rochester territory and Thomas Leonard has been assigned to the Southern tier. Mr. Levy announces that his company has among its releases the following productions: "Lotus Blossom," "Shadows of the West," "Welcome Children," "Under Western Skies," "False Woman," "Mickey," and "The County Fair." The exchange is also handling Francis Ford in "The Great Reward," King Cole comedies and other pictures. Mr. Levy announces that plans are being made for an elaborate revival in western New York of "Mickey."

Harold B. Franklin, managing director of the Shea Amusement Company's picture interests, announces that he has booked "School Days," the big Grand & Warner release for showing at Shea's Hippodrome, Shea's North Park and the Elmwood. The picture will be presented some time in February for extended engagements at these three houses and at the Shea Court street vaudeville theatre on Sunday. Sydney Samson, manager of the Buffalo Grand & Warner office, reports bookings coming in like wildfire on this big production. Howard F. Brink, salesman de luxe, is now sending contracts in in bundles on "School Days" and "Why Girls Leave Home." Mr. Samson made a flying trip to Rochester, Syracuse and Binghamton last week.

Bill Fickeisen has resigned from the sales staff of Merit Pictures in Buffalo. He has been succeeded by Homer Howard, formerly with Nu-Art in tbe Queen City of the Lakes.

Harry Hirsch, better known as "The Baron," and formerly with the Lightning Photoplays Company, of Boston, has come to Buffalo to join the sales staff of the Lande Film corporation, 145 Franklin street. Mr. Hirsch is now touring the territory with "Thunderbolt Jack."

Fred M. Zimmerman, president and general manager of Nu-Art Pictures corporation, has opened his Albany office at 4 Clinton street, with M. Cohen in charge. Art Young, Buffalo office manager, journeyed to Albany to install the booking system.

The Seattle Film Exchange has taken over the entire output of the Clark Cornelius Corporation, consisting of 20 features, including eight Northwest Police pictures, produced by Milburn Morante. The first of this series will be released January 10.

State Rights exchangemen attended the regular meeting of the M. P. T. O. A. of Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey en masse in Philadelphia last week.

William Conn, of Premier Pictures Corporation, of Charlotte, N. C., and T. A. Brannon, of Eltabran Film Company, of Atlanta, Ga., were visitors at the Arrow offices in New York this week. Both reported that the crisis has been passed in the South and conditions should soon improve for the better there. They came to New York on a buying trip.

S. Arnovitz, president of the Equity Pictures Corporation of Canada, returned to Montreal from a three-months tour of Europe. He is said to have acquired several productions made in England for Canadian distribution.

A. J. Dussault, Montreal manager of Merger Films, Ltd., was in New York last week looking over films suitable for Canadian distribution. He closed with L. & H. Enterprises for "A Daughter of the Night."

Frank G. Hard, publicity director for the Standard Film Service Exchanges of Ohio, made his debut as an orator last week when he delivered an address before the Kiwanis Club of Medina.

"A Man There Was," distributed in Kansas and Missouri by Peacock Productions, will be given a premier showing at the Pantages Theatre, Kansas City, on January 29.

J. B. Underwood was this week formally presented to the staff of the St. Louis Exchange of Enterprise Distributing Corporation by District Manager W. J. Jenkins. Mr. Underwood will officiate as manager of the St. Louis branch.

David Segal, of the Royal and De Luxe Film Exchanges, and Tony Luchese, of the De Luxe Film Exchange, both of Philadelphia, have resigned as members of the F. I. L. M. Club of that city.

T. A. Curran, special representative of the Arrow Film Corporation, went to Boston on Saturday to co-operate with the Lightning Photoplay Exchange of Boston in the presentation of "Ten Nights in a Barroom" at the Modern Theatre in Lawrence, Mass.

Joe Weil's "Movie Bellyache," Vol. II, No. 1, mysteriously made its appearance on our desk this week. And we want Joe to know that we'll be on the lookout for every other issue he publishes. Send 'em along, Joe; we're a glutton for punishment. Aye, wot?

Bill Fickeisen has resigned from the sales staff of Merit Pictures Exchange in Buffalo. Homer Howard, formerly of Nu-Art of that city, succeeds him.

Gen. Charles H. Cole, treasurer of the Bay State Film Company of Boston, was last week elected to the Massachusetts State commandership of the American Legion.

Albert E. Plummer, president of Sunburst Pictures Corporation of Massachusetts, this week announced the removal of the main offices to Springfield Mass.

Joe Lee, who is out in Minneapolis establishing the Biograph office, writes to the effect that he found a bloke there who thinks a three-sheet is a bedspread.

Lindsay McKenna was another from whom this department heard. Lindsay conveyed the information that the independent producers on the Coast are the most active.

Travers Vale will soon start "shooting" on another independent picture in New York. The cast has not yet been selected, however.

That exchange folks are good for something other than merely book pictures and see that prints are returned was established into a fact last week when the prologue to Warner Brothers' "School Days" at a trade showing held in Boston by Sam Grand's Federated Exchange was staged by attaches of the exchange. Geoffrey L. Whalen, known to New England exhibitors, acted as school master. John Casey, Boston's critic, and local newspapermen, were the guests.

Herman Jans, who is president of Jans Pictures, Inc., and also head of Jans Exchange, of New York City, acquired a new theatre in New Brunswick, N. J., this week and gave an elaborate opening on Monday.

With the holidays over, out-of-town buyers resumed their journeys to New York during the past week, with the result that the market bustled with activity.

Elaborate Exploitation Slated for "Shadows of Conscience"

"Shadows of Conscience," the seven-reel feature produced by W. D. Russell Productions, Inc., is being introduced to exhibitors by an attractive broadside. It is printed in six colors.

The cover of the broadside depicts the shadowy figure of "Conscience," pointing an accusing finger at a cringing man, thus showing one of the many ways the title may be utilized in the exploitation. The back cover shows, in the original colors, the various types of stands and other advertising accessories available. The inside pages contain a set of stills taken from various stages and scenes of the play which tell the complete story pictorially.

A sixteen-page campaign book, is said to be one of the most complete exhibitor helps ever published. It contains many "ads" arranged for various sizes of newspaper space, as well as short, snappy stories and reviews which can be used in the local newspapers and gives an abundance of ideas for practical, inexpensive exploitation. The story of Gertrude Olmstead, winner of the $10,000 beauty contest, who has a leading role in the picture, will be a favorite one for film fans. A very appropriate and artistic, but inexpensive prologue is also outlined in detail.

Carnival Comedy Series Are to Be State Righted by C. B. C.

Carnival Comedies is the name given to the new series of two-reel comedies secured by the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation for release to the States right market. These comedies are absolutely new on the market, never having been released.

The series is described as "bi-star"—featuring Polly Moran, the famous Mack Sennett comedienne, and "Smiling" Bill Jones and his beautiful girls. With the series announced on the market only a few days, three sales on these Carnival Comedies were made almost at once.

Ben Amsterdam, head of Masterpiece Film Attractions of Philadelphia, made a special trip to New York to view two of the comedies and immediately purchased the series for release in his territory, including Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey. Mr. Amsterdam said that short subject releases, and especially good two-reel comedies, were in great demand. Another sale was that to Marion Kohn for Federated Film Exchange of Los Angeles and San Francisco, who has secured rights to the entire series for California, Arizona, Nevada, and the Hawaiian Islands. The New York territory has also been disposed of already to Myriad Pictures Corporation, for the territory including Greater New York and Northern New Jersey.

"Polly's Busted Romance," featuring Polly Moran, has been selected as the first release. This comedy is said to afford Miss Moran an excellent opportunity to display her genius for fun making which has placed her in the foremost ranks of the screen comediennes.

Complete Array of Helps Are Ready for "School Day" Film

Seldom has the exhibitor been offered such an array of accessories as are offered him by Warner Brothers in conjunction with the exploitation of Gus Edwards's "School Days," starring Wesley Barry. There are 13 novelties ranging from stickers to huge and attractive 24-sheets. In addition there is a unique 13½x21 cutout of Wesley Barry, containing in the center a black space 5½x8, on which can be written in chalk pertinent data relative to store in which tie-up is arranged in conjunction with the picture. The possibilities for the use of this cutout are innumerable, for across the bottom of the cutout there is ample room for the theatre name.

Other exploitation helps include four cartoon strips drawn by Clare Victor Dwiggins, suitable for newspaper reproduction; cartoon slides, a Wesley Barry badge, a Wesley Barry lollypop, strip of Barry photos, a rubber tack novelty calculated to keep teachers of country towns guessing and kiddies laughing; a postal card containing scenes from the picture, a blotter, and a complete line of attractive paper. One of the paper features is a six-sheet, drawn by Dwiggins, an exact replica of a Sunday comic sheet.

"Greatest Question" in Big Demand

With many first runs to its credit, "The Greatest Question," the feature which Joe Brandt and George H. Davis are State righting, is in unusually big demand by exhibitors who have marvelled at the wonderful attraction of the picture. Exchanges distributing the feature locally are besieging Mr. Brandt's New York offices with requests for additional prints with which to fill play dates.

The F. I. L. M. Club of Buffalo has changed its name to the Buffalo Film Board of Trade. A committee has been appointed to investigate free film service for non-theatrical institutions. Local exchanges have been supplying films to some churches, schools and other institutions free of charge, but recently complaints have been sent in by exhibitors that in a great many instances these places conflict with regular theatre accounts. It is probable that all free shows will be discontinued. W. A. V. Mack, manager of the Pathe office, and Clayton P. Sheehan, district manager for Fox, are the members of the committee.

Jim Cardina, proprietor of the Kensington Theatre in Buffalo, has reopened the Glen Theatre in Williamsville, N. Y.

Miss Minter Forsakes Ingenue Roles for Emotional Parts

WORD comes from Hollywood that Mary Miles Minter's role in "The Heart Specialist," her current Realart picture for Famous Players-Lasky release, is decidedly removed from the ingenue, "sweet sixteen" type in which she has been seen in the past.

The story is by Mary Morrison and it was scenarized by Harvey Thew, author of "Midnight," in which Constance Binney has been starred, and scenarist of Bryant Washburn's picture, "The Road to London," and such Paramount subjects as "The Plow Girl," "The Shuttle" and "Seventeen."

Allen Forrest, who appeared opposite Miss Minter in a long series of successful pictures before the latter's present contract affiliation, is again her leading man. The picture is being directed by Frank Urson and Elmer Harris is supervising.

Kansas City

H. G. Gill has been appointed manager of the publicity department recently installed in the Kansas City exchange of Associated First National, according to an announcement made by E. C. Chicago

The Balaban & Katz Enterprise is not only telling fellow exhibitors that business is better, but they are frankly "telling the world." They used two columns of space the length of a page in a morning paper to announce in heavy type in the center that "294,638 people visited Balaban & Katz Wonder Theatres last week." A heavy arrow points to the words from both the top and bottom of the space, and in modest type at the bottom of the space are listed the names of the theatres, Chicago, Tivoli, Riviera, and Central Park.

Three of the larger theatrical enterprises in Chicago have wigwagged the World office that their predictions concerning better business for 1922 have come true.

"It may be the reaction after the hold-off in theatre-going during the holidays," opines the Jones, Linick & Schaefer enterprise, "but we are glad to say our business is much better."

"It may be that George Beban, who is breaking records at our Tivoli Theatre, is bringing our average away up, but we have also noted an increased patronage in each of our theatres," is the message from Balaban & Katz.

"It may be that business has already hit the up-grade to normalcy," says Nathan Ascher of Ascher Bros.

"But whatever may be the reason," choruses the enterprises, "we welcome this increased patronage."

"Saturday Night," the Cecil B. De Mille feature, will begin its first loop showing in Chicago January 22, when it will begin a showing of indefinite length at the Randolph Theatre.

Paramount Arranges for Its Film Distribution in Mexico

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by E. E. Shauer, director of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, of the signing of a contract for the exhibition and distribution of 104 Paramount Pictures through the Circuito Olimpia, S. A., of Mexico City, one of the foremost exhibiting and distributing organizations in the republic of Mexico. The beautiful Teatro Olimpia, a recently completed million-dollar motion picture palace in Mexico City, will become the first-run house for Paramount Pictures, and the ten exchanges operated by Circuito Olimpia will be used to obtain the widest possible distribution for Paramount Pictures throughout the republic.

R. P. Jennings, an American, who has become one of the foremost business men of Mexico, is the president and owner of Circuito Olimpia. In addition to his other interests, Mr. Jennings has succeeded in building up one of the largest and one of the most efficient motion picture organizations in Mexico.

The Teatro Olimpia was opened several weeks ago with an elaborate introductory program. Plans are being completed for another gala program, which probably will take place sometime next month. It is expected that George Loane Tucker's "The Miracle Man" will be selected as the opening attraction under this new contract.

It is announced that the contract signed with Circuito Olimpia will not interfere with Famous Players-Lasky, S. A., the Paramount office recently opened in Mexico City. Both organizations will work in harmony for the welfare of Paramount's interests in Mexico.

Val Jacob, of the Milwaukee Paramount exchange, has been transferred to the sales force of the Paramount in Chicago.

Tom Gallery was visiting in Chicago last week with his father, Captain Michael J. Gallery, and members of the Vitagraph exchange. He was accompanied by his wife, ZaSu Pitts.

Canada

The difference between the Board of Moving Picture Censors for Ontario and that for the Province of Quebec is 500 feet. This is judged by a comparison of prints of "Queen of Sheba" after they had been respectively reviewed by the Ontario and Quebec boards. That which was passed by the Ontario board at Toronto was found to be 500 feet longer than that which had been censored at Montreal. The fact that the Quebec print was cut down more than the Ontario film caused some surprise because of the otherwise tolerant attitude of officialdom in the Quebec Province.

Pittsburgh

The recent opening of the Capitol Theatre at Charleston, W. Va., brought to this town two men of prominence in the amusement world —Harris P. Wolfberg, managing director of the circuit of theatres in West Virginia and Kentucky to which the new playhouse belongs, and John E. Firnkoess, resident manager. Mr. Firnkoess has managed Louisville's (Ky.) million-dollar theatres, the Rialto and Majestic, both of which are owned by the same interests. At one time he was connected with the distributing end of Famous Players-Lasky.

Tom Bello, of the Verdi and Strand theatres, Belle Vernon, had a hectic Christmas. Let us tell you about it, and then you can judge for yourself if he did not have some swell time. The Saturday before Christmas the Monongahela River started to rise and as the Strand is not very far from the river bank, the water kept creeping towards the theatre, and when it was time for the matinee to let out Tom and his assistants had to put planks from the lobby to a high place in the streets in order to get his patrons out of the house. They worked unil Monday evening removing the seats and piano. After they had everything moved to a place of safety, there were five feet of water on the floor of the theatre.

Fred Greene Has Invented a Scheme to Sell a Dry Goods Store to the Women

FRED V. GREENE, JR., one of the soundest exploiteers on Claud Saunders' Paramount staff, has worked out a new idea for a hook-up which was tried out for the Park Theatre, Newburgh, and worked so well that now Greene is giving it to all of his clients in the New York district.

It is pretty well known that the chief fight of a storekeeper is to get the people into his place of business. Now and then he will sell something at below cost to draw purchasers, figuring that if they come he will make up the loss on this one article through purchases made on the way in or out. For this reason the bargains are generally placed at the far end of the store.

Worked Up the Idea

Taking this tip, Greene has worked out a scheme which will take the average woman all over the store—to every counter—and perhaps bring her back the next day.

To do this, he persuaded Manager C. E. Duryea, of the Park, to donate to Stem's department store a sufficient number of passes to supply one to each counter daily during the run of "The Affairs of Anatol."

On each counter is a price card. On each card is the name of some woman resident of the town. If she sees her name and proves identity, she is given a pass to the Park. Each day new names were written in, and it speaks of the interest the women felt in the scheme that 85 per cent. of the passes were claimed.

As the names were taken at random from the telephone book, and it is to be presumed that telephone subscribers are reasonably well-to-do, it follows that a large percentage of the spenders are attracted to the store daily.

All it costs the store is co-operation in the advertising and the loan of a window. It brings more than the average bargain sale. That is the store's end of it.

The Theatre's Gain

The theatre profits from this advertising. It also profits from the fact that passes are seldom presented without the purchase of one or more free tickets. It is also probable that many women, going downtown to see if their names are on the cards, decide to see the show anyway.

Another product is the newspaper comment on the novel idea. This was not figured in the original scheme of things, but it can be counted upon in the moderately large towns. The editor will regard it as news matter.

If you can convince a merchant that you can pull the women to his store and make them read every individual price tag, it's a cinch you can take from him about everything you ask for in the line of window and other displays.

Texas and Siam Linked in New Paramount Film

The newest Lindlar lobby for "A Fool's Paradise" links Texas oil wells and Siam, following the story of that release, and Walter Lindlar, in a rather elaborate suggestion, gives one side of the lobby to each, but like all other suggestions, you can take as much of the idea as you can handle, and if your resources will not permit you to build so elaborate a design, you can at least take the basic idea and split the lobby, making one side Texas and the other side Siam.

An oil derrick without painting will suffice for Texas and Siam can be suggested by any oriental drapery or effect you are able to borrow, or perhaps an idol with incense burning before it and cards stating that in Texas they worship oil and in Siam the pug-nosed god you display.

A novelty you can copy is the suspended lettering, which is not new except in that this is more elaborate than the usual layout. It will be noted that some of the letters are hung from the arch while the lower tier is suspended in part from the upper. Where this latter is done, it may be necessary to counterweight one side of a top letter to offset the weight of the pendant. For example, it will probably be found necessary to weight the stem of the F in "Fools" to offset the weight of the A in "Paradise," which is suspended from the top bar. Line up the letters as shown in the sketch and then correct the weights with any cheap adhesive. This will be better than the customary banner, and alone will do a lot of selling.

Raffles Again

It has been a couple of months since the Raffles stunt has last recorded, but A. L. Snell, of the Imperial Theatre, Gadsden, Ala., dug it out for use on "The Man from Lost River," who was supposed to be the man the people were looking for.

Rubbing it in, he hired a contractor who was hauling logs through the town to have his drivers wear signs announcing "I Am the Man from Lost River." It's light stuff, but it worked, and cost only a couple of dollars —three, to be exact.

Overcoats for Cars

Lately a cold snap hit New York State. Probably it chilled other parts of the country, but that is immaterial. The big idea is that Charles Duryea, of the Park Theatre, Newburgh, N. Y., noted that there were a lot of automobiles without the patent radiator protectors which shut out the drafts in cold weather.

Being naturally tender hearted he had some cards painted up with advertisements for "The Affairs of Anatol" and sent a man out to fit these to the cars not provided with chest protectors. Most drivers very willingly gave their assent to the removal of the newspaper and cardboard emergency shields and were rather proud of their neatly lettered cards.

And as they park their cars head on to the sidewalk in Newburg, it was well worth the cost. It is going to be a hard winter, they say. Why not lay in a supply of cards?

Towns Was Right

In a recent issue an unintentional injustice was done Manager L. R. Towns, of the Strand Theatre, Birmingham. In speaking of his sales letter on "Get Rich Quick Wallingford," we commented upon the fact that the letter should have been signed to give the suggestion of a personal communication.

Lem. L. Stewart, exploitation director for Southern Enterprises, advises us that the copy he sent in was one of the duplicated letters sent out to other managers as a sample to be copied and that the letters Mr. Towns sent out were signed, sealed and delivered in the most approved business fashion. We are glad to know that Mr. Towns caried it through as so excellent a scheme deserved.

WALTER LINDLAR INTRODUCES THE SIAMESE GONDOLA

He also shows the well-known "suspended sentence" as you will note that the lettering for "A Fool's Paradise" is hung by fine wires from the arch, giving a novel effect. A lobby suggestion from the Paramount Exploitation Department

Valentines for Valentino

Ray Beall has just taken hold of the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., for Southern Enterprises, and he had "Camille," with Nazimova and Valentino for the initial stunting.

He had a large heart-shaped cutout made of beaverboard and painted this black, mounting it on an easel in the lobby. Three sheet heads of the star and her support were cutout and pasted on the black faces, a narrow line of canary serving to throw them into relief. The title also was in canary with the star names and catchlines in light blue. It made a striking lobby design.

Across the top of the arch he had seven smaller hearts strung on a ribbon, painted black with a letter in blue, one to each heart, the whole spelling "Camille".

And as Bill Hart was his next offering, he had the reverse painted up "Thursday, Friday, Saturday, Wm. S. Hart in 'White Oak.'" This got them going and coming and helped Beall make a good return on his first week's work.

Photographic Poster for a First National

Making an exclusive poster by photographic enlargement, was the novel stunt used by the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, to put over Jackie Coogan in "My Boy" for Christmas week.

The enlargement is not a Shipman print, but was locally made and was in nine sections, the lettering being put on after the posting was done. This was pasted to a twenty-four sheet board in the business section and the matching was so well done that it fits in as well as the average lithographs, while it attracted infinitely more attention.

The cost will probably be found almost prohibitive in most places for the poster was 12 by 16 feet and this means solar prints about 3 feet by 5 feet 4 inches, and this, in itself, is considerable of an enlargement for the average studio to turn out.

But now that the Circle has led the way, this would seem to offer a capital just once stunt for some super-feature, the sheets being sold the same as lithographic work, though, of course, at a larger price. Just once it would be a knockout. The second time it probably would not be worth its cost.

THIS SECTIONAL PHOTOGRAPHIC ENLARGEMENT IS NOVEL

This enlargement, 12 by 16 feet, was made in nine sections and was posted as a lithograph on a 24-sheet board in a prominent location in Indianapolis to help put over Jackie Coogan in "My Boy" at the Circle Theatre. The sectional enlargement is new.

Hyman's Novelties at the Mark Strand

Both of Edward L. Hyman's production novelties at the Mark-Strand, Brooklyn, the week of January 15, are more or less closely associated with the features and so are termed prologues, though properly speaking, the Mark-Strand seldom offers a prologue, the numbers being such that they would form a pleasant feature on a program with any other film offering. A third selection is the always sure-fire prison scene from Faust. Musically this should prove one of the best programs offered in some time.

EDW. L. HYMAN

The overture is that to Gomez's "Il Guarany," a composition not as familiar as many others, but of melodic interest. This will be played straight with the house lights half red, half blue, while the orchestra is flooded with straw from the booth, with blue foots, red borders and amber strips, while the bridge spots are steel blue.

Then comes the prologue to "The Bashful Suitor," in which a basso and a girl will be disclosed in a tableau suggestive of the Israels painting from which the picture takes its name. The pose will be held through the introductory strains and broken to permit the basso to sing de Lange's Fiore della Neve, a Dutch serenade in spite of the language.

The picture follows and then comes the prison scene. An arch prison drop will be used with stone wings. The window shows a straw light, the rest of the lighting being deep blue except the foots, which will be amber. Mephisto will be followed with a red spot.

The Topical Review is the next number and then comes a production for "Tol'able David." This shows a general store with a Southern atmosphere, the spark being provided with a porch on which a male quartet is seated. They render Hare's "A Little Close Harmony" and Maley's "A Little Town Close By."

The Barthelmess feature follows and closes the show, except for the organ postlude, which will be Sellars' "An Evening Idyl."

Prize Contest Won a Bunch of Poor Poetry

Stanley N. Chambers, of the Palace Theatre, Wichita, pulled the prize contest stunt on "The Ten Dollar Raise" and hooked a local paper to a $250 contest, supplying the prize money in return for columns of free space.

There were five prizes of $50 each and the writers had to tell in 100 words what they would do if they were given a ten dollar raise. The paper handled it apparently as its own contest, and the Palace happened in merely because it was playing the picture. This angle won a greater regard for the contest than had it been announced that Chambers was supplying the Prize money. Several hundreds of contestants tied for last place by saying they would drop dead, but some of the responses were clever and some were pretty poor poetry.

No one had to see the picture in order to enter the contest, but most of them did, just because they were interested in the play.

The stunt was used to taper off a go-to-the-theatre campaign by the same paper, and apparently was a spontaneous tribute to the Associated Producers—First National release.

Inciting to Crime

Some people believe that the linked title is several shades worse than murder in the first degree, but the new Granada Theatre, San Francisco is using the idea to put over its underlines.

It publishes a list of its Paramount bookings and offers from $25 to $1 in a set of 38 graded prizes to the people who can make up the best running story from the copy printed.

One of the lists starts off with Betty Compson, "The Little Minister, Sir James M. Barrie, beautiful Grenada, Pola Negri, "The Last Payment," next, "Just Around the Corner," Fanny Hurst-Cosmopolitan. All Paramount, Delightful entertainment, Happy New Year.

It is stamping the coming titles on the minds of a lot of people who do not use their minds much as a rule, and it is putting the theatre over. But we are going to write Nick Ayer what we think of him, just the same.

THIS LOBBY HELPED TO BREAK A LOT OF RECORDS

It jazzed up the front of the Clemmer Theatre, Seattle, and Manager William Cutts says that it brought him one of the longest stand-out lines in the history of the house. That pleased Universal

Clemmer's Vivid Lobby Drew Longest Standout

William Cutts, manager of the Clemmer Theatre, Seattle, reports that Harry Carey in Universal's "The Fox" drew some of the longest queues in the history of the house and he ascribes it to an exceptionally jazzy lobby, a part of which is shown on this page.

The doors were covered with desert scene, another, to match, being shown on the other side. The box office was masked in with a rock structure on top of which was a machine gun nest, while above that a frieze of galloping horsemen ran straight across the top space. The box office guard rail was masked in with cactus, lettered up for the production, and the pillars were similarly built in, while large figures of galloping horsemen were shown on the sides.

And Cutts did not merely give the patron something to look at. He made them read. There was lettering on the door panels and on the sides and on the false work which served as a proscenium and anywhere else he could stick text.

It was not what you might call inviting, but there was one highly artistic attachment and that was the box office report.

The biggest seller was the machine gun. This was made of pipe with a small red electric bulb in the muzzle. A snare drum from an old air organ was placed back of the scenic barricade and run from a vacuum cleaner, giving a striking reproduction of the sound of a gun in action, and the homesick soldiers stuck around because it sounded so much like over there. It made a strong appeal to the men, but did not go so well with the women, and Cutts noticed this, so he splashed heart interest appeals on the scenery and that brought in the skirts, too. It was a great week.

Football Score Cards Worked Big Down South

J. C. Duncan, of the Strand Theatre, Asheville, N. C., is not ashamed to confess that he uses the good ideas he gets from the trade papers.

He noted in this department for November 28 the use of a football score card by the Blue Mouse Theatre, Minneapolis. He had 3,000 cards printed up for a local game to put over Vitagraph's "Where Men Are Men" and 2,500 of these were distributed at the grounds. Practically none of them were wasted.

Marine Ford Car Used for Cappy Ricks Run

Rumor says that Henry Ford is about to manufacture air lizzies, but the picture managers beat him to the nautical auto, the marine car having been extensively used for Cappy Ricks.

T. W. Young, Jr., of the Frances Theatre, Dyersburg, Tenn., went that one better. After the car had done its advance exploiting, he stepped the mast in the lobby of the theatre, guying the top so that it was well secured, and the winter winds did the rest, keeping the sail quivering sufficiently to attract attention.

Then he had a stroke of luck, for a small yacht docked at the city pier and Mr. Young borrowed the cabin furnishings for the lobby and used the pilot wheel as a backing for a cutout for Tom Meighan.

It ran the receipts up nearly a hundred dollars, which is a lot of money for the Frances.

Finds a New Use for Cutouts from Poster

C. W. Stroh, of the Arc Theatre, Crawfordsville, Ind., has worked out a new way to use cutouts. He took the abduction from "The Sheik," cut it out and mounted it and placed it above the arch where it faced the patron coming down the street. The reverse side was probably painted up with a sign. It should have been.

That is the only trouble with a cutout such as this. You must select one side of the house where it is to show; picking out that from which the greater number of possible patrons approach. The alternative is to have the other side painted to match, and it takes a better than average artist to get a result in this fashion, for he must match the work of the skilled poster artists.

It makes a splendid flash and should be particularly useful for houses a short distance in a side street from the main thoroughfare, for then it will face the passing throng and arouse their curiosity.

Mr. Stroh makes a real contribution to exploitation with this idea.

SOMETHING NEW IN THE HANDLING OF CUTOUTS

The Arc Theatre, Crawfordsville, Ind., has found a new use for the cutout. It lifted a picture of the abduction from the Paramount poster for "The Sheik" and put it above the arch

Odd Decoration Used for Richardson Play

When "A Man's Home," the Selznick production of the Anna Steese Richardson-Edmund Breese play, was being shown at the Capitol Theatre, New York, an odd effect was used for the sides of the lobby. Apparently massive oaken doors, with heavy ornamental hinges and locks were placed either side of the entrance and lettered "'A Man's Home' is his castle and he has a right to defend it." It looks a bit unfinished without a doorway, but the effect is good and capable of elaboration.

THE CAPITOL DOORWAYS

In the lobby there was an unusual display of paintings for the story, but these were seen after you had purchased your tickets and the doors were the big selling points.

It is well to remember that if you cannot obtain fancy hardware you can model putty or papier mache and paint it a dead black, getting practically the same effect. The Capitol display was made at the Selznick studios and the lettering is cut from thin veneer and tacked on after being painted.

Book Passes Worked

Giving a pass with each copy of The Sheik sold by a local book store was one of the stunts I. C. Holloway used to get in a 35 percent increase at Anderson, S. C. It took only twelve passes, but they paid for the elaborate window and gave an excuse for an extra set of three slides announcing the hook-up. Other slides employed the press book stuff on the admissions to this Paramount in New York and the Dempsey-Carpenter fight. If you want to use slides for the book hook-up, the copy reads:

(1) Get The Shiek
(2) At Blank's Bookstore
(3) And they will give you a pass to see the picture here next week.

It will be better, if you expect a large sale, to persuade the dealer to split the cost of the passes, but one pass will almost always bring in one or more paid admissions, so you can count on getting half price, anyhow.

HERE IS A NEW FORM OF THE CHRISTMAS TICKET IDEA

L. R. Barhydt, of Black's Quincy (Mass.), theatre, printed his on Christmas cards with punch holes instead of coupons. The printer made a neat job with shaded gothic, and it looks like a lot more than it cost in a Christmas envelope

Impassioned Prose

Phil Gleichman got out some wonderful reading teasers for "The Sheik" at the Broadway Strand, Detroit. He ran a two week campaign and used up a number of two and three dollar words. We can't give all of the text, but run your eyes over these, for example:

How shall she escape with her honor?

The whip hand is held by the Sheik.

You will see love-making by Rudolph Valentino in "The Sheik

Which is the full torrent of oriental tradition.

Lovely Agnes Ayres struggles with The Sheik

Fighting for her honor. She falls—in love.

A protoplay of tempestuous love between a madcap English beauty and a bronzed Arab Chief, stripped of the superfluous, shorn of the unnecessary, boiled down to a pyramid of sensational sensations. A banquet for the eyes, a feast for the emotions. You'll leave thrill-shocked, quivering, but satisfied.

If that last doesn't get them, move to some other town.

Contrast that with Grauman's famous line "His love is as warm as the desert sands. DON'T SHOOT. We like this much better—for its kind.

Devises a Novel Style for Christmas Tickets

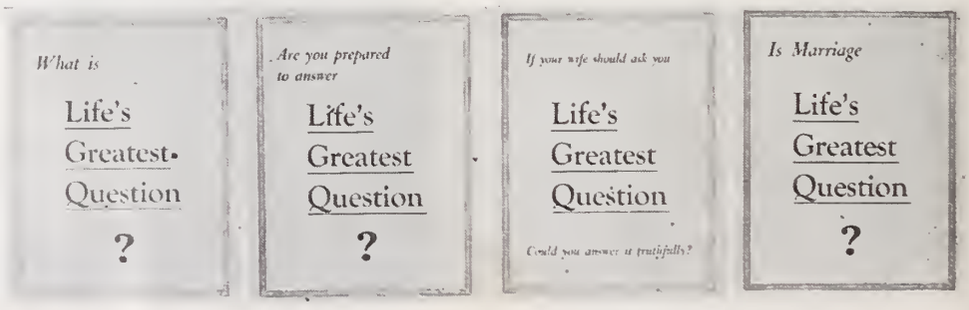
L. R. Barhydt, of the Quincy (Mass.) Theatre, sends in a sample of his Christmas tickets, and reports that they enjoyed a very large sale. He used a stock Christmas card, a poinsetta design in red and green, and got a very neat job with shaded letters and a light line gothic. It is sightly and important looking, and the countersignature gives it the last touch of formality. Blanks are left to be filled in by the purchaser.

It is too late to cash in on the Christmas trade this year, but gifts are made the year around. Get some fancy stock and make up a lot. You will sell them, if you push them.

It would be better to add the cost of the war tax coupon and stamp them war tax paid.

In any event this offers an attractive form for the gift ticket and one that will help business.

Most of the large theatres now use ticket books and find them invaluable. They make money for the house. The books will make even more money for the small-town house and the city neighborhood theatre.



FOUR OF A SET OF SIX C. B. C. TEASER POSTCARDS

THEY ARE LYNCHING WOMEN IN NEWARK THEATRES
This front of the Lyceum Theatre, Newark, looks like a triple execution. It probably got the crowd, for the Universal "No Woman Knows" ran for a full week—the first in the history of the house—but it is pretty crude

Fanny Herself Hangs High Over in Newark

Even crude exploitation will work in a pinch, and we think the exploitation the Lyceum Theatre, Newark, did for "No Woman Knows" is elemental in its crudity, but it helped to keep the Universal picture on the screen for seven days instead of the usual split week.

The screen banner is a good idea and well carried out, but the cutouts of the three-sheets strung to the arch are almost ghastly in their suggestion of a triple lynching.

Evidently the house requires a lot of pictorial stuff, for they move their display frames out onto the sidewalk, but the cutout idea could have been done in a manner less suggstive of violence and sudden death. Even hanging them so that the base apparently rested upon the bottom of the arch would have helped and would have given a better balanced line, as well.

Ran Harold Lloyd 44 Days in Los Angeles

What seems to be the record run for a comedy is reported by Dr. B. B. Brockwedel, of the Symphony Theatre, Los Angeles. He ran Harold Lloyd in "Never Weaken" for 44 days at his 645 seat house, playing to approximately 120,000 persons. In all that time there were never fewer than 100 24-sheets on the billboards and double that number was used at the start, 2,500 inches of newspaper space was employed, counting readers, and the campaign cost around $17,500.

The comedy was the longest subject on the bill, during that time, for short fillers were used instead of a single feature, so that the pull was directly up to Lloyd, yet of the 120,000 patrons but seven complained that they did not care for the attraction.

The only lobby attractor was the name in the electrics and a large photograph on the marquise. The run was put over almost entirely on the newspaper work and billboard showings, and no ballyhoo was used.

Don't say exploitation does not pay until you have tried it. If it doesn't then you don't do enough.

Add Another

Add "Molly O" chocolate bars to the already long list of hook-ups for the Sennett production.

Each bar will contain a miniature still from the production. There are eighty different scenes, and if you can collect the entire set, the Shotwell Company will exchange it for a leatherette album with the miniatures nicely mounted. An initial order for one million cards has been placed with the expectation of marketing ten million bars in the next six months.

Held Out on a Hook-up to Make Them Anxious

Louis Schine, of the Hippodrome, Gloversville, N. Y., looks further than his nose. He decided recently to run a hook-up on "Experience" so he started out to interview the merchants. He found he could get about what he wanted, but he refused to take them all in, running only one page for the Paramount attraction.

The result is that everyone wants to come in on Schine's next hook-up, and some of them who did not want to come in on this display will be in on the next because they found out that this time the idea was oversold.

The best way to make a man want a thing is to tell him he can't have it. A page was plenty enough for "Experience" and Schine has a double all sewed up for some time when he needs it.

Collected Mothers

When he played Ince's "Mother o' Mine," C. B. Davis, of the Norwood, (Ohio), Theatre, made a drive on "Honor thy mother parties," suggesting to the children that they bring their parents to the Ince production.

All mothers over seventy were admitted free, the opening night, and as a special inducement free admissions were offered the family showing the largest number of mothers.

The first night of the showing eight mothers over seventy took advantage of the offer and the party prize went to five mothers, a mother, her daughter-in-law and the latter's three married daughters.

It not only made good business, but it was good publicity and that made more business.

Another good angle was persuading the Sunday School teachers to lecture their classes on the love and respect due mothers on the day before the picture opened.

THIS RAN HAROLD LLOYD FOR SEVEN WEEKS IN LOS ANGELES
Dr. H. B. Brockwedel, of the Symphony Theatre, ran "Never Weaken" for forty-four days to about 120,000 admissions, spending $17,000 to get that business and using about 2,500 inches of newspaper space. Some records for a comedy!

Simple Window Hook-up Given a Press Notice

Nampa, Idaho, is not used to window display, and when A. H. Drake and C. R. Potter, who jointly run the Liberty and Strand Theatres, devised a window hook-up for "The Affairs of Anatol," the local paper gave it a write-up as a novelty, and increased the value of the window just that much more, for it was not only a press notice for the house, but it gave an added value to the window itself.

The window has just a conversion of the star identification contest. Framed pictures of eleven Paramount stars were shown; not all of them appearing in Anatol, and a pair of seats were given to the first five persons to make correct identifications.

It was very simple, but it had everyone guessing, and it put the title of the picture over to a standout.

THIS WINDOW DISPLAY WON A PRESS NOTICE

Window displays were a novelty in Nampa, Idaho, and the offer to give pairs of seats to the first five to guess the identity of the Paramount stars shown was such a novelty that the editor wrote it up as news, helping to put over "The Affairs of Anatol"

Hodkinson Telescope Has Face of the World

A giant telescope, apparently passing through the wall of the lobby and presumably through to the roof was the big lobby stunt for Clune's Broadway Theatre, Los Angeles on "The Face of the World." The telescope was in reality thrust through a painting of the heavens some distance in front of the back wall, and it was brought down so that one might peep through the eye-piece. All through the day hundreds waited their turn to gratify hetir curiosity, and all they saw was a slowly revolving globe with the inquiry "If you had the chance, would you change The Face of the World?

This merely sold the title, but it gained interest and there was plenty of selling talk on the art cards which lined the lobby. The telescope stopped the passer by and got his interest in the announcements.

Encored

The Palace Theatre, Wichita, is the latest to report good results with the unemployed girl stunt for "Ladies Must Live."

Stanley Chambers persuaded the Eagle to hire ten girls who sold papers on the street "Because Ladies Must Live." Other banners hooked to the paper and the theatre, and the girls did a rushing business.

The fact that several girls wore fur coats did not seem to hurt the stunt in the least. Perhaps the Wichita mind is not analytical.

LET TELESCOPE SCAN THE FACE OF THE WORLD

Clune's Broadway Theatre, Los Angeles, made a clever adaptation of the telescope idea for the Hodkinson-released Irvin Willat production. The interior showed a slowly revolving glove with the query: "If you had a chance would you change the Face of the World?"

Staged a Parade of Motorcycle Warriors

Most managers have tried to have a couple of armored men on motorcycles for the Fox production of "A Connecticut Yankee," but Doc Horator, of the Alhambra Theatre, Toledo, staged a parade of the anachronistic knights and ran them all over town to help out the Christmas business.

Then he took them down and photographed them in front of a couple of water tanks as emblematic of the prohibition Christmas cheer. That seems to us to be the refinement of cruelty. It's bad enough to back up against the water tanks the other 364 days of the year.

Outside of this it was good advertising for the Mark Twain comedy, and it brought the vacationing kiddies in, which was the angle Doc was eyeing.

Three Piece Mail Campaign

Because a newspaper campaign was not deemed expedient in Norfolk on "Over the Hill," the Auditorium resorted to a three-piece mail campaign to a list of 2,000 names, and found it cheaper than the advertising rates worked out.

The first shot was a postcard merely announcing the coming of the picture, the second, three days later, was another card with a cut and some additional details, and one day later the campaign closed with the mailing of circus heralds, timed to reach the recipient the day before the opening. It seemed to replace newspaper advertising very successfully.

It Worked

D. A. Coulter, of the Ohio Theatre, Indianapolis, used street car banners to announce the day after the opening that "The Sheik" would be continued for a second week in response to popular demand.

No one stopped to wonder how he arranged with the car company and got his banners so quickly, and the gag had the usual effect of making the crowd more eager to see a success, and the standpoint continued into the second week.

THE OLD OAKEN BUCKET HERE HANGS IN THE WELL

The lobby from the Strand, Knoxville, is the same material used for another picture, but repainted to suggest an old home, with the well curb suggested by the title of this Wid Gunning production. It was devised by Alex Lukowski, and cost only $18

Repainted Old Flats for Old Oaken Bucket

Alex Lukowski, of the Strand Theatre, Knoxville, Tenn., repainted his "Old Nest" setting for Wid Gunning's "The Old Oaken Bucket." The idea for this was self-suggestive, for an old-fashioned well curb seemed to be the most appropriate stunt for the title. The house was made over into a brick structure and the paling fence was used to enclose the yard instead of define the approaches. A stone well curb was built, with a bucket and pole and stone counterbalance. The appeal lay in the atmosphere of the old home. Not counting the cost of material, which was all on hand, the painting and labor represented only $18.

The trees were all real stuff and the floor of the yard, inside the fence was covered with autumn leaves. The permanent three sheet board, which is used for the coming attraction, interfered with the display, but it is probable that regular patrons discounted this intrusion.

Took Sheik Tent Idea Inside of His Lobby

Because his front did not lend itself to the Lindlar tent scheme, and because he realized the value of the idea, W. Griffith Mitchell, of the Majestic Gardens, Kalamazoo, took the idea indoors and fitted up his long and narrow lobby with the colors.

On the right hand side of the cut, the box office is entirely enclosed in a tent of brilliantly colored material, and this fabric is carried down to the entrance and across the end of the passage, the arches being cut off at the top with other striped material. Palms were placed about to add to the effect.

It did not have the display value of an exterior trim, but it did pull people through the glass doors to see what it was all about, and most of them kept on going until the usher found them a seat.

Reviving Devil Stunt

All of the stunts used for "The Devil" are being dug out for "The Devil Within," a Fox production with Dustin Farnum..

James Rourke, of the Empire Theatre, Bridgeport, used a handout which could be folded so that only the line, "Go to see 'The Devil'" was visible and the "see" was so small as not to count.

All Dangerous Curves Swung to the Theatre

Putting into practice press book stunts, plus, gave Roy S. Smart, of the Noble Theatre, Anniston, Ala., about three times his average business and puts him in the lead for exploitation of this picture on the Southern Enterprises circuit.

Most of his work centered on the road map idea from the press book, and he used two in the lobby a week before the showing, one of them being pointed up with colored lights at the curves. Saturday night before the Monday opening, he took the whole of Main street for his map, using the traffic signals at all street intersections. And from a point well down the street to the theatre he used the danger points—with some of his own additions—on fifteen foot banners placed above store fronts. As you came toward the theatre you traversed all of the high points.

Hooked Each Store

These danger points in the map are the wedding, the first baby, loneliness and similar happenings. Each store was hooked to the point it announced, one telling that it could outfit the brides for the wedding, another advertising things for the first baby, an auto agency suggested its make of car as an antidote for loneliness and a hosiery store had an original line reading: "They may not be dangerous, but our stocks have the curves all right."

Boyish Bridal Pair

Another Saturday stunt was dressing up the front of a store under repair with scenery and stills along with the road map and on Monday the bridal car was used, with two boys as the married couple. At each corner they would alight and inspect the curve before turning the corner. As they reentered the car a hidden bugler would sound "Here Comes the Bride." It took the staffs of two theatres to put over the special stunts, working until half past one Sunday morning, but they put the production over to the limit of exploitation.

HOW "THE SHEIK" TENT WORKS INSIDE THE LOBBY

W. Griffith Mitchell, of the Majestic Gardens, Detroit, could not swing the tent from on "The Sheik," but he worked the idea inside the lobby, and people came in to see. Generally they stayed in, which was what Mr. Mitchell hoped for

Neat, Open Display Makes Larger Sales

Most window displays are too full. They show so much that the eye becomes confused, and gathers nothing, even where the display is all of the same article.

This window on "The Shiek" from Omaha, playing at the Strand Theatre, is a capital model to follow. Only twenty-five copies of the Hull book are shown, but they give a better effect of mass than would have been had from a hundred or more copies. In between the volumes are stills from the Paramount production and fancy ash receivers and candlesticks, the latter on stands ornamented with Oriental scarves. Mats, apparently of striped matting, break the floor surface and add to the color of the display.

Now and then a display will get over through the very immensity of its size, but in ninety-nine cases out of every hundred an artistic display will draw more attention and give more effect, and this was proven not only by the sales of the books, but of the ash trays. They were put in merely to give attraction to the window, but they sold, too.

The general effect is that the eye roams over the window, searching for the stills. At every shift in the glance the book form is encountered, which not only emphasizes the book value of the play but urges the sale of the volumes.

THIS IS A NICE MODEL FOR A BOOK WINDOW DISPLAY

It was used on "The Sheik" during its two-weeks' stay at the Strand Theatre, Omaha, and it commends itself to those who are looking for something which will be pleasant to the eye and therefore sell better than a stuffed window

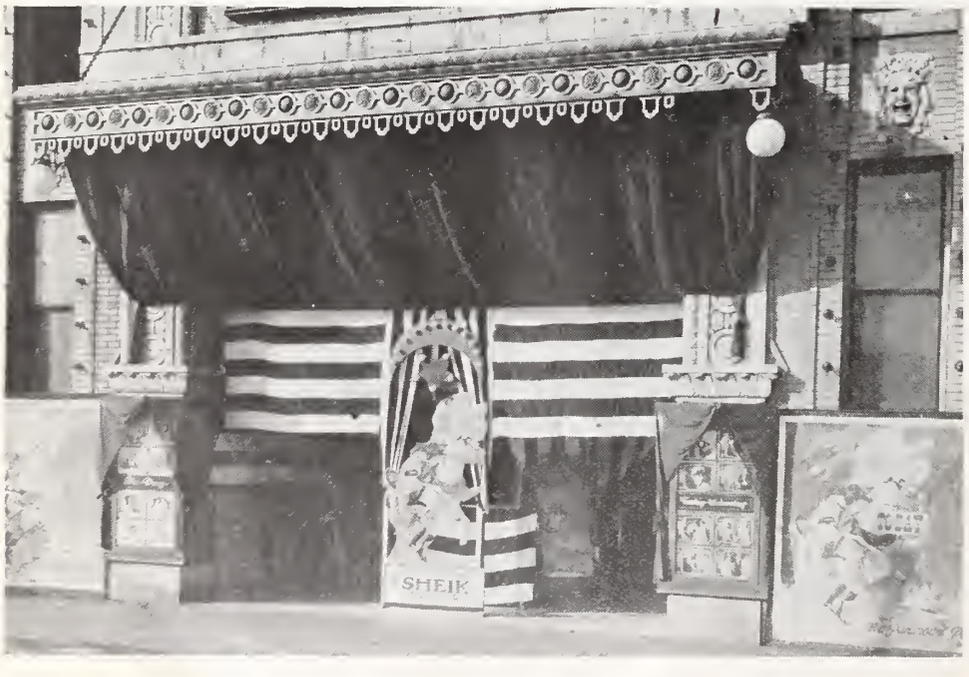
Squandered 33 Dollars Exploiting The Sheik

After looking things over, William C. Johnson, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Columbis, Ga., decided that he could not sell "The Sheik" to the best advantage through the newspapers. He argued that he would do better with exploitation, so he cut his advertising spaces and just shoveled in the exploitation. He not only broke all attendance records, but he had a record turnaway on the three days. He could not take care of his crowds.

The house is a part of the Southern Enterprises, and the managers are passing along a part of the tent lobby, pro rating the cost, but Johnson got reckless and blew himself to six dollars worth of red and yellow bunting to liven up the black and white of the traveling material. The colored stuff was stretched across from the box office, and a cutout was put in place on the stanchions of the box office guard rail.

He could not get hold of production stills, so he took the advertisement from the Saturday Evening Post and had it framed and hung beside the box office for an advance, calling attention to it by means of slides. He thinks that this helped more than stills, just this once. He did get some of the paintings later, and these he placed in store windows to supplement the first banner ever stretched across the business section. It took him an entire week to gain permission, but he put the banner up. An aviator did stunt flying and herald distributing in return for a slide advertisement in two theatres and he bannered the street cars.

Every dollar he spent in exploitation brought back a trifle more than $10 in additional receipts, not to count the moral effect of the turnaway and the fact that everyone liked the picture, and forgot their disappointment over an earlier picture which had flivered.



THIS LOBBY COST SIX DOLLARS, FOR MUCH MATERIAL WAS BORROWED

William C. Johnson, of the Rialto Theatre; Columbus, Ga., bought some red and yellow bunting to liven up the black and white stuff which was being passed from house to house, and he made a wonderful clean-up with exploitation stunts

Dresses for "Enchantment"

H. B. Clark, of the Rialto Theatre, Macon, Ga., put on a fashion show to give emphasis to the gorgeous costumes in the Marion Davies production of "Enchantment," and it helped to draw a banner crowd. The total cost was the writing of two cards which were displayed on either side of the proscenium telling that the dresses were from a certain store. This store supplied the gowns and the models, and felt that it was getting a good break.

This Barker's Voice Carried Three Blocks

Prominent in the stunts used for the opening of "The Queen of Sheba," in San Francisco, was the employment of a magnavox with a triple amplifier which was installed on the roof of a three story building in the business district.

All through the first week of the run the barker kept at work, his voice covering a distance of a square and a half each way, and few escaped learning of the presence of the Fox attraction by this means. Those who did were given opportunity to look at the lithographs.

A three elevens started off the run, with a drop to a two threes following, and eight windows were hooked to displays with the semi-nude queen the central figure in the paintings.

Special Block Paper for Cuban Musketeer

taken up by the exhibitors. He wrote the book to help the exhibitor, and that it has helped them is proven by the almost universal adoption of the plan book ideas as against original schemes. Moyer has sent over a couple of hundred advertisements in the last few weeks on the Musketeers and we have found as many more in our own samples. It's almost all press book stuff because the book gives the exhibitor precisely what he wants. Moyer has sent in so many adaptations of the plan book that we have had to buy a special waste basket for the samples we cannot find room for. But the big point is this: If Moyer can do it, and do it on every picture, why cannot other press agents give us similar work instead of a lot of fancy color printing and general bunk. It is nearly two years since we first called attention to the value of the Moyer plan of sending out ready made art material to be worked into house designs, in addition to the same stuff in mat and cut form for those who cannot handle original work. It has been nearly two years, and yet the average press book is as bad as ever. Anyhow here is another example of the versatility of the Moyer material but Moyer knows they make things in Cuba that are more acceptable up here than one-sheets.

A Local Theatre Scrap Sold Both Attractions

Sometimes a scrap is a good thing for a theatre. Down in Amarillo, Texas, there has been a jam, and when the Fair Theatre booked in Wid Gunning's "The Old Oaken Bucket" the opposition went after Gunning's Lois Weber production of "The Blot" and the war was on. The Fair took a full page shown here, with a decidedly good treatment of three cuts. The mortises in the sheet music cut carry different copy and there is different wording in the two bucket reverse cuts. All of the text was lifted from the press book. The opposition came back with a double truck hook-up, and the Fair countered with a well curb in the lobby, and when that didn't seem to be enough, they put another curb on a truck and took it around town for everyone to see. The result was that both houses played to extra business and by jazzing up the patrons, they have established a taste for pictures that will run well beyond the immediate scrap. It was not a premeditated fight, but it works so well that it would pay two friendly managers to pretend to fight just to interest the patrons.

Change in Proportion Gives Better Display

Most of the spaces for the Grauman theatres, Los Angeles, are five and six columns wide. Cutting down to four columns and dropping slightly lower down the page gives a better proportion to this space for the big house. The three vignettes at the left show the three women with whom the play is concerned and the panels give a hint of the contrast in the three types, arousing curiosity as to what it is all about. For once the paneled program is dropped, but this is one of the best selling advertisements we have received from the Los Angeles manager because it rouses active curiosity instead of merely announcing the title and stars. That black oval is irregular in outline merely because this is a pulled proof and not as clear as it should be. In the paper it was a perfect oval and it put the title over well because it was the one spot of color in the space and the eye instinctively turned to that first. The lettering is large enough to make the use of the black permissible.

Baltimore Obtains An Exceptionally Good Idea

As a rule the advertisement deeper than its width does not give as good a display as the reverse, but here is a display from the New Theatre, Baltimore, which seems to call for the long drop, and which could not have been done as well in the broad form. But it has more than its shape to commend it. It is one of the really distinctive ads. It is not an amusement advertisement, in the broad sense, and it stands out on the page like a white signpost on a cloudy night. It suggests elegance and

It is one advertisement in a thousand and whoever laid out this copy has achieved a triumph. It probably did more to bring the "carriage trade" than anything in the pictorial line that could possibly be used. About once every six months we get hold of something like this, but seldom does one come oftener. The designer has a good reason for wearing a larger hat for a couple of weeks. It is an advertising triumph.

Australian Artist Draws with Too Heavy a Pencil

This is a full page from Sydney, Australia, on Universal's "Reputation" showing simultaneously at three houses, which distributes the cost into thirds and still gives a fairly heavy bill. It would be more effective were the lines of the drawing less heavy. It makes the page too solid. A great deal depends upon the scale of enlargement or reduction. A drawing which looks all right in a certain size is too heavy in the lines if a large reduction is made and too light if the drawing is greatly enlarged. The artist who does the work for these houses apparently draws to size, but he uses too much ink on all the samples we have seen. There is too much detail; too much black and too much cross hatching. Newspaper work should be bold in outline and not carry too much detail. Here a shadow effect has been aimed at, but the result is not good. Stronger outlines and less detail would have carried much better. The chief aim seems to have been to get a black background for the outlined title, but there is more than that to a good advertisement, and the house does not get all that is coming to it unless the full drawing helps to sell the play on something other than size.

Blotter Calendars Win

The Bijou Theatre, Three Rivers, Canada, pins its faith to blotter calendars and finds that nothing gives quite the same results, for it reaches the school children, the homes and the office and a really good blotter is welcome anywhere, for which reason Mr. Wood gets absorbent blotters and not the sort that merely blot the wet ink all over the paper. The layout is very simple, a calendar on the left and the dated attractions on the right, but the idea gets the house over strong.

Gets on the Signature

Arthur E. Weld was recently transferred from Cedar Rapids to the Strand Theatre, Waterloo. He wanted to get his name in the public mind, not through egotism but as a matter of business. The Strand signature was in script with a dash below. He had the dash mortised for his name in type and put it over very nicely. He knows that the personality angle counts, as a business proposition, and while he does not intrude his name on the public, he wants them to know it; which is a good idea in spite of what some people say.

Split Grauman Space for Special Showing

Armistice Week the Grauman Theatre, Los Angeles, split the space in the Sunday advertisement to play up "Flashes from the Front," a special set of war scenes appropriate to the occasion. This rather crowded the film attraction, but there was enough space in which to get it over, and the panel shows the full underline for the following week. Those three specks in the centre panel, near the top, are three flags from a patriotic border. They are so small that they look cheap. The panel gives the running order of the program in accordance with the regular practise of the house. This is a good plan, for it assembles the various factors in an orderly array that enables the reader to tell precisely what he is going to see. Grauman does not always take as much space for this announcement, but the program is always paneled somewhere in the display. Grauman makes much of his special productions and this form of announcement puts over the general idea of a big program in a way that is not possible where the reader has to pick up the items from various portions of a large display.

Branford Artist Gets a Hash for a Display

We don't suppose you can expect much of a town where the inhabitants insist upon double features, but Newark certainly seems to enjoy messing things up in the Sunday issues. Generally the Branford does better than some of the others, but this large space for Ray in "Two Minutes to Go" is an awful mixture. Probably it appeals in Newark, but out of that town it does not look so good, for the star and title stream across the top and down one side, while the house title runs diagonally through the space and Pauline Frederick in "The Sting of the Lash" fills in below. The Ray title is speed lined to suggest its swiftness which helps to muss things up. Probably Newark audiences respond to this sort of appeal since the packed drawing is so largely used, but we think that even in Newark a more tidy drawing would please as well, if not more. We have seen some capital displays from the Newark theatres, but we have also seen some remarkably poor ones, and this applies to all houses. There must be something about the town that affects the artist. It may be laid down as a rule that the orderly drawing which presents the attraction in a clean fashion will always draw. Extreme styles such as this will perhaps get over, but they will not carry the same general appeal.

Don't Blame Him

M. Rosenthal, of the Walkerville (Ont.), Theatre, foams over at a recent press book in which this suggestion is included in the idea for a prologue: "At the same time, the babe in the crib, which is also revealed by the spotlight, holds out its arms to its mother." He wants to know how the author of the press book expects him to be able to get the baby to act at the proper moment. It reminds us of the time we were reading a story to "Pop" Lubin, in which some chickens were to be used. He listened to the idea through and then quietly remarked: "Maybe that's funny, but who is going to tell the chickens how to act?" Some of these press books are terrible bunk, and we don't blame Rosenthal for losing his goat.

Shea Daily Displays Offer Strong Points

Here are four daily displays from the Shea houses in Buffalo, which offer a similarity of idea for two houses. The wedge-shaped top is common to both offerings, while the bottoms differ because the orchestra has been the Hippodrome trade-mark for many years. Both are good examples of clean-cut lettering, and the Hippodrome shows two good cut figures for attractors. These are not really needed as the all lettered displays for Marion Davies are almost as striking in spite of the absence of an illustration, for the black bands serve sufficiently as attractors. Mr. Franklin gets in

FOUR SHEA DAILY ADS

30 and 36 lines as much as some would gain from a double sixty, and he does it week after week. The Shea daily ads are never had, seldom poor and generally above the average, and the artist who uses larger spaces can study them with profit, for they are simply larger advertisements so well done that they stand reduction to a column width. The Shea weekly advertisements vary little. Mr. Franklin has found a style which has proved to be the best through long use, and he adheres to that style, but the daily spaces offer much that is new and are well worthy of study. Try that Criterion idea some time when you are looking for a frame for a two or three column announcement. You will find that it will work just as well.

Still in Use

Nothing has been said about the monthly calendar card for a long time, but they still seem to be in use. The Apollo and Mueller theatres, Omaha, are using them to good advantage every month, employing a card 7x11 inches, with the dates in two columns and a punch hole so that it may be hung on the same nail used for last month's. We know of nothing better for a neighborhod house.

Wendt's Panel Effect Shows a Capital Idea

Harold F. Wendt, of the Rivoli, Toledo, is hampered by the fact that he has to advertise a vaudeville show, and very often his film attraction is made to suffer. Eugene O'Brien is almost lost against the grey tone of the water and you have to look close to see the announcement, but the panel stands out nicely and where this can be used for the film attraction it will work to good advantage. Where black is used against grey, a deep white line should be used around the letters. There is no room here, but that merely proves that too much is attempted in the space. The chief point of the dispay is the effectiveness of the tropical scene with its solid blacks against the grey. That catches the attention and pulls it over to the space where the white announcement will sell. It does not do much for the film announcement. A water ripple in white broadening out toward the bottom would have given a better display to the film title and would have been more effective as a piece of drawing since the moon is never reflected as a whole. It will always show as a ripple effect, which gives a legitimate excuse for a white path of light against which the lettering can be done.. But even at that, the place for the announcement is in the white panel.

SPOILED BY VAUDEVILLE

This full page house advertisement from the Isis Theatre, Shanghai, China, is one of the best pieces of advertising we have yet received from the Asiatic houses. house idea to the limit. It is an example American houses might well follow, for few theatres give enough attention to selling ideas of the house as a thing apart from the current features, and yet the house idea, if played up, is a better tradition than "always a good show," for that is included in the general appeal. The press work is not very good, for a reglet has come up on the left hand side of the type and was not put down again, but otherwise it is a good example of typesetting, and a credit to the China Press.

Cutting Down a Cut Saves a Space Bill

The Alhambra Theatre, Indianapolis, cut down the Wid Gunning cut for "What Do Men Want?" and got as much out of 200 lines across five as they could have gotten out of a full column drop using the cut as it was originally planned. Most of the theatres using the question mark went right down the column, but the Alhambra got as much out of the contracted space and achieved a much snappier advertisement. The house used just about enough talk to put the production over. More would have spoiled the argument. There is a temptation to overplay on this story because the theme affords so many good lines, but one strong punch is better than a series of slaps, and the Alhambra stood on the general appeal of the story to all men and women. This space could be stuffed with type and not sell half as well. A better scene cut might have been employed, but apart from this, the advertisement is unusually good.

SHORTER AND SNAPPIER

Worked It Twice

Because of the first matinee hook-up fell on a rainy day, John Schwalm, of the Rialto Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, put over two pictures in connection with the local paper instead of one.

He had Charles Ray in "The Old Swimmin' Hole" and persuaded the circulation manager of the Journal that it was a picture every child should see. The circulation manager was perfectly in agreement with him, so they planned a free matinee, ostensibly given by the newspaper through the courtesy of the theatre.

Consensus of Published Reviews

E. H.—It abounds in thrilling situations and homely little touches, and in photography, settings and acting, is a fine piece of work.

T. R.—"Ten Nights in a Barroom" is filled with incidents that bring the little old lump up into your throat, send the thrills tingling up and down your spine and hold you engrossed and tense to the very last foot of film.

F. D.—Mighty good picture made from famous old play. This ought to get you a lot of money—stick to the title.

Just Around the Corner

(Featured Cast—Cosmopolitan-Paramount—6,173 Feet)

M. P. W.—"Just Around the Corner" is human drama, a warm, sympathetic study of the home life of an East Side family.

T. R.—Brimful of pathos and sentimental interest.

F. D.—Mother love keynote of Fannie Hurst story directed by Frances Marion.

N.—Heart interest story—great human appeal.

E. H.—Another mother picture. Not as good as "Humoresque," but better than many that have been offered.

Hail the Woman

(Featured Cast—Thomas H. Ince-First National—7,222 Feet)

M. P. W.—"Hail the Woman" is built upon a theme that reaches in and grips the mind and the heart, and therefore the continuous attention of the average moving picture theatregoer.

F. D.—A picture that not only starts the New Year right for Ince, but also gives to the exhibitors a feature that promises to appease all the desires of hungry box offices everywhere.

T. R.—This is a picture of great emotional appeal.

N.—Powerful human document—exceptionally well acted.

E. H.—A great combination of talent in a great screen play.

Three Live Ghosts

(Featured Cast—Paramount—5,784 Feet)

M. P. W.—An expert blending of delicious humor, a certain amount of drama and a good deal of human appeal makes "Three Live Ghosts" an entertainment that cannot fail to meet with general approval.

F. D.—Lots of good, straight humor in this one.

N.—Anyone who attends motion pictures to be amused, regardless of their especial preference in the nature of an offering, will be bound to enjoy "Three Live Ghosts." It sets a precedent which promises improved pictures, if those which follow keep an even pace.

T. R.—No question what this picture will do.

A Department for the Information of Exhibitors

Edited by A. Van Buren Powell

The box office is the dependable guide for all exhibitors on moving picture productions. In this department your brother exhibitors tell the story of the success or failure of the various releases. Your frank reports on all pictures are solicited for this department. You are helping yourself and others by sending them in. Use the blank printed in this department or better still write us that you'd like a free supply of report cards.

Equity

CHARGE IT. Very good picture. All who saw it liked it very well. Advertising; newspapers, lobby. Patronage; very best. Attendance; good. J. Solomon, Bijou Theatre, Clarksburg, W. Va.

MID-CHANNEL. Fair picture, very elaborate settings and costumes for which all Clara Kimball Young's productions are noted. Advertising; I did a little extra advertising on this. Patronage; high class. Attendance; fair. Geo. O. Monroe, Gilbert Theatre, Beatrice, Nebraska.

First National

BITS OF LIFE. We liked this very much. Something a little new. Wonder why others have not tried this kind of thing. "Bits of Life" came near pleasing every living soul. Always dead ones who have never been pleased with anything. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Okla.

COURAGE. Good as some of the bigger specials, only needed better known stars to make a big success; will please any audience. Advertising; billboards. Patronage; small town, all classes. Attendance; good. L. O. Davis, Perry Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

DINTY. A picture that knocks them down and makes the laughs that make the manager feel that he is doing the world some good. A lot of satisfaction in running a picture of this class. Getting the money ought not to be everything with the moving picture theatre manager. Advertising; good. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. E. J. Bregger, Gem Theatre, Crystal Falls, Michigan.

HABIT. Nothing exceptional about this production, although it is a very good program picture. Advertising; usual. Patronage; better class. Attendance; fair. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

HOME SPUN FOLKS. Very good New England story with the interest well sustained. The kind of picture the reformer cries for but does not come out to see. Advertising; regular. Patronage; high class. Attendance; poor. Geo. O. Monroe, Gilbert Theatre, Beatrice, Nebraska.

I AM GUILTY. This is an exceptionally good picture, in fact it's the best Louise Glaum production made this year. Advertising; posters and dodgers. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. Jack Kaplan, Royal Theatre, South Fallsburgh, New York.

LYING LIPS. One of the best pictures ever shown here. It makes a fellow want to cuss though when nothing seems to get them out. Advertising; extra display in papers and billboards. Patronage; general. Attendance; fair. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minn.

PLAYTHINGS OF DESTINY. An excellent picture in every respect. Hurricane wonderful. Book it by all means. Attendance very poor but not owing to the picture. Advertising; regular. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; poor. J. F. Schelz, Columbia Theatre, Columbia, North Carolina.

THE SKY PILOT. Great picture, pleased all. Advertising; newspaper and poster boards. Patronage; average. Attendance; fair. H. R. Walker, Royal Theatre, Dartmouth, Nova Scotia, Canada.

SPLENDID HAZARD. Splendid acting by Walthall; very deep, and will please most every well read person. Advertising; ones, 11x14, mail. Patronage; rural. Attendance; fair. C. R. McCown, Alhambra Theatre, Cornersville, Tenn.

Fox

DEVIL WITHIN. A very good picture indeed of the kind. Very good moral and well acted. Advertising; usual. Patronage; regular. Attendance; good. Geo. C. Poindexter, Broadway Theatre, Hopewell, Virginia.

THE IRON RIDER. Five reels starring Wm. Russell. Didn't please my patrons, although I consider it an average picture. Advertising; newspaper, handbills and photos. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; good. Harry C. Waffle, Lyric Theatre, McIntosh, South Dakota.

PRIMAL LAW. A very good picture. The child actor in this is the real star. Very peculiar fight scene at close. Good program feature. Advertising; posters. Patronage; rural. Attendance; fair. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

OVER THE HILL. Magnificent. Will please 100 per cent., weepy but wonderful. If they don't like this, they don't want pictures. Advertising; billboards, heralds, mailing list, heavy newspaper campaign. Attendance; opened poor. E. W. Collins, Empire Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

OVER THE HILL. A big special, one of the best pictures I ever ran. Don't be afraid of it, everyone who has seen it was crazy about it. Advertising; advertised like a circus. Patronage; all classes. Attendance; fair. Peebles, Queen Theatre, Denison, Texas.

RIDIN' ROMEO. First Fox I have run in about six months. Any exhibitor catering to a middle class should run Fox, they have the stuff with the pep. This Mix sure pleased them. Attendance; good. M. Oppenheimer, Empire Theatre, New Orleans, Louisiana.

RIDING WITH DEATH. Westerns draw with the average patronage, and should not be overlooked. This one has punch without being raw. Advertising; usual. Patronage; just folks. Attendance; good. Arthur B. Smith, Fenwick Theatre, Salem, New Jersey.

Goldwyn

BUNTY PULLS THE STRINGS. The picture may be all right but I can't give them this stuff in a small town and get any business. Advertising; usual. Patronage; small town. Attendance; rotten. W. Ray Erne, Arcade Theatre, Charlotte, Michigan.

CABINET OF DR. CALIGARI. They'll run you out of town if you show this and charge admission. Awful stuff and nothing to the story. Lay of!!! Advertising; regular posters and photos. Patronage; family. Attendance; good. A. V. Reef, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

CUPID THE COW PUNCHER. Never had a poor picture with Will Rogers; he is very good in this one. Advertising; ones, threes, photos. Patronage; family. Attendance; fair. A. Wirtenberg, Woodlawn Theatre, Schenectady, New York.

DANGEROUS CURVE AHEAD. A very good comedy-drama. Pleased most of the audience. Advertising; sixes, threes, four ones, photos, slide, signs. Patronage; small town. Attendance; not so bad. M. Leszczynski, Pastime Theatre, Depew, New York.

GOING SOME. A good picture; everybody liked it. Rex Beach stories are always good. Advertising; newspaper, lobby. Patronage; high class. Attendance; good. G. E. Shilkett, St. Dennis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

Hodkinson

KEEPING UP WITH LIZZIE. A very good picture, patrons very much pleased. Advertising; newspapers and lobby. Patronage; average. Attendance; fair. Wm. Solomon, Bijou Theatre, Clarksburg, West Virginia.

LAVENDER AND OLD LACE. Ran with musical Hawaiians and stood them up. Picture is one I call 100 per cent. amusing. Advertising; newspaper, billboard. Patronage; all classes. Attendance; good. W. L. Landers, Gem Theatre, Batesville, Arkansas.

THE MYSTERIOUS RIDER. Very good story. Clear film and very good acting. Had full house on Monday night. Advertising; local newspaper. Patronage; general. Attendance; great. Harold Clouse, Hollywood Theatre, Highwood, Minnesota.

RIP VAN WINKLE. Played this with the school. Just lots of people in town who did not come to see this one thought it a joke, but pictures pleased quite well and we were satisfied. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

Straight from the Shoulder Reports

Metro

CAMILLE. Wonderful, but some of the patrons did not like it. Think it was too deep for them. Advertising; paper, billboards, lobby and window cards. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; good. J. Edw. Mitchell, Strand Theatre, Waverley, Massachusetts.

FOUR HORSEMEN. A wonderful special picture like this is a big help at this time, as we need something out of the ordinary to pull them. Advertising; big special advertising campaign. Patronage; high class. Attendance; fair at advanced prices. Geo. O. Monroe, Gilbert Theatre, Beatrice, Nebraska.

LIFE'S DARN FUNNY. A weak picture, and if it was not for the star, Viola Dana, and her leading man, Gareth Hughes, the picture would have been a complete failure here. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; poor. Jack Kaplan, Royal Theatre, South Fallsburgh, New York.

THE MATCH BREAKER. Not the star's best but a very good picture. Pleased everybody that saw it. Advertising; lobby, billboards, newspaper, handbills. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. G. E. Shilkett, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

THE MATCH BREAKER. A very pleasing picture, pleased everyone. You can't go wrong on Metro with their 100 per cent. co-operation. Have made my poorest nights into big ones with their pleasing stars. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. Irving Carlin, Iris Theatre, Monte Vista, Colorado.

Paramount

AFFAIRS OF ANATOL. Picture pleased 100 per cent. Raised prices. Advertising; extra. Patronage; high class. Attendance; very poor. Arch E. Bamberger, Empress Theatre, Owensboro, Ky.

BELOW THE SURFACE. Best yet, advertised as special, well worth it. Under water scenes good, story fine, a little old, but had good print. Advertising; regular, ones, threes, sixes, newspaper. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. L. P. Stubblefield, Hartsville Theatre, Hartsville, Tennessee.

BONNIE BRIER BUSH. A picture that will add to the prestige of any exhibitor, large or small. Highly commend it, the scenes are superb. Advertising; fliers and one sheets. Patronage; first class. Attendance; good. W. P. Doro, Opera House, Bridgton, Maine.

THE CHARM SCHOOL. Very good. D. Buss, Star Theatre, Tonawanda, N. Y.

DANGEROUS LIES. Oh, why do they do it? Forbid me from any more British productions. Too bad this kind of film is marketed. Advertising; fourteen one sheets, two newspapers, lobby. Patronage; best. Attendance; poor. H. B. Barr, Rialto Theatre, Enid, Oklahoma.

HELIOTROPE. One of the best pictures ever shown here, depicting the self sacrifice of the father for his child. If "Humoresque" is the Mother-love picture, this is the Father-love picture. Boost it and get 'em in, the picture will do the rest. Advertising; newspaper, programs and posters, etc. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; good. Mrs. Phelps Sasseen, Lyric Theatre, Easley, South Carolina.

HOLD YOUR HORSES. Good comedy drama. Picture in five reels, just the proper length; not too long, therefore, not tiresome. When you get over 5,000 feet, pictures should be away out of the ordinary. Advertising; posters, newspapers, lobby. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. H. R. Walker, Royal Theatre, Dartmouth, Nova Scotia, Canada.

INSIDE OF THE CUP. Strong story, well enacted. Advertising; newspaper. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. L. T. Caraskadan, Music Hall, Keyser, West Virginia.

A CORRECTION

In last week's issue "Journey's End" and "Silent Barrier" were wrongly listed under the Goldwyn banner. They should have been credited to Hodkinson.

THE SHEIK. A very good picture, was liked far better than "Affairs of Anatol." A very good box office attraction. Advertising; 1 sheets, 3 sheets, big newspaper publicity. Patronage; very highest. Attendance; good. Jno. G. Pierce, Family Theatre, Mahonoy City, Pa.

THE WHISTLE. This is a good Hart picture and all who saw it said it was great. But as usual I lost money on this one owing to the high rental Paramount makes me pay and local conditions. Didn't take in enough to pay rental on film. Advertising: lobby and mailing list. J. F. Pruett, Liberty Theatre, Roanoke, Ala.

WHITE AND UNMARRIED. Very good, many complimented, none complained. A little different to most pictures. Advertising; regular way. Patronage; small town. Attendance; average. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, DeQueen, Arkansas.

THE WITCHING HOUR. More favorable comment from patrons on this picture than any program picture I have used in many a day. Personally I should like to see more of its kind. Advertising; very little advertising. Patronage; high type. Attendance; above average. L. M. Tug, Rialto Theatre, Jerome, Idaho.

Pathe

BEGGAR IN PURPLE. Good production. Advertising; regular. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. W. S. Pease, Centennial Theatre, Lowell, Wisconsin.

THE SAGE HEN. This one gave good satisfaction. If all were as good, we would not need to worry about disappointed patrons. Advertising; extra billboards and display in paper. Patronage; general. Attendance; fair. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minnesota.

WITHOUT BENEFIT OF CLERGY. Good picture, but failed to draw crowd. Ran two days and second day was worse than first. Advertising; newspaper and program. Patronage; small town. Attendance; poor. L. T. Carskadan, Music Hall, Keyser, West Virginia.

Realart

DAWN OF THE EAST. A very good Oriental picture that gets away from the objectionable stuff. Settings and characters are exceptional but Brady seems to be losing out. Pleased about 90 per cent. Advertising; usual. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. Jno. W. Joerger, O. K. Theatre, Enterprise, Oregon.

DON'T CALL ME LITTLE GIRL. A very good, clean comedy feature. Full of life and jingle. Mary Miles Minter in one of her best roles. Advertising; fliers and one sheets. Patronage; first class. Attendance; good. W. P. Dow, Opera House, Bridgton, Maine.

R-C

813. Good mystery picture, pleased well. Advertising; usual. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

Selznick

DIVORCE OF CONVENIENCE. Very poor picture. Everyone disappointed. Ran on Sunday and I am afraid to run Owen Moore again. Advertising; local newspaper, heavy ads. run. Patronage; general. Attendance; fair. Harold Clouse, Hollywood Theatre, Highwood, Minnesota.

THE FIGHTER. Good story and acting, but not very good photography. Holds interest very well and pleases 75 per cent. Advertising; regular newspaper. Patronage; high class. Attendance; fair. Geo. O. Monroe, Gilbert Theatre, Beatrice, Nebraska.

THE MAN WHO LOST HIMSELF. A good picture, but old. It pleased 95 per cent. of a fair sized audience. Advertising; regular. Patronage; high class. Attendance; fair. Geo. O. Monroe, Gilbert Theatre, Beatrice, Nebraska.

United Artists

LITTLE LORD FAUNTLEROY. Pleased women and children, absolutely clean, the best picture she has made for United Artists, sold too high for me, if you can buy it right, play it. Advertising; newspaper, heralds, banner, all styles litho. Patronage; very best. Attendance; fair. F. M. Holeman, Garrick Theatre, Madisonville, Kentucky.

WAY DOWN EAST. Haven't adjectives enough to say how wonderful picture is. Tremendous business at increased admissions. Biggest picture to date; everyone pleased. Advertising; mailing, window display, newspaper, street ballyhoo. Patronage; industrial small town. Attendance; capacity at 5 showings. P. W. Kunze, Orpheum Theatre, Stoughton, Massachusetts.

Universal

ACTION. A good Western picture. Hoot Gibson is a promising star. See it and book it. Advertising; sixes, threes, two ones, photo, slide. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. M. Leszczynski, Pastime Theatre, Depew, N. Y.

THE MILLIONAIRE. Just an ordinary program picture. Too slow, no action, only in the fifth reel. Star doesn't pull in my house. Business off. Patronage; middle class. Attendance; poor. Wm. Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

RED COURAGE. Good Western. Pleased all who saw it. Bad weather probably caused small crowd. Advertising; usual. Patronage; small town. Attendance; poor. Anna Frankle, Strand Theatre, Leon, Iowa.

Straight from the Shoulder Reports

WANDERING TRAILS. A very good picture, but is not as good as some Carey has been in. Advertising; paper and lobby. Attendance; good. A. R. Workman, Coliseum Theatre, Marseilles, Illinois.

RED COURAGE. I consider this Hoot Gibson a money getter for any exhibitor. You can't go wrong on playing this one up to the limit. Advertising; lobby. Patronage; smalltown. Attendance; very good J. F. Pruett, Liberty Theatre, Roanoke, Ala.

THE SHARK-MASTER. A very good picture with wonderful settings. Advertising; sixes, threes, ones, photos and slides. Patronage; smalltown. Attendance; fair. M. Leszczynski, Pastime Theatre, Depew, New York.

UNDER NORTHERN LIGHTS. This was a dandy until the very last. Material enough for one more reel. Ending awful, blunt, story unfinished. Advertising; ones and lobby. Patronage; smalltown. Attendance; fair. J. R. Rush, Pastime Theatre, Pearl City, Illinois.

Vitagraph

MATRIMONIAL WEB. A dandy program picture with a pleasing little star. If all Vitagraph branches are handled like the St. Louis branch office, no exhibitor in small towns can afford to pass them up. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. H. C. Daley, Landale Theatre, Carlinville, Illinois.

HEART OF MARYLAND. A splendid production, based on the Civil War, that failed to draw any more than ordinary business. Advertising; usual. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. J. C. Rowton, Victory Theatre, Shawnee, Okla.

STEELHEART. One of the best Westerns I ever screened. Everybody liked it. Went over 100%. Vitagraph, come on with more like it. Advertising; lobby, one sheets and newspapers, got out with a team and sleigh bells, sure way to advertise. Patronage; high class. Attendance; fine. Thomas Clark, Electric Theatre, Maryville, Mo.

TRUMPET ISLAND. This one has the punch, moves fast and makes you wish it was longer. Ran it at special prices and made good. Advertising; local papers, posters. Patronage; local. Attendance; good. I. O. O. F. Theatre, Grand Gorge, New York.

Wid Gunning, Inc.

THE OLD OAKEN BUCKET. An exceptionally pleasing feature. A fine portrayal of the old story. Perfect in every detail. Advertising; usual news ads, lobby display. J. A. McNear, Jr., Mystic Theatre, Petaluma, Cal.

QUO VADIS. You would think when they cut a production from eleven to six reels that something would have to be left out, but in this case nothing of importance has been eliminated. Make a particular drive on the preachers and church people. Had people come to see this that had never been in the house before. My only complaint is that I didn't advertise it more extensively and raise the price of admission. Patronage; the best small town. Attendance; biggest Monday's business to date. Trags Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

Comedies

THE BELL HOP (Vitagraph). A real scream from start to finish. Semon is putting some real pep into his comedies. Aerial stuff is very clever. Advertising; large picture of Semon in front of theatre. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. Jno. W. Joerger, O. K. Theatre, Enterprise, Oregon.

CENTURY COMEDIES (Universal). "Around the Corner," very good. "A Muddy Bride," very good. "A Merry Dentist," poor. "Mama's Cowpuncher," very good. "Tin Cans," very good. "A Week Off," good. Patronage; family. Attendance; good. R. J. Reef, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

State Rights

THE HICK (Triangle). Fair program feature only. Print not in A1 shape. Oil on film, not cleaned lately. Advertising; regular. Patronage; smalltown. Attendance; fair. W. F. Pease, Centennial Theatre, Lowell, Wisconsin.

LOVE OR JUSTICE (Triangle). Fair program feature only. Print over-developed, causing dark pictures. Advertising; regular. Patronage; smalltown. Attendance; fair. W. F. Pease, Centennial Theatre, Lowell, Wisconsin.

MADONNAS & MEN (Jans). Not a picture to exploit big. About a 60% attraction. Advertising; newspaper and lobby. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. Forest E. Mills, Richmond Theatre, Richmond, Ind.

PENNY OF TOP HILL TRAIL (Federated). Bessie Love's first picture was poor, the second one fair and this one extra good. The best picture she ever made. Many compliments. Advertising; average. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; poor. Charles Kuchan, Idylhour Theatre, Canton, Illinois.

BURN 'EM UP BARNES (Educational) Good comedy, pleased all. Titles exceptionally good. Will please any audience. Good picture to exploit. Advertising; lobby display, heralds, newspaper. Patronage; general. Attendance; good. Smith & Correll, Portland Theatre, Casselton, N. D.

Serials

HURRICANE HUTCH (Pathe). First and second episodes good, looks like a winner. Running with Santschi Westerns, Pathe Review and Pollard comedy. All good. Advertising; stunts, banner, ballyhoo. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, DeQueen, Arkansas.

MIRACLES OF THE JUNGLE (Federated). Just finished. Went big all the way through. You can't go wrong on this serial. Wm. Thacher, Saline, Kansas.

WINNERS OF THE WEST (Universal). If you want to push the sides of your theatre out just give a free show. Ran "The Beautiful Gambler" with first episode and had a mob. Was worth the price to see 'em come. They came back strong for second episode. I don't know how patrons are going to like it, but personally I think there is too much cutting and shooting. E. E. Carr, Princess Theatre, Thompson, Iowa.

Foreign Reports

DR. JEKYLL AND MR. HYDE (Famous Players). Though Stevenson's novel wholly unknown here in Switzerland, picture drew big crowds to my theatre at a time when business as a rule is rather calm. Advertised it as not being recommendable to persons whose nerves are not absolutely fit to stand the test. Everybody in the town considered his nerves strong enough, at least it seemed so, and I worked to capacity. Advertising; two three sheets, two six sheets, photos, big newspaper advertising. Patronage; better class. Attendance; the dream of every exhibitor. John Sutz, Bellevue Theatre, Zurich, Switzerland.

THE KID (First National). Patrons and press unanimously declared this to be the finest picture ever presented on a Swiss screen. Converted all sceptics into enthusiasts who said, "Show us some more pictures of like kind and we are of one mind with you that the 'movie' is an art." Advertising; one twenty-four sheet, two six sheets, forty photos, town overflooded with printings. Patronage; all classes. Attendance; broke all box office records in the history of any show since Barnum. John Sutz, Bellevue Theatre, Zurich, Switzerland.

"Foolish Wives"

Von Stroheim's "Million-Dollar Production" Finally Reaches the Screen

Reviewed by Fritz Tidden.

Over a year ago everyone in the industry began to hear about a production Erich von Stroheim had comenced to make for Universal, to be called "Foolish Wives." As time went on, interest in the production, by careful promotion and natural curiosity, grew to tidal wave proportions until it swept the country. Within a few months there was more premature interest steamed up over "Foolish Wives" than for any picture in the history of the industry. And this interest was kept at fever heat right up to the time of the premiere at the Central Theatre, New York, January 11. Everyone, not only in New York, but all over the map of this film enthusiastic country was talking about it.

All of which redounds in the most valuable sort of publicity, of course, and creates box office possibilities of unusual proportions.

In telling the world, over and over again, that "Foolish Wives" was a million dollar production and carefully planting its wonders of story and magnificence, Universal raised picture-goers' expectations to a degree that could not be fulfilled, possibly. Upon witnessing the production the immediate question rises in the onlookers mind: where did the million dollars go? The answer involuntarily springs into the same mind: probably the million dollars went into the stuff that was cut out, which does not do the ultimate consumer much good.

Universal evidently assumes all responsibility for having "Foolish Wives" reviewed in its present form, although the producers are shrewd enough showmen to realize it would be fatal to give it to the public in the state it was in at its initial presentation. Not even the unfulfilled promise of million dollar stuff would hold them in a theatre for the time that is consumed in running the multiplicity of reels at present. And shortened down to a practical length there is the strong possibility it would become a far better picture, in the matter of retaining the spectator's interest and supplying a story that had undiluted action. By all rights the picture should not be reviewed until the necessary surgery is accomplished and in a form exhibitors will receive. But Universal, as has been said before, evidently assumed all responsibilities.

"Foolish Wives" has moments of greatness. Most of these are due to remarkably artistic photography and aiming of "shots." Also there are several incidents that contain drama, due to immediate happenings in the scenes and not to that valuable asset in telling any story—conflict. But the moments of greatness and the dramatic incidents are so widely separated with what seem like endless scenes of absolutely no narrative value that practically all force is dissipated. Should they be brought closer together, which could be accomplished with ease by lopping off whole reels at a time, especially amid the first five or six probably "Foolish Wives" would seem to have more power as an unusually expensive moving picture entertainment. But at that, the camera remains the most important factor in the proceedings. Many of the scenes are thrillingly beautiful and the director has evolved numerous new and pleasing methods of treating individual scenes.

The story never does seem to get started until around midnight, in a manner of speaking. Previous to the time that things begin to spruce up a bit there are mostly scenes that depict the central character as the most licensed libertine enjoying liberty from the confinement he deserves. In the role of this thoroughgoing scoundrel, the author, director and star, von Stroheim, gives an unusually fine performance, if you like to witness this sort of thing. When the tale has some life injected into it by the first signs of concentrated action von Stroheim exceeds himself in the staging of the scenes, especially those of the fire in the chateau in Monte Carlo. His arrangement of the street scenes of the capital of the gambling world are expert, and the set shows where a part of the million dollars went to.

During the slow progress of the tale there are numerous evidences of bad taste, however, that irritate the onlooker to such an extent that he will not take the following proceedings seriously. The most blatant of these is in making, in the early stages of the story, the American ambassador such a perfect ass that he never would have been accepted into the diplomatic service. Whatever von Stroheim thinks of the diplomatic service of the country, most persons will agree its agents are not monkeys. Neither are their wives of the type portrayed in this picture. This and other things has the effect of making fools of the only decent people in the story. Another piece of bad taste is the business of the impolite, armless marine, whose justification is held up far too long. At the initial showing there was audible objection to some of these scenes.

And then at the climax there is the most absurd incident that has ever been portrayed on local screens, having to do with the birth of a baby born to a woman who successfully kept the secret of the coming child up to the time of its advent from her husband, with whom she was living in close enough harmony for him to realize the approach of the important event. The baby comes as a most startling shock to the spectators as they had supposed that the woman's illness was due to a jump from a burning building. To find fault with this may seem like pettifogging, but it is made an important feature of the story.

The cast is excellent with the possible exception of Miss du Pont. Maude George and Mae Busch leave nothing to be desired in the roles of the eminently capable confidence workers, and Rudolph Christians makes the American Ambassador the fool the story calls for. Dale Fuller is convincing as the maid-victim of the scoundrel's perfidy.

The Cast

Andrew J. Hughes.....Rudolph Christians
Helen, his wife.....Miss du Pont
Princess Olga Petschnikoff....Maude George
Princess Vera Petschnikoff.....Mae Bush
Count Sergius Karamzin..Erich von Stroheim
Maruschka .....Dale Fuller
Pavel Pavlich.....Al. Edmundsen
Caesare Ventucci.....Caesare Gravina
Marietta .....Malvine Polo
Dr. Judd.....Louis K. Webb
His Wife .....Mrs. Kent
Albert I., Prince of Monaco.....C. J. Allen

Story, scenario and direction by Erich von Stroheim.
Length, 14,120 feet.

The Story

"Count" Sergius Karamzin, an adventurer, and his two "cousins," Princesses Olga and Vera Petchnikoff, lease a villa at Monte Carlo and cultivate the friendship of the American Envoy, Andrew J. Hughes, and his wife. The Count flirts with Mrs. Hughes, who is flattered by the attention of the polished European.

One day while strolling in the country the Count and Mrs. Hughes have to take refuge from storm in an old hut. They are obliged to remain during the night. The arrival of an old monk keeps the Count from displaying his true colors to Mrs. Hughes. She manages to conceal the escapade from her husband. The Count and his "cousins" escort Mr. and Mrs. Hughes to the Casino, where the diplomat's wife wins 100,000 francs. The party then goes to the Count's villa for a few hours of poker. Mrs. Hughes begs off because of a headache, but she later goes to the villa in answer to a secret note from the Count, which indicates his life and honor are at stake and that she alone can save him.

The Count meets her and escorts her to the tower of the villa, where he first wheedles her out of 90,000 francs and then begins to make love to her. In the meantime,, the envoy has caught one of the Princesses cheating at poker and the other operating a crooked roulette wheel. He returns to his hotel, and learning about the note from the Count, starts back to the villa.

The maid in the Sergius villa, also a victim of the Count's amours, and who expects him to marry her, becomes desperate at what she overhears in the tower room. She locks the two in the tower, sets fire to the place and takes her own life in the sea.

The Count and Mrs. Hughes are saved from the tower only by jumping into a life net. The Count displays his yellow streak by jumping first. Hughes arrives as firemen are carrying his wife through the crowd. He takes her home, finds the Count's note in her bosom, and returning to the burning villa, attacks the Count. A duel is arranged for the following morning.

Infuriated by his folly, which has centered suspicion upon them, the "princesses" drive the Count from the villa. He goes to the home of Ventucci, a counterfeiter for whom he has been passing bogus money. His bestiality comes to the front again when he finds the counterfeiter's half-witted daughter alone. She is his last victim, for Ventucci kills him and drops his body into a sewer. About the same hour Hughes and his seconds wait in vain at the duelling place. When finally he returns home, he finds that his wife has become a mother. He realizes that her attitude towards him has been due to her condition. They are reconciled. She comes to a full realization that American men are the ideal husbands for American women.

"The Sin Flood"

Powerful Theme Grips the Spectator's Interest with a Vise-like Hold

Reviewed by Fritz Tidden.

Concerning the theme of a picture, rarely does a hardened reviewer find himself moved to an enthusiasm that demands superlatives for its expression. But if one's admiration and entire satisfaction are sincere, why not yield to them without affected restraint, especially if they can be justified by the application of calm, deliberate consideration?

Goldwyn has done so fine a thing in presenting this theme, which is powerful to an extreme, although it makes the usual, accepted idea of romance subservient to the main issue, that it is impossible to be moderate in its appraisal. The picture is an elaboration of the theme contained in Hennig Berger's dramatic masterpiece, "Syndafloden," which was presented in this country by Arthur Hopkins under the title of "The Deluge." And for giving it to the screen Goldwyn is to be as heartily commended as possible, for the producers have given the screen something really big.

Yes, BIG!

That is the simplest and most adequate measure to describe one of the most powerful conflicts of human motives and emotions that has been used as the basis of a moving picture. It is so gripping that it is more than probable the spectators will neglect to notice that they are not receiving their usual allotment of what is commonly known as romance, although there is a minor love interest carried through until the end, where it is brought forward more prominently to prove the thesis that, in the change and rechange of the characteristics of the group of human beings brought into conflict in the picture, love is the only thing that remains stable.

"The Sin Flood," being a study in character more than it is a character study, it naturally followed that unusual care must be taken in the selection of players. The director, Frank Lloyd, has gathered a group of actors that seems to be perfectly suited to the individual roles, with the possible exception of Richard Dix, who has a tendency to overact when everyone else is delightfully restrained. The contrast is seriously jarring. Helene Chadwick, playing the only important female role, is superb.

The subject matter of "The Sin Flood" involves an understanding presentation of elemental things in the make-up of humanity. Also it calls for direct simplicity. Mr. Lloyd, in producing the picture, has more than met the qualifications. He has performed his work with the clearest artistic insight. Many persons are of the belief that a "big" picture means overwhelming sets and thousands of people. But Mr. Lloyd has taken this big theme and made a big picture with but eight important characters and practically in one simple set.

It is such pictures as "The Sin Flood" that should receive the enthusiastic support of everyone sincerely interested in the advancement of a better grade of motion pictures.

Sharpe ..... Howard Davies
Stratton ..... Will Walling
Nordling ..... William Orlamond
Charlie ..... Darwin Karr
Higgins ..... Otto Hoffman
Drunk.....L. H. King

Adapted from Hennig Berger's play, "Syndafloden," and the American translation, "The Deluge."
Scenario by J. G. Hawkes.
Directed by Frank Lloyd.
Length, 6,500 Feet.

The Story

Stratton's cafe is popular with the cotton brokers of Cottonia, a wealthy town on the banks of the Mississippi. In order to protect the cafe in the event of a flood, as the town is below the river level, Stratton, the proprietor, has had flood proof doors installed.

The flood, of which all Cottonia lived in fear, comes, and it appears that the entire town is to be submerged. Trapped in Stratton's cafe are Billy Bear, a young broker; Poppy, a chorus girl with whom he had been in love; a street preacher, a tramp, a stranded Swedish engineer, an out-at-elbows actor, a corporation lawyer, a grasping stock broker, a bartender and the proprietor of the cafe. Protected from the waters sweeping through the streets, it seems that their lives are to be saved, until the engineer figures that the air soon will be exhausted and they will suffocate.

Faced by death, all of the characters undergo a reformation. Bitterness passes and they unite in brotherly love. Each confesses his sins and prepares for the end. They decide to open the doors and let the waters pour in, rather than die the slow death of suffocation. The door is swung back and the street is bathed in sunlight. The flood has passed.

With the return of safety, the spirit of brotherly love passes and human selfishness again becomes dominant. The two exceptions are Billy and Poppy, who hurry off to get a marriage license.

Exploitation Angles: Don't waste an opportunity by piking on this. Go the limit without using such big adjectives that no play can make good for your promises. Play on the wonderful hits the book and play have made. Tell that here is the picture done into film with a remarkable cast and produced with unusual care. Tell that it is a picture every thinking person should see. If the picture plays near your town from two to six weeks in advance of your showing, send the leading ministers to see it, making it a personally conducted party and paying all expenses. You'll get it back in the comment you can evoke.

"Too Much Wife"

Realart Offers Wanda Hawley in an Irresistible Comedy-Drama on Young Married Life

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

One of the merriest satires on a just-after-the-honeymoon theme that has recently come the way of the exhibitor is "Too Much Wife." It was conceived by a man with an unjaded imagination, directed by an artist that knew how to handle good material, and acted by a group of players, each one of which seems to be gifted with an engaging sense of humor. It is smart, original and so true to nature that it's easy to imagine every young husband accepting it without reservations.

The wife who thinks her husband "needs" her every minute, whether he's in the office or out with his pals, the mother-in-law who assists her, her husband who has suffered and would save his son-in-law from a similar fate, the stenographer who is out for a husband, and the average young husband, trying desperately to stay in love with his wife are characters that will be sure to entertain. Only that which contributes to the real point of the story—in other words only that which adds to the comedy value—has been included, and the result is rich amusement. The entire cast is excellent.

Directed by Thomas N. Heffron.
Length, 4,900 Feet.

The Story

Myra Coningsby, having seen her mother hen-peck her father, decided when she married Jack Morgan not to repeat her mother's tactics. She determined to let Jack do anything he chose—but resolved to do it with him. Jack was soon distracted by having his golf, poker, fishing and other interests spoiled by Myra's constant presence. She even invaded his office and insisted on being his private secretary. Finally Jack resorts to subterfuge to get in a week's fishing trip with his old chums, and a series of dramatic incidents brings Myra to her senses and the comedy to a happy conclusion.

"The Sea Lion"

Hobart Bosworth Cast as Brutal Sea Captain. Picture Styled After Jack London's Stories. Released by First National

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

Admirers of the Jack London style of characters, who find satisfaction in scenes that revel in unkind realism, stripped of all softening influence, will be enthusiastic over "The Sea Lion." It has been well directed and well acted, and is a consistent example of this type of production, a type that men rather than women will like. Even the thoughtful, more studious of the feminine fans, who is willing to forego a certain amount of sentiment does not enjoy spending three-quarters of an hour watching the supremacy of wickedness on the screen. The dawn of reformation, when it does come, is an effective moment in the production, and because it comes from fate, not through any Polyanna influence, is thoroughly consistent with the rest of the story.

Hobart Bosworth gives a vivid performance of such virility that it dominates the entire action, leaving its unforgettable impression even when he is not on the scene. There is no fault with his characterization. It is undoubtedly authentic, but it would have been better showmanship to have interrupted his appearances a little more frequently with more ingratiating sights. The ship scenes give a glimpse into the lives of the sea-farers that is not often afforded. The fights on board and the storm offer real thrills and the scene of the undertow against the rocks is the most striking effect of the piece.

Length, 4,367 Feet.

The Story

Nels Nelson, captain of "The Lair," is hated by his crew and everyone who knows him because of his cruelty. One day he takes two strangers on board, a young girl and an old man who have been stranded on an isle. The girl reminds him of his faithless wife and he determines to make her life miserable. He is warned by a stroke of lightning to change his way and the truth that the girl is his daughter is finally revealed to him.

"The Lane That Has No Turning"

Paramount Introduces Agnes Ayres As Star in Picturization of Parker Novel.

Reviewed by Fritz Tidden.

Although Agnes Ayres has not heretofore been starred, she has been a prominent figure on Paramount's schedule of releases and has won for herself justifiable popularity and a concurrent host of admirers. To lift her out of the class of featured player to the rank of star in her own right came as a matter of course, and a patronizing attitude is not meant when it is stated that she wholly deserved the promotion. The high quality of intellectuality she displays, beside her marked beauty, and the distinct good breeding she radiates will make her a prime favorite among discriminating moving picture theatregoers. Miss Ayres is an aristocrat. Estimating her value as a box office attraction in the better class of theatres is no guess work, providing she is furnished with material that suits her individual talent and appearance.

Miss Ayres starts upon her career as a full fledged Paramount star in a picturization of Sir Gilbert Parker's novel of the same name. Her first appearance as such is in a worthy introductory vehicle, having an appealing story, is well directed by Victor Fleming, who, with the scenarist, has capitalized upon the many opportunities the story offers, and is interpreted by a strong supporting cast, in which Theodore Kosloff gives an unusually fine performance. "The Lane That Had No Turning" will serve as a fairly good example of what is meant by a suitable vehicle for the new star, as it allows her to display herself to full advantage throughout.

Incidentally, the scene is set in a French-Canadian locale and it is refreshing to note that not one Mounted Northwestern Policeman makes his appearance. A little thing, to be sure, but a creditable novelty.

The Cast

Madelinette ..... Agnes Ayres
Louis Racine.....Theodore Kosloff
George Fournel.....Mahlon Hamilton
Joe Lajeunesse.....Wilton Taylor
Tardiff ..... Frank Campeau
Marie ..... Lillian Leighton
Havel ..... Charles West
M. Poire.....Robert Bolder
Gov. General.....Fred Vroom

Adapted from Sir Gilbert Parker's Novel.
Scenario by Eugene Mullin.
Directed by Victor Fleming.
Length, 4,892 Feet.

The Story

"The Lane That Had No Turning" is laid, like many other famous stories of Sir Gilbert Parker, among the French-Canadians. At the wedding of the young people the announcement is made of the death of a relative, thus bringing opportunity to the bride and the designation of Seigneur to the groom. An enemy of the latter questions the validity of the bequest because no will was found and in the quarrel the groom is flung against a tree with such force that his back is injured. While the young wife goes to Europe, the groom grows daily more unhappy at the growth of deformity on his back. He is torn between fear that his wife's love will vane and the hunger for ever more power under his title. The arrival of the rightful heir, his insistence that a search be made for the will, the finding of the will by the young woman after she had given up her career, and the final tragic solution of the problem, make drama, and then comes a so-called happy ending.

Have You Ever Travelled a Lane That Had No Turning?—Then You Will Appreciate Agnes Ayres' First Starring Vehicle.

Exploitation Angles: Devote your efforts to putting over Miss Ayres as a star. She is so well established in favor that she will require little effort, so make a big effort and put her over in a large way. Bookish people will be interested in the author, so get the value of his name, as well.

"Winning With Wits"

Good Story by H. H. Van Loan Produced by Fox, with Barbara Bedford as the Attractive Star

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

Another tribute to feminine resourcefulness, "Winning with Wits," offers an entertainment solution of the difficulties in tracing guilt when there is scarcely any clue. While not an out-and-out detective story, it virtually amounts to that, only that it has more novelty perhaps, in that the sleuth is an amateur and has methods that are experimental and charming, and above all successful. With no proof at all, but only a faint suspicion to start out with, she pursues some highly subtle tactics and administers the third degree with the aid of a little flattery and a seeress' veil so cleverly that she gets all the necessary information.

The picture has been directed with a careful regard for the details of fine acting and the characterizations as a result, are good. Barbara Bedford has responded gracefully, and, as a comparatively new star, gives definite promise of achieving wide popularity. Experience will give her a better understanding of how to dress most effectively for screen reproduction. She is supported by a cast, not unusually gifted, but acting in ready co-operation with their director.

The Cast

Stage Manager.....Wilson Hummel

Story by H. H. Van Loan.
Scenario by Dorothy Yost and Jack Strumwasser.
Direction by Howard M. Mitchell.
Length, 4,435 Feet.

The Story

Simultaneously with Mary Sudan's first chance to play the leading part in the show, comes the word from her father that he has been sent to prison on a false charge of theft. She consults the stage director and the two scheme a way for her to find out who is responsible for the injustice done her father. She goes to the company where he had been employed, picks out the suspicious man and cleverly gives him the third degree. She frees her father and wins a charming husband for herself.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines:

An Interesting Illustration of the Well-Known Saying That an Attractive Woman Can Get a Man to Tell Her Anything She Wishes—Whether She Wants to Hear That He Loves Her or a Confession of His Past—Barbara Gets Both!

Exploitation Angles: There is opportunity here for a good contest on the subject of woman's intuition against man's cold reasoning or the title can be tied up to any ingenious contest idea of the puzzle variety. This would seem to offer the better opportunity. Alibi the new star and sell through the interest you create, but trust mostly to the title.

"Lucky Carson"

Earle Williams, Star of Vitagraph Feature, Which Is of Only Ordinary Program Quality

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

During his long career on the screen, Earle Williams has appeared in a number of pictures that are far superior to this one, which is adapted from "Salvage" a popular novel by Aquila Kempster. The story as filmed fails to convince and depends too much on coincidence, everything happening at an opportune time and just as the theme demands. At the same time, it will probably prove satisfactory to Earle Williams fans as it gives this star a wide range, from a down-and-outer on the London docks, to a millionaire cotton manipulator in Wall Street. There are a number of interesting moments and some well-handled scenes, but as a whole it is more of a novel or narrative type then a drama, and does not rise above the class of an ordinary program offering.

The star satisfactorily fills the requirements of the role and Betty Ross Clark is very attractive as his leading woman. Earl Schenck gives a good performance of Kluck, the man whom the star has wronged and for which he later seeks to atone; while Gertrude Astor portrays an unusual type of adventuress. The remainder of the cast is satisfactory.

The Cast

David (Lucky) Carson.....Earle Williams
Rudolph Kluck.....Earl Schenck
Doris Bancroft.....Betty Ross Clarke
Mme. Marinoff.....Gertrude Astor
Edith Bancroft.....Colette Forbes
Tommy Delmaer.....James Butler
"Runt" Sloan... ... ...Loyal Underwood

Adapted from Novel "Salvage" by Aquila Kempster
Scenario by Bradley J. Smollen
Directed by Wilfred North
Length, five reels.

The Story

John Peters, who lost his money at the races in London, is about to commit suicide. He overhears a conversation, knocks down one of the men, Kluck, changes clothes with him and comes to America. Meeting a stable boy, he starts anew, makes a fortune at the race track, and increases it in the cotton market. Kluck comes to America and meets Peters, now known as Lucky Carson, but does not recognize him, and asks his help which is freely given. Kluck has indiscreetly corresponded with an adventuress and Carson succeeds in getting the letters back. Kluck, misunderstanding the nature of Carson's visits to the woman, starts to upbraid him. Carson makes known his real identity and Kluck strikes him on the head. Kluck's sister-in-law, Doris who has also misjudged him, learns the truth and the usual happy ending results.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines:

See Earle Williams both as a Down-and-Outer and as a Millionaire in This Romantic Story of the London Docks and Wall Street.

Romantic Story of Adventure, Based on the successful novel, Salvage with Earle Williams in a Congenial Role.

Exploitation Angles: Sell this on the star and his opportunity instead of on the story and you will satisfy your average patron who likes Williams. The press book suggests some excellent stunts. Use those, particularly the name stunt.

"Try and Get It"

The spirit of the title which is a challenge to bill-collectors is actively carried out by Harry Depp in this Fox comedy. Plenty of motion and splash it has, with plaster paris in almost every scene and enough pursuing and bullying to keep Depp on the jump. Most of the situations have been used before, and so the comedy is a little outworn. The construction scenes on the top of the building offer a few dizzy thrills, but are not new.—M. K.

"Determination"

Big Lee-Bradford Production Has Enough Thrills For Two Pictures.

Reviewed by Clarence L. Linz.

"Determination" contains enough thrills to supply several photoplays, but in its present eleven-reel length it is too long. However, the feature is being cut down to eight reels, its presentation in Washington, D. C., being merely a preview showing for the purpose of ascertaining for Lee-Bradford the exact extent of its public appeal. This writer is confident that when the proposed eliminations are made to shorten the picture that it will not only be a stronger attraction, but incidently will find a welcome public awaiting its general exhibition in this country.

This is the picture that Washingtonians financed under Capt. Stoll, who also wrote the story, but who deserted the task before it was completed. However, further capital was enlisted and the production, which was more than a year in the making, was finally completed. The task of cutting it was apparently a gigantic one, but this work was so skilfully handled that the production bids fair to be one of the most talked-of State rights pictures in the market.

"Determination" played in Washington for two weeks to splendid business. This business was done during the two worse show weeks of the year. Christmas and New Years. The story is essentially a character study, intended to depict the activities of a man who has devoted his life and fortune to the uplift of humanity. In this connection are shown hopeless drug addicts, Fagans, "fences," "stools," pickpockets, confidence men and women who make up the residents of Whitchapel, the vice-ridden section of London. Glimpses also are given of Parisian underworld life. Scenically the picture is a gem, for some of the sets are the most pretentious flashed on the local screen.

Alpheus Lincoln plays the dual role of the Morton Brothers effectively. Walter Ringham, as Lord Warburton, makes his part the disagreeable one it was intended to be, while Gene Burnell is lovably charming as Frances Lloyd. Irene Tams is interesting and human as "Lucky." Maurice Costello, the idol of other days, also appears in this feature as Putnam, a Scotland yard detective.

The Cast

Frances Lloyd.....Gene Burnell
John Morton, Jr. } James Melvale } .....Alpheus Lincoln
Luckey ..... Irene Tams
Lord Warburton.....Walter Ringham
Whitechapel Mary.....Nina Herbert
Dopefiend ..... Charles Ascott
Lord Dalton.....Barney Russell
Lady Dalton.....Mahel Allen
Madge Daley.....Corinne Uzzell
Sport Smiler.....Hayden Stevenson
Putnam ..... Maurice Costello

The Story

John Morton, a banker of the Whitechapel district, leaves a will designating that his twin sons are to be kept in ignorance as to their identity until they reach their thirtieth birthday. John, Jr., becomes a missionary, while the other, James, becomes a "man about town." Francis Lloyd, heiress, daughter of an American senator, becomes interested in charity work. While visiting the slums she is tricked into a robbers' den, from where she is rescued by Morton after a battle. Morton falls in love with her, but there is a rival, Lord Warburton, master mind crook. Morton is accepted, but she is led to believe that he is leading a double life. Complications here set in and involve the two brothers and a girl crook. However, the latter is won over and a double wedding results, following a series of thrilling adventures in the underworlds of London and Paris.

Exploitation Angles: Play on the melodramatic features and the history of the story, telling that it required a year to make. Mostly, however, sell the many pig punches in a senational wording.

"Hush Money"

Realart Presents Alice Brady in a Film-Drama in Which a Rich Girl Sides With Justice and Right Against the Arbitrary Power of Money.

Reviewed by T. S. daPonte

Those who have read Samuel Merwin's dramatic short stories in various periodicals would have no doubt of his ability to turn out a commendable screen work and their expectations are amply justified by Mr. Merwin's first film story, "Hush Money," for Realart, in which Alice Brady stars. The picture has a continuity which is unflagging from beginning to end, and holds the unceasing interest of the spectator. The dramatic incidents are not too theatric to be real, and still they have just the right quality to cause a thrill.

In praising Mr. Merwin's story the acting of Miss Brady must not be lost sight of for it is largely through her skill that the entire drama runs so smoothly. A less finished actress would have had many opportunities to mar instead of make pleasing the part of the heroine. George Fawcett, as Alexander Murray, is excellently cast, and gives a life-like interpretation of a captain of finance who believes that his money can overcome all obstacles. Jerry Devine, as Terry McGuire, makes a small part stand out like a cameo.

No fault could be found with either the scenario or direction, both by Charles Maigne. In fact, his work is among the principal details of the production that give it its appeal. All the members of the cast hold up their ends excellently.

The Cast

Evelyn Murray.....Alice Brady
Alexander Murray.....George Fawcett
Bert Van Vliet.....Larry Wheat
Bishop Deems.....Harry Benham
Terry McGuire.....Jerry Devine

Story by Samuel Merwin
Scenario and Direction by Charles Maigne
Photography by Gilbert Warrenton
Length 4,819 feet

The Story

Alexander Murray believes that with his money he can override the law. When the automobile of his daughter, Evelyn Murray, injures a newsboy, he attempts to have the incident hushed up. The girl, however, believing in justice, makes known her identity, at the hospital to which the injured lad has been taken, despite the wishes of her father and her fiancee, and leaves home because of their opposition. Her disappearance so worries her father and her fiancee that finally they both, through an intermediary, agree to adopt a less overbearing attitude which their millions enable them to take toward society in general. A reconciliation is then brought about.

Exploitation Angles: After selling Miss Brady, use the theme of the play to get additional sales from those who do not follow the stars. Tell that this is the story of a society woman who does not believe that her father's millions render her invulnerable to the law. That will interest a lot of irregular patrons.

"Five Days to Live"

Sessue Hayakawa Cast Similarly as the Tragic Figure in a Romantic Setting by Robertson-Cole

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

Sessue Hayakawa's preference for the role of the self-sacrificing hero is asserted in much his usual style in "Five Days to Live." To some who have tired of his somewhat obvious art in impersonating the man who stands alone, the man who is capable of supreme acts of altruism, his latest picture offers little that is new or enterprising. But in the eyes of those who, because of his association with this type of performance, have a certain delight in seeing him repeat, the production will be sure to please, as it is both picturesque and dramatic.

The settings are Chinese, the entire cast is Oriental and the atmosphere has a realism and a certain exotic pungency that is peculiar to Hayakawa subjects. Highly impressionistic, for instance, are the Chinese street scenes, and the attention that has been given to defining the subordinate characters is commendable. Soft focus photography has been used to good advantage here. The tragic suspense at the end is sufficiently a la Romeo and Juliet to bring intense sympathy and here the star and Tsuru Aoki prove very successful romanticists. Goro Kino is excellent in the brutish character of the girl's foster father.

The Story

Tai Leung, a sculptor in a Chinese city, falls in love with a little slavey, Ko Ai, who passes his door daily. He learns that she is overworked and mistreated by her foster father who owns a restaurant. The Mandarin sees her, desires her and wins the father's consent by promising a vast sum of money. Tai Leung learns that the Wolf, a pirate, who has been sentenced to hang, will pay a substitute handsomely and he decides to hang in his place so he buys off the father with the treasure. "Received Payment"

Charms of Corinne Griffith Cleverly Exploited in Vitagraph Production.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

Corinne Griffith makes of "Received Payment" a desirable attraction with one very marketable asset—her personal grace. It is primarily her personality and beauty that atone, to a considerable extent, for certain weaknesses and banalities of drama that would otherwise, be unforgivably striking. Perhaps the most unfortunate feature is the waste of film which is shown in the undue length of meaningless scenes and the curtailment of big, dramatic situations that really should count. These latter fail to hold the interest as they could, partly because of imperfect direction and partly because of inferior acting on the part of the supporting cast.

The value of good showmanship has been understood in giving Miss Griffith the role of the dancer and the costuming and staging of the chorus number should have an unquestionable appeal. Kenneth Harlan is an important contributor to the picture's success. One of the best opportunities for acting is afforded by the role of the father who denies his relationship to his daughter for her sake and that of his employer, a test of emotional skill to which Charles Hammond is not fully equal. Attractive femininity does much toward making this feature salable, and the star's right hand aid in this respect is Regina Quinn, who makes an inauspicious role a point of marked appeal.

The Story

The star is seen as a chorus girl whose father is employed as a butler in the home of one of New York's old aristocratic families. The girl is given a contract to star in one of New York's exclusive productions when she learns she is the granddaughter of her father's employer. Then follows some very dramatic scenes in which the girl is buffeted about first as the daughter of her father and then the granddaughter of his employer. It is not until the climax that the audience is able to decide just which man has the claim to her.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines:

They Made Her Believe She Was the Daughter of a Millionaire—Then a Blackmailer Told Her She Was an Imposter—She Was Compelled to Go On Living a Lie—Then Love and Success Entered In—and Her Debt Was Paid.

Exploitation Angles: The title will make a good appeal if played up well, and the main situation will also lend itself to punch advertising. Use both as well as the name of the star and the theatrical locale of the story.

"The Dog and The Flea"

Illustrating the moral, "Do not waste pity on a scamp," this modernized Aesop Fable, distributed by Pathe, depicts a small dog that has an awful time because of too-close attachment of friendly fleas. Mr. Dog gets into all sorts of scrapes, loses his job, etc., because of the flea. Finally he dives into the water and succeeds in ridding himself of the obnoxious little insect despite its pleading for life. This is about up to the standard of the average of this series, and Cartoonist Terry, has as usual done some good work, but he has shown a tendency to somewhat overdo the scenes in which the dog is shown being sorely troubled by the flea.—C. "The Bride's Play"

Marion Davies' Cosmopolitan-Paramount Picture Is Idealistically Irish.

Reviewed by Sumner Smith.

Irish people, especially, will like "The Bride's Play," the latest Cosmopolitan picture, distributed by Paramount, in which Marion Davies stars, for it depicts present and legendary Erin as the country of beauty they either remember or imagine. The lack of velocity in the development of the plot will be of minor importance to them, for, all the while, they will be feasting their eyes on striking landscapes and interiors, and finding in the characters the attributes of courtesy and gentleness they lovingly associate with Ireland.

But for those not absorbed in the present and future of Ireland, the picture will move too slowly, the tedium of its progress only partly lightened by scenic "shots." The beautiful and the spectacular must be made effective by contrast, and in this picture the director has, it seems, overlooked few chances to jam the backgrounds full of flowers and pageants, so that too little simplicity precedes the big scenes to render their artistic atmosphere effective.

Marion Davies plays two roles in this adaptation of Donn Byrne's story—the one of the bride in the legend and the Irish girl of today. But she was handicapped from the start because the scenario decreed that she must be inhumanly, impossibly good—witness her repulse of inoffensive love-making with the words, "You must not speak so to me. We have but lately met." This atmosphere of idealistic virtue as thickly coats the picture as the shell covers the meat of a cocoanut. The star's support is adequate.

The Cast

Medieval Story

Enid of Cashel.....Marion Davies
Marquis of Muckross.....Jack O'Brien
Sir John Mansfield.....Frank Shannon

Modern Story

Aileen Barrett.....Marion Davies
Sir Fergus Cassidy.....Wyndham Standing
Bulmer Meade, a poet.....Carlton Miller
John Barrett, Aileen's father.....
..... Richard Cummings
Bridget ..... Eleanor Middleton
Sybil ..... Thea Talbot
Sir Robert Fennell.....John P. Wade
Old Peasant Woman.....Julia Hurley
Meade's Butler.....George Spink

Adapted from Story by Donn Bryne.
Scenario by Mildred Considine.
Directed by George Terwilliger.
Photographed by Ira H. Morgan.
Length, 6,476 Feet.

The Story

Aileen Barrett, an Irish lass, falls in love with a poet and is ignored by him. An Irish nobleman wins her and revives at the wedding an ancient custom, "The Bride's Play," in which the bride asks each male guest if he is the one she loves best, the game ending with her husband folding her in his arms. Eight hundred years ago the Duke of Muckross carried off the bride of the Earl of Kenmare when she asked him the question. The poet, romantically inspired by the legend, attempts to do the same, but this modern girl scorns him.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines:

Marion Davies in a Beautifully Staged and Costumed Picture, Based on the Old Irish Legend of "The Bride's Play."

Exploitation Angles: This is one of the most sumptuous productions ever made, and it is not merely a lavish expenditure of money, but the purchase of effect. Sell it chiefly from this angle and make your appeals as rich as possible. You can do this best with window and lobby displays.

"Blue Blazes"

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

For those who desire western melodrama with plenty of action which makes use of nearly all of the tried and true devices which showmen have found effective, "Blue Blazes," starring Lester Cuneo, distributed on the state right market by Western Pictures Exploitation Company and produced by Doubleday Productions, should prove satisfactory.

Starting in a cabaret in the effete East, showing a dancer in abbreviated costume with the hero as a champion prize fighter, and then swinging to the open country of the West, where the star is seen as a tramp, the story involves a mortgage on the ranch, the villain who kidnaps the girl, the hero who is jailed because of mistaken identity and makes a sensational escape, plenty of gun fighting, the discovery of oil on the ranch by the villain, a sensational oil fire punctuated by a hand-to-hand fight and rescue among the flames.

Lester Cuneo fits the requirements of the leading role and is ably assisted by Francelia Billington as the hero. The remainder of the cast is satisfactory and the photography high class.

Cast

Jerry Connors.....Lester Cuneo
Mary Lee.....Francelia Billington
Mrs. Lee.....Fannie Midgeley
Black Lanning.....Bert Sprotte
Foreman of Ranch.....Roy Watson
Lawyer .....Philip Gastrook

Directed by Robert Kelley.
Length, five reels.

The Story

Jerry Connors, tired of the flattery that goes with success as a champion fighter, jumps a train to the West, gets left at a wayside station, is robbed by tramps, and disguised as one of them asks food at a neighboring ranch. He soon finds that the girl and her mother are in trouble over the mortgage and the villain is seeking to force the girl to marry him. He decides to stick, and after the many vicissitudes outlined above, succeeds in getting the best of the villain and winning back the valuable oil property. He then discloses the fact that he is not a tramp but a wealthy pugilist, and all ends happily.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines:

Romantic Story of the Great West, Filled With Punch and Action.

Lester Cuneo and Francelia Billington in a story of the Big Western Open Country that You Will Surely Like.

Exploitation Angles: After announcing Cuneo you can make a lot of talk about the prize-fighter hero and remind your hearers that even George Bernard Shaw deigned to take a pugilist for his hero in Cashel Byron's Profession. Build up on this idea and sell the hero almost as strongly as the player of the part.

"A Fairy Foreland"

Closely following the course of Tennyson's famous poem "The Brook," Burton Holmes has created a summer idyl that contains some very attractive shots. The entire picture is made up of water scenes that have much of the symmetry and charm of the verse, quotations from which are used as subtitles throughout. Excellent photography has succeeded in lending an effect of life to the water that is quite in keeping with the manner in which Tennyson has personified the brook. There is no other sort of life depicted in the reel and the whole tone of the picture is picturesque rather than authentic, marking it as a slight digression from the usual Holmes subject.—M. K.

"Fountain of Youth"

Reviewed by Roger Ferri.

To those keen and ever observant students of animated trick photography and double and treble exposure, "Fountain of Youth" is an interesting subject. Though produced in some foreign land, this picture is one continuous series of photographic magic. The disappearance of mortals from civilization to the lower realms and their transformation into beasts and insects indeed constitute a study in photography that cannot be overlooked, for while perplexing to the naked eye they present a form of art that offers a world of possibilities.

But while a treat along those lines, the story, inspired by "Faust," the famous opera, is not one that lay patrons of the cinema will understand. In the vernacular it is "high brow," for it is first philosophical, then mythical, and, finally, scientific. Indeed, the leading character is a scientist, searching in vain, for supernatural powers, neglecting the finer things in life, until age overtakes him and then he finds himself apparently doomed in the clutches of the Satanic monarch. This state of affairs is taken advantage of in the construction of a story, which, while distinctively allegorical, is a notable contribution to screen offerings in that it is radically different from the ordinary feature, a fact that perhaps can be pardoned for its so-called "high-browishness."

Directorially, it is well presented with a cast of foreign actors who understood fully the peculiarities of their respective roles. Scenically, it is picturesque. The lighting, while defective in several places, as a whole is acceptable.

A particularly commendable asset of this feature that will appeal to exhibitor is the fact that the production can be timed to the music of Gounod's "Faust."

Data concerning the identity of director, photographer and members of the cast was unavailable. The picture is six reels in length.

The Story

Pan Peters, a Russian nobleman, confides in his son, a promising scientist, that years previous he had sold his soul to Satan. The young man seeks to break his father's Satanic vow and seeks the aid of the saint, who gives him a bowl of holy water and informs him that he can only save his soul by finding the gates of Hades and spraying them with the water. The doctor locates the gates and encounters his Satanic czar, forcing him to surrender the scroll upon which his father had signed away his soul. Time passes. Dr. Peters, an elderly man now, is besieged by the devil who points out his neglect of the finer things of life, tempting him and offering him supernatural powers. Thought of possession of a knowledge of deeper things, tempts the doctor to sign away his soul in return for these powers and the doctor's rejuvenation. The doctor proceeds to accomplish miracles. He falls in love with Angelic whom he marries. He is called by the King to perform a miracle, but fails and is thrown into prison. However, he escapes, only to learn of his wife's disloyalty. Knowledge, power, fame and love having played him false, the doctor attempts to drown his sorrow in drink, but at this propitious moment Satan appears and demands an accounting. Here the doctor turns to God and whispers an ardent prayer. Unworthy of the aid of Heavenly powers, but still possessing the Demon's power, the doctor remains suspended between Heaven and earth.

Exploitation Angles: Play this up as something absolutely new. Do not just offer it as a production, but stress the photography and the unusual effects, selling on curiosity. Use all the stills you can get. These will help more than printed argument to tell of the nature of the story.

"Love's Redemption"

Will Please Large Norma Talmadge Following—Released by First National.

Reviewed by Fritz Tidden.

As a matter of fact, Norma Talmadge in anything will promote active business at the box office window, needless to say. "Love's Redemption" will satisfy the tremendous following the star enjoys, which is not as casual a statement as it sounds. Primarily it allows Miss Talmadge to appear to great advantage in a role that is refreshingly different from anything she has essayed for some time.

The theme, a variation upon the glad-girl, waif-outcast reformist who finally realizes happiness for herself and those concerned, may be conversant and the pattern of its treatment may be along familiar lines, but there are constant flashes of something different that gives the picture frequent refreshing moments. One of the most valuable assets of the production is its atmosphere, brought forward by Albert Parker's direction, especially in the arrangement and selection of settings and the choice of exquisitely beautiful exterior shots photographed on the island of Jamaica, the locale of the story, which Anthony Paul Kelly adapted from Andrew Soutar's novel.

Miss Talmadge's performance in this picture enforces again the multiple reasons just why she commands one of the largest audiences enjoyed by the most prominent stars. To detail these reasons would be to repeat what has been said many times before. She has been provided with expert support from an unusually competent cast, in which the players maintain an even, high grade of excellence.

The Cast

Jennie Dobson.....Norma Talmadge
Clifford Standish.....Harrison Ford
Frederick Kent.....Montagu Love
John Standish.....Cooper Cliffe
Mrs. Standish.....Ida Waterman
Captain "Bill" Hennessey..Michael M. Barnes
Standish's Overseer.....E. Fernandez
Steward of Club.....Fraser Coulter

Adapted from Andrew Soutar's Novel.
Scenario by Anthony Paul Kelly.
Directed by Albert Parker.
Length, 5,889 feet.

The Story

Deprived of her last benefactor by the departure of Capt. Bill Hennessey for England, Ginger, a girl of Spanish-English blood, decides to remake Clifford Standish, an exile from England who is slowly being poisoned by the rum of the island of Jamaica, the locale of the story. It is a battle of a girl's keen wit against great odds. Ginger wins out, only to lose, apparently, as a summons comes to Standish to return to England.

In the midst of aristocratic surroundings, for Ginger goes with him as his wife, there comes the crucial test of whether the man has really remade himself. And Standish is the one who helps Ginger find the answer, most emphatically in the affirmative.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines:

Norma Talmadge as "Ginger," the Girl of the Tropics, in a Drama of Island Fires That Awakened Love—and Civilization's Snows That Chilled It.

Exploitation Angles: You need do little more than announce Miss Talmadge, but do that so thoroughly that no one in your section is unaware of her engagement. Add that this is a play taken from Soutar's novel, but hand most of it to the star, for she can do the most for you.

"The Capture of the Canadian Lynx"

As with the other recent subjects in this series of the Adventures of Bob and Bill, Robert North Bradbury has injected into this story of trapping wild animals, considerable comedy. In this instance, the two boys set out to capture a Canadian Lynx for a menagerie, and the way they go about it is interestingly shown in detail. The comedy arises from the fact that a little, new neighbor with a very pretty face has promised to go on a picnic with the one who catches the lynx. The winner regrets his enthusiasm, however, when the girl appears in a bathing suit and it develops that her circumference is somewhat greater than her height. —C. S. S.

"Cameron of the Royal Mounted"

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

It is the spirit and background of "Cameron of the Royal Mounted" rather than the story that furnishes the thrills, and there are many of these. Stories of the Canadian Mounted Police have perhaps never afforded more fascinating entertainment, due perhaps to the fact that this time there is a quality of authenticity about many of the scenes and characters (the police who take part are not actors but officers of the Canadian force). As a result, the theatrical effect that so often weakens pictures of this class, has been eliminated and the exciting rides and pursuits accomplished by experienced riders amid the magnificent natural settings of the hills and woods of the Northwest are highly convincing.

The story is a little slow getting into action. The first part is devoted to an unnecessary explanation of the circumstances that bring the hero to Canada—an introduction that encumbers the dramatic sequence, rather than contributes to it. The real story starts with the incident of the barn dance and what has happened in the past could have been indicated afterword, without being portrayed in detail.

A strong cast, headed by Gaston Glass and Irving Cummings, is responsible for a performance that is sincere and unusually energetic.

The Cast

Corporal Cameron.....Gaston Glass
Raven.....Irving Cummings
Mandy.....Vivienne Osborne
Little Thunder.....Frank Lanning

Jim Haley.....Joe Singleton

Story by Ralph Connor.
Scenario by Faith Green.
Directed by Henry McRae.
Length, 5,600 Feet.

The Story

Cameron goes to Canada to escape punishment for forging a check on his father, which, it is said, he did while intoxicated. He meets Mandy Haley, a farmer's daughter, but their romance is interrupted by the jealous hired man who shoots Cameron. He goes to the hospital and decides never to see Mandy again, because of his past. His efficiency as a railroad surveyor later on, brings him to the notice of the Mounted Police who make him an officer. He engages in a fight against bootlegging and gets involved in many fights, finally being given a chance to rescue Mandy who has been kidnapped, and furthermore being cleared of the charge of forgery.

"Turn to the Right"

Perfect Balance of Drama Promises to Make the Picture Duplicate the Success of the Famous Stage Play. Released by Metro

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

It is the exquisite combination of human interest and comedy, the blending, in fact, of all the tried-and-proven elements essential to the success of drama that give Rex Ingram's "Turn to the Right" the flattering distinction of being the photographic parallel to the great stage success. Recalling the popularity which the original production enjoyed, the box-office results of the picture should be nothing less than immense.

In the fine art of judging screen material, of discerning what deserves featuring and what should be kept subordinate, Mr. Ingram is an adept. He has realized the importance of making the comedy uppermost and using the sentimental appeal only as a background, when the temptation with many directors, would have been to emphasize the sob strains and use the comedy only as a "relief." He knows, intuitively where the chances for fun are, and he proceeds intelligently to build for laughs. The effect is that he has postponed getting serious as long as possible and when a bit of pathos does come, he gets it over with amazing swiftness and realism.

The sympathy and harmony that marks the performance of the entire cast reflects credit again upon the director. Something of his personality and humor has been absorbed by them all and the result is a perfection of ensemble, without a sacrifice of individuality in any case. The real stars of the production, although their names are not featured, are Harry Myers and George Cooper, as the convict pals of Joe Bascom, the leading character. Even as their parts constituted the vitality of the story, so their acting is the vitality of the photo-drama. They are simple comedy types, and they are real. Also deserving of important mention are Jack Mulhall, Alice Terry, Edward Connelly and Lydia Knott.

The photography is another masterly achievement. The appropriate use of soft focus and the lighting effects are largely responsible for the pleasure experienced in watching the picture.

The Cast

Elsie Tillinger.....Alice Terry
Joe Bascom.....Jack Mulhall
Gilly.....Harry Myers
Mugsy.....George Cooper
Deacon Tillinger.....Edward Connelly
Mrs. Bascom.....Lydia Knott
Betty Bascom.....Betty Allen
Jessie Strong.....Margaret Loomis
Sammy Martin.....William Bletcher
Mr. Morgan.....Eric Mayne
Lester Morgan.....Ray Ripley

Adapted from Winchell Smith and Jack Hazzard Play.
Scenario by June Mathis and Mary O'Hara.
Directed by Rex Ingram.
Length, 8 Reels.

The Story

The story concerns the adventures of Joe Bascom, who, after serving an unjust prison sentence, returns to his mother, keeps the truth from her, and learns that she is about to be swindled out of her home and peach orchard. With the aid of his two prison pals he saves the property and is the means of bringing romance into the lives of his pals and himself.

"The Power Within"

Pathe Production of Fine Moral Tone Dramatically Deals with the Power of Faith

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

Absolutely clean morally, with no sex appeal, and representing a good lesson through the medium of an interesting story is "The Power Within," distributed through Pathe Exchange, Inc. It is a picture that will satisfy the average audience and send the majority of patrons away in a better frame of mind.

The author has gone for his theme to the Book of Job, and in the picturization scenes representing this Biblical character are shown and compared with the experiences of a Job of today who is a self-made millionaire shipbuilder.

The title refers to faith and deals with the fallacy of faith alone as compared with faith in a higher power, at the same time the picture is not really preachy. Much of the efficacy of the picture is due to the excellent work of William H. Tooker in the leading role; he gives a strong, forceful performance. Considerable credit is also due to the excellent portrayal of a French girl by Pauline Garon, not only she is very attractive to look at, but she fills the demand of the role of the son's widow, both in the emotional and lighter roles. There is good, strong, heart interest in the story.

There are points in the story which are not convincing and which weaken it in the latter part; also the villain has a tendency to overplay his role, making you wonder why he was not suspected sooner, but, in its entirety, it furnishes good, average entertainment.

The Cast

Job Armstrong.....Wm. H. Tooker
Mrs. Armstrong.....Nellie Spaulding
Bob Armstrong.....Robert Kenyon
Dorothy Armstrong.....Dorothy Allen
Count Bazaine.....Robert Bentley
Pauline.....Pauline Garon
Little Bobby.....William Zohlmen

Directed and Adapted by Lem F. Kennedy.
Story by Robert Norwood.
Photographed by George Peters.
Length, 6 Reels.

The Story

Job Armstrong, a self-made millionaire ship-owner, believes that the power within himself is sufficient to carry him to even greater heights. He hears the story of Job, but does not recognize the analogy in his own case. Circumstances, however, aided by the treachery of his son-in-law, Count Bazaine, who helps to get the shipyards for a rival foreign concern, successively cause him to lose his only son and daughter, his health, and threaten his business. He will not give in, however, until it appears that fate has also taken away the baby son of his son's wife, who has brought sunshine into his home. He has had to start all over again, and this last grief brings him to a realization of the real power within, and with this added strength he wins back health, happiness and business success.

"Loose Change"

Having an eccentric young man become the victim of a gang of crooks who persuade him to go on a treasure hunt and tunnel into the vaults of his father's bank, is the theme of this amusing single-reel Hal Roach comedy. Paul Parrott plays the lead, with Ethel Broadhurst as the stenographer. There is a lot of good comedy material which will bring laughs, and particularly good in the ending where the hero ingeniously leads the crooks through a doorway in the bank which proves to be the entrance to a patrol wagon.—(Pathe)—C. "Living Lies"

A Clark-Cornelius Cinemelodramatic Feature of a Newspaperman's Adventure

Reviewed by Roger Ferri.

Clark-Cornelius' "Living Lies" is a screen adaptation of a popular Saturday Evening Post story, "A Scrap of Paper," that will make a strong appeal to those who revel in melodramatic offerings. Cognizant of the public demand today for melodramas, these distributors could not have selected a more opportune time to release such a picture. There is adventure galore, an exciting horse race, a shipwreck, and, in fact, everything that goes to make the sort of melodrama that never misses in throwing the patrons of "nigger heaven" into a spontaneous outburst of applause and cheer.

Without any warning the spectator is treated to a thrilling race and in rapid succession come a series of fistic fights. Despite the fact that "Living Lies" constitutes the mellowest of melodrama there is no gunplay. There is plenty of grappling, but nothing to which even the "bluest" of censors can object is reflected on the silver sheet.

The acting throughout is good, but the cutting can be improved upon with the insertion of several needed titles. Edmund Lowe as the enterprising reporter, who runs down a gang of crooked capitalists, is a complete success and will be admired even by those intimately acquainted with newspaper life. Mona Kingsley as his sweetheart, is charming, while Kenneth Hill makes a crafty crook. The rest of the cast is acceptable. The direction is good.

The Cast

Dixon Grant.....Edmund Lowe
Eustace Bray.....Kenneth Hill
Miss Rowland.....Mona Kingsley

Story by Arthur Somers Roche.
Directed by Emil Chautard.
Length, 5 Reels.

The Story

Dixon Grant, a reporter, is instructed to run down a band of high financiers suspected by the editor of being involved in a number of illegitimate deals. Masterman, the head of the crooked syndicate, effects an alliance with two others in putting over a traction deal. The signed agreement is blown out of the window and onto the street where it is picked up by Bray, who is later tricked into hiding the agreement, which falls into the hands of Grant. This fact is soon discovered by Masterman who offers to bribe the reporter and his sweetheart into surrendering the papers. They are tricked by Bray, who has been brought into the alliance, and tortured until Grant discloses the hiding place of the papers. Masterman sets out to locate the papers. Meanwhile, Grant and his sweetheart escape and manage to secure the necessary evidence to publish the traction scandal. Masterman, who has sought refuge in his house boat, while asleep discovers that the anchor has broken and the craft is headed toward the falls. Before he can escape the boat is caught in the strong current and its destruction follows. Masterman is found dead. The story has been printed.

"By Heck"

One of the very best two-reel slapstick comedies ever produced by Mack Sennett made its appearance this week at New York's Rialto Theatre and sent the audiences into convulsions of laughter. About its only weak feature is its title, "By Heck." There's a wealth of real humor underneath the slapstick stuff, the characterizations are excellent and the picture moves along at a rapid pace, having enough of a plot to carry the "gags." One of the best of these is a farm hand's difficulties with a pump that shoots streams of water of varying length. Another is where the strong man rocks the house with his hefty yanks on an exerciser. It's a peach.—(First National)—S. S.

PROJECTION

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Nova Scotia Punch Artists

Wilkie Borden, who signs himself "Operator, Crescent Theatre," Westville, Nova Scotia, speaketh thusly:

From time to time I have noticed comment with regard to change-over signals in the department, and have read many complaints of and conductorial comments on holes punched near end of reels of film. With regard to the latter, let me remark that if the punch and other marks in and on film are any worse down your way than they are up here, you surely have just and ample cause for complaint. I have received films which had yards of the end punched with holes. These "marks" were not always merely single holes punched a considerable distance apart. Often they consist of several groups of holes, with anywhere from two to as many as six to each group.

I am unable to understand the reason for this wanton destruction, unless it be that some operators find enjoyment in manipulating a punch, and pleasure in the commission of what amounts to an outrage on the property intrusted to their care, on the audiences for whom they put on shows, on their employer and on THEMSELVES. I say "on themselves," because the butchering of the picture on the screen distinctly and directly discredits them. The excuse offered is that they need the holes for change-over signal.

Now, Mr. Richardson, do you not think the construction of projectors has much to do with this? We are expected to keep the magazine doors closed, and with it so it is impractical to tell just how close the end of the film is, unless one can remember the action at the end of each reel, which many are unable to do. As the matter now lies, it is therefore necessary that some method be adopted by means of which the operator can tell when the time for change-over comes.

His Plan

Here is my plan: Raise the upper magazine until about a foot of film is visible between the fire trap of the magazine and the upper sprocket. To the upper magazine attach a glass chute, which should extend to say within one inch of the upper sprocket. The operator can then remove the trailer, take his place beside the idle projector, and when the end of film appears in the chute dissolve over to the other projector.

When running a single projector installation I remove the trailer and only shut off the light when the end of the film reaches the upper sprocket. I am therefore able to shorten the stop, because I do not need to wait for a long trailer to run through before I can get busy.

Of course I re-attach the trailers before shipping the films. With a two-projector installation and the glass chute I can see no necessity or reason for punch marks. Can you?

Listen to Me

No, nor can I under any other condition. And now you listen to me, Brother Borden, carefully keeping in mind the fact that if I seem to lecture you, you are expected to consider the facts and decide whither or not I am right; also that through you I am talking to very many others, some of whom NEED talking to.

While we shall not agree on the things you have set forth, still the fact that you have evolved the glass chute plan is proof that you do use your thinker, and the fact that you have written this department in an endeavor to be helpful is evidence that you are a progressive—a live wire—though you may have some distance yet to go before you carry high voltage of knowledge in matter projectional.

First, let me say that the glass chute scheme would not be practical, it for no other reason than that it would not be approved by officials. Glass if fragile. Suppose the chute became broken. Would that not leave unprotected a strip of film quite long enough to make a nice little bondfire right under the upper magazine. And do you really think that would get past any inspector?

And now another thing. You term yourself an "operator." Stop, Brother Borden, and reason with yourself. How are you to expect the employer, or anyone else to have very high respect for you, if you not only admit, but openly declare yourself to be merely the "operator" of a mechanism; when you volunterially declare yourself to be a non descript who is willing to class himself as one of more than a hundred different varieties of "operators," one of which is "Operators on Straw Hats," another "Operators on Ladies' Silk Waists," another "Operator of a Gambling House." Why, man, even the barber claims a distinctive title, which individuals have sufficient pride to refine into "Tonsorial Artist." You call the organist of your theatre an "Organ Operator" just once, and see what he or she says to you!

Have Pride

Have a little pride in your profession, Brother Borden. Call yourself a PROJECTIONIST, and then BE ONE. For one thing, the projectionist does NOT punch holes in film. Why? Because he has pride in his work. He wants good pay, BUT desires to and does give the very best there is in him in return for that pay.

He is NOT one who is willing to "lick the shoes of the employer." Neither is he one of those cleap swindlers who sells his service for all he or the organization he disgraces can get, and then delivers just as little real service as he thinks he can and not loose his job.

He either makes a cue sheet, invents a change-over signal or learns from the projection department how to make one. In any event he does NOT outrage the property intrusted to his care by punching holes in it. Only the "operator" does that, and even the self respecting operator will not do so reprehensible a thing.

Concerning the term "operator," some have defended it on the ground that it is included in the name of the organization (union) the men are affiliated. We do not hold this defense as having value, for two reasons. First, the said organization is dominated by stage employees, who, we have been told by delegates to the last convention, objected to changing the name "operator" to one having some distinctive significance, and since they had the controlling voting power, that settled it.

There Was No Use

There was no use even introducing the subject. In the second place the term "operator" was included in the organization name years ago, when projection consisted in very little more than ability to "twist a crank," thread a projector and make some sort of a splice in film. Times have changed since then, and the requirements of projection are vastly greater. "Projectionist" then would have been something of a joke.

It is now a legitimate title, pretty well recognized all over the world. It has been adopted by all progressive men of the profession, by several progressive organizations of projectionists, by the most influencial trade papers, by projector manufacturers in their advertisements, etc., and by some Government officials.

In closing, I might add that when you, Brother Borden, sign yourself "Operator, Crescent Theatre," while custom might cause us to assume you were its projectionist, still we would have a perfect right to assume that you operated the theatre itself.

In closing, let me suggest that you get a little white shellac. Thin it down pretty thin with wood alcohol, and varnish about three frames of the film with it at the point where the idle projector should be made ready; two more when it should be started, and one frame just where the dissolve should take place.

The idea is that the varnish will reflect enough light from the film back into the room to cause a "flash" which you will see all over the room. The shellac will dry very quickly. Try it out and report, if you will be so kind. Incidentally I asked all our readers to do the same thing weeks ago, but to now not one has come across.

From Minneapolis

Chauncey L. Greene, Minneapolis, Minnesota, says:

I am breaking a long silence to make a suggestion which may be too late, and may in addition be worthless. Here goes anyhow. I have noticed with much satisfaction that the Fourth Edition of the Handbook is about to go to press.

Now it seems to me the technical development of, or in projection is just about beginning to hit its stride, and that it is due to move at very much accelerated speed during the next few years. If this is true, and you are most competent to judge as to that, is not the time ripe for the publication of a loose leaf Handbook, in rugged form, so that by the removal and addition of pages it might always be kept up to date, and, if necessary enlarged by the addition of new things as they appear. This is the plan which has been adopted by several large engineering societies, and it seems to me it would be well worth its cost to the projectionists of the world at large.

PRESSURE on our columns is such that published replies to questions cannot be guaranteed under two or three weeks. If quick action is desired remit four cents, stamps, and we will send carbon copy of department reply as soon as written.

For special replies by mail on matters which, for any reason, cannot be replied to through our department remit one dollar.

Are You Working by "Guess" or Do You Employ Up-to-Date Methods?

You demand that your employer keep his equipment in good order and up ot date. He owes it both to himself and to you to do so, but you owe it to him to keep abreast with the times in knowledge and in your methods.

The lens chart (two in one, 11x17 inches, on heavy paper for framing) is in successful use by hundreds of progressive projectionists.

"Don't guess." Do your work RIGHT. Price, fifty cents, stamps.

If this is for any reason impractical at this time, could not the projection department be made up of alternate pages of text and advertisements. If it could, then it would be possible to clip up each weeks' issue and file the clips under proper heading in an ordinary letter file. I have myself used this system for some time, but because the department pages often occupy opposite sides of a sheet it necessitated a great deal of reference indexing.

And now that all this is off my chest, I will proceed to supply a very tardy answer to a question. About four years ago I described, in the department, a short and ground detector, consisting of a headband telephone receiver in series with a 4-volt flashlight battery, with leads for testing. Battery was fastened to idle end of the headband.

A Question Raised

Some one raised the question, is it sensitive enough to detect a high resistance short or ground? I was unable to answer this quantitively until a short while ago. Tested at the University of Minnestota it gave clearly audible response through one hundred thousand (100,000) ohms of resistance. The next highest available resistance was one million (1,000,000) ohms, and here it failed completely. I believe the limit of its practical range is about two hundred thousand (200,000) ohms.

There! Having thus relieved my soul I will now subside, first tendering to you my very best wishes for a happy and prosperous year.

Oh yes, by the way, before I throw out the clutch and step on the brake, in November 26 issue I noticed a request for a film cleaning solution formula. I believe the fluid you tried to recall the name of was Carbon Tetrachloride (CC/4). It was recommended in the department years ago by Lester Bowen, if I am not in error. It is non-inflammable. In fact its chief ingredient is used in Pyrene, J. M., and similar fire extinguishers.

As to Loose Leaf

As to the loose leaf Handbook, I have very carefully looked into the practicability of such a plan. It has important points in its favor. You have named them. They are the opportunity such a plan offers to keep the book right up to the minute.

The trouble is that it also has very serious objections, not the least of which is the cost. There are still many men who think so very little of their profession that they will not invest even the relatively small price it is necessary to charge for a regularly bound book.

If the profession is ever elevated to the plane it should occupy, and will occuppy when the men in it themselves raise to that plane—as a relatively few of them already have—then we can give them such a book as you have in mind, and I, too, have in mind.

But book publishing, like anything else, must be made to pay at least reasonably. I must live, and my publishers must have at least some leeway of profit.

To correct a perhaps wrong impression, let me tell you that in order to keep the price of the first edition down to the lowest possible figure, I waived all royalty thereon. All I ever received from it was one hundred dollars, which J. P. Chalmers made me a present of. He, himself, made little or nothing out of it. On the second edition I received, on my own suggestion, just one-half the usual, regular royalty paid authors on books of this class. This also was to keep the price to you down. I believe the second edition did pay my publishers a fair return. On the third edition I received the usual, regular royalty paid authors on books of this sort, which is higher than fiction royalty, because the sale is necessarily limited. My publishers made very little, if anything, on the book.

This statement is made to correct the popular idea that publishers and author of such books have a gold mine. They most emphatically have NOT.

Of course if I collected a lot of catalogue stuff together, got manufacturers to put in a lot of stuff they wrote themselves, and made up the rest in a happy-go-lucky sort of way, which would do more harm than good, then the task of getting out a book would be easy, and if I filled each page with half what is actually on each page, and filled whole pages with cuts that could be just as well confined to a quarter page or less, then the general expense of getting out the book would be greatly reduced, and the publisher would make more per copy.

Not That Way

But I don't do those things. I try to get out an honest, all-wool-and-a-yard-wide Handbook, which you may depend upon and look to for genuine information in all branches of projection, and this is enormously expensive, both in the compilation of material, in the getting of it ready for the printer, in cuts and in printing.

Then we use good paper, and good, substantial binding. In short we do everything within the combined powers of my publishers and myself to give you the very best we can, at the same time keeping price down as low as it is possible to keep it, without cheapening the book itself.

And after doing all this we of necessity face a restricted market. A book of fiction, which sells less than 50,000, is deemed almost a complete failure. In the very nature of things we can not hope to reach even that figure. If we made the price ten dollars, as we certainly must if the most excellent suggestion you have made were followed, you can see what a howl there would be, and the worst feature of it is that the very men who need a Handbook most would refuse to pay such a price.

Unable to Agree

H. St. Clare, Penticton, British Columbia, caused me to do some searching, all right. He sent a five dollar bill (U. S. money) and requested that he be placed on the list for one of the first, autographed, lot of the new Handbook. I was unable to make out the name, except that it began with P and ended with icton. After a fruitless search of three atlases I finally dug up an Official Railway Guide, which same is a 1,600 page book which gives, among other things, every town located on any railway, steamboat or stage line in this country and Canada. In this, after a long hunt, I found Penticton, and once I had that lot of letters for comparison, I could tell that was what was in Brother St. Clare's mind when he penned the name of his residence.

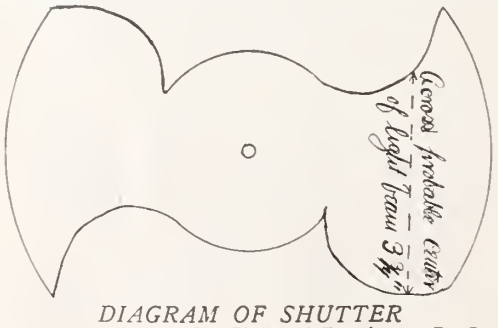

DIAGRAM OF SHUTTER
As made by H. St. Clare of Penticton, B. C.

I'm telling you this because it is not the first time I have received cash in a letter without being able to tell where it came from, especially if the envelope had been thrown away before the illegibility of the name of city had been discovered.

Correspondents should be VERY careful to write the name of city and state—street also, of given, very plainly; also if a letter is typewritten the signature ALWAYS should be also typewritten, just under the pen and ink signature. Endless trouble would thus be avoided. Many a worthy brother has failed to receive reply to his letter for the very simple reason that it was impossible for any one in my office to decipher his name.

I'm NOT roasting Brother St. Clare. I am telling him how close he came to probably accusing me of dishonesty for the reason that his order could not be credited because of his own carelessness. Unusual proper names ought always to be printed—at least that is the safest way. Friend St. Clare says:

Have often read the various discussions of 2-winged shutters. I am attaching paper pattern of shutter I made, which I have used on A C and D C for three years. I have found it very satisfactory. Please give it a try out and pass it along for someone else to try.

Results Not Appreciably Different

I am unable to agree with you that there is advantage in the form of shutter blade you show, Brother St. Clare. Sure it would "give satisfaction," but the results you get would be not appreciably different from those you would get from a stright edge shutter blade—or at least that is my verdict.

I am passing it along for the consideration of such of our readers as may care to give it a tryout, but with the remark that almost every conceivable shape of shutter blade, edge imaginable has been tried out during the past twenty-five years. That you would get a better result than with the regular stock shutter is entirely possible, because perhaps the blade fits your local condition, but the point I make is that the shape of the blade (I am NOT talking about its width), is no advantage.

Will Not Explode

H. B. Smith, projectionist, Washington, Iowa, says:

To settle an argument between the members of this local—local 594 I. A.—will you please advise us as to whether motion picture film will or will not explode?

You would have about as much chance of exploding a motion picture film as you would of exploding an ordinary paving brick. It is neither explosive or explodable.

What may happen, however, is this: If film be burned in a confined space, the generation of fumes and gases is so very rapid that considerable pressure may be set up, especially if the film be in a loose pile, where it will burn very rapidly. The old "exploding film" bugbear came about in this way: In the old days we used to set the projector on a sheet of metal tank, usually made of galvanized iron, about three or four feet long, by sixteen or eighteen inches wide. One, two and sometimes or even three reels were run into these cans as they came from the projector. These films lay in a loose pile, and it sometimes happened that a cigar or hot carbon stub rolled into the pile, whereupon, Bingo! The tank opening was arranged to automatically close in case of fire, which was an utterly idiotic thing to do, for under the above conditions gases were generated so fast that the darned tank would just blow up—or rather the door (usually) would blow off. It was NOT the film which exploded, but the blowing up of the tank by the pressure of the gases generated by rapid burning. And there you are, Brother Smith.

It is also possible that, when a film burns in a confined space, such as a closed projector magazine, there being, under this condition, a vast volume of dense, black smoke thrown off, a very real explosion may occur. Again, however, it is not the film which explodes, but the gases themselves, which might be set on fire and enormously expanded were they to be struck just right by a flash of flame. This latter is very inprobable, though I believe it could happen. But explode a film? Can't be done, brother. In the parlance of the street, "There ain't no such animal!"

Walker Makes Good

Several years ago a man who was then an embryo cartoonist did some work for this department, which I recognized as coming from one with ability and brains. At that time he was unknown, and in a recent letter to me remarked: "You were the first to give me, and such ability as I may be possessed of, recognition."

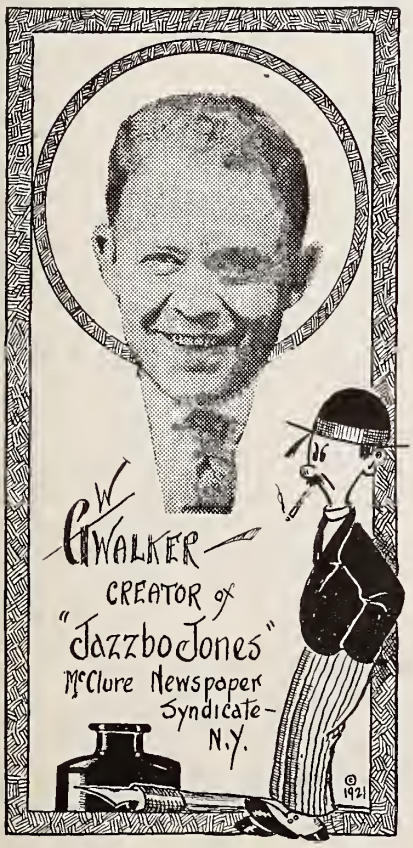
Since that time projectionists of this and other countries have had many a good laugh, and have been taught many a good lesson by the cartoons of G. W. Walker, which have from time to time appeared in this department.

Was a Projectionist

When Mr. Walker began to study cartoon work he was a motion picture projectionist. He is now a cartoonist of recognized ability. His work is in demand to such an extent that he is on the staff of the McClure Newspaper Syndicate, of New York City, and is supplying them with a humorous cartoon strip entitled, "Jazzbo Jones."

"Jazzbo Jones" appears in newspapers scattered all over the United States and Canada. Very likely it appears in your own home town paper, or one of them. If not, then tell the editor or editors about it, and thus give a former brother a boost.

Walker's cartoons on matters projectional will continue to appear, from time to time, in this department, as of old. If any of you have a really good idea for a humorous or instructive cartoon (preferably humorous, or a combination of humorous and instructive) on projection, or on things allied thereto, send it in to me and I'll have Walker put it into ink. It is not necessary to make a drawing. Just tell us what it is and we'll do the rest.



G. W. WALKER
The projectionist cartoonist

Read This. It Is Good

Every once in a while we get a letter which is out of the ordinary. Once in a while comes one which is very much so. The following, from George W. Samuelson, Bijou Theatre, Jamestown, New York, is in the latter class. It reads:

The newspaper space taken on motion picture operating (whatever that may be. F. H. R.) seems to indicate that a man must be a little more than human to be an operator. My theory is that any person that has a little horse sense can be made an efficient operator after three or four days (shameful waste of time, isn't it. F. H. R.) instructions under actual operating conditions.

I know of a manager who took a man that had never seen the inside of a booth (Booth-A structure made of boughs. A shack. Webster. F. H. R.) and within three days broke him in. The man held the job for more than four years.

An Unnecessary Expense

As to converting the booth (see above. F. H. R.) into a machine shop, I would consider that a very unnecessary expense. In fact I would consider it a temptation for the operator to experiment with his machines. I have found in four years of operating that experimenting is a very poor policy, and would rather damage the picture machine than improve it. As no operator could make any part (mechanical) of the picture machine with all the tools mentioned in your issue of November 19.

The operating and care of an automobile is far more complicated, and requires more mechanical ability, presence of mind and good judgement than any picture machine under the most adverse conditions, and still every man, woman and child drives a car and anyone unable to do so is considered backward.

The only tools that I find necessary to use are an intermittent wrench, couple of pairs of plyers, screw drivers, files, an oil can and a few rags to wipe up superfluous grease. And I challenge any operater to get a clearer, steadier picture than the one projected from my booth.

It is to laugh! Heavens, man, why the "couple" of pairs of plyers. Might not the extra plyers, screwdrivers and the files lead you into temptation? Sounds real dangerous to me.

I don't care to reply to such nonsense, except to call attention to the fact that this expert challenges machine "operators" ONLY. He is wise to leave projectionists out of it.

I think I will leave him to the tender mercies of those of you who feel like wasting time on a man who finds delight in belittleing and running down his own profession.

As True as Yesterday

Today I was looking through the little paper covered pamphlet I got out in 1907. It was the forerunner of the Handbook. It was entitled "Operator's Hand Book of Practical Instructions." It contained thirty pages, and was the very first instruction in projection, so far as I know, ever published as such.

The booklets were sold to exchanges and projector manufacturers, with the advertisement of the buyer on the cover, at, as I remember it, twenty dollars a thousand and I sold, in all, about sixty thousand of them. The Nicholas Power Company alone bought 6,000. They were immensely popular, being distributed gratis by those who bought them from me.

On page 3 I find the following:

Don't know it all. Those who imagine they do are too good for this world. Be eager and willing to learn. There is no man living who knows all there is to know about projection—or anything else, for that matter. The man who thinks he does is making a colossal blunder, and one that will cost him dearly in the end.

Circulate among the boys and exchange ideas. What they learn from you won't injure you and the points you get from them will be clear again.

Don't be afraid to ask questions concerning anything you may not clearly understand. It is better to expose your ignorance and get wise, than to have to hide it all your life, isn't it?

Every word of which is exactly as applicable today as it was when I wrote it fourteen years ago.

What Is It?

Handbook Invaluable

George McD. Allen, well-known motion picture projectionist, Welland, Ont., is one of the many thousands who have expressed something MORE than mere satisfaction with the Handbook. He says:

Will you please forward lens charts, for which I inclose fifty cents P. O. money order. I have found your Handbook invaluable, and am anxiously awaiting publication of the Fourth Edition, which I hope will not be long delayed.

If Brother Allen found the third edition of much value, then surely he will value the Fourth Edition very, very much more highly, because it is far and away in advance of the third edition, both in up-to-dateness, size, illustrations, variety of purely projection matter treated, and about everything else.

I believe that you will all say the new book has ever more than kept pace with the advancement of the industry, and the profession of projection.

Remembrances

It want to take this opportunity to thank all those friends of this country and Canada who have sent Christmas tokens. They have ranged from cards to remembrances of considerable value, but the latter count for but very little more than the former. It is the pleasure of knowing you thought of me, and went to the trouble of sending a word of friendly greeting which really counts. The presents I shall prize, regardless of their value, especially those sent by unions as a body. It was kind of you, and gives me courage to tackle the New Year and its battles.

Hamrick's Blue Mouse of Portland Is a Mighty Good Small Theatre

THE illustration on this and the opposite page show that John Hamrick is repeating in Portland the reputation which he gained in Seattle for operating beautiful theatres.

The Portland Blue Mouse is the old Globe Theatre with its interior completely made over. Mr. Hamrick took a ten and one-half years' lease on the house from Mary M. O'Neill, who operated the Globe.

The building, which contains a number of business offices above the theatre, is situated in the very center of the shopping district at Eleventh and Washington streets, is three stories high and constructed of grey brick.

Two Entrances

There are two entrances, the main one being on Washington street. The length of this entrance extends from front to back, instead of across the building. The box office, located at one side, is made of marble and plate glass. It is equipped with an automatic ticket machine and a Lightning coin changer. In each panel of the walls of the lobby walk a large brass poster frame has been inserted.

One of the most admired features of the new house is the reception lobby or foyer. This extends from front to back, instead of across the building. Louis Gluck, who was the interior decorator of the Seattle Blue Mouse, was brought down to Portland to decorate the house, and outdid himself on the walls of the lobby. The illustration shows the details admirably. The colors are Pompeiian red, tan and gold. The foyer is enclosed with French doors.

DON'T BE DISCOURAGED

because your house is small.

Read what John Hamrick did to make a minus thousand seater look like a million dollars.

Then study the illustrations.

The decorations and furnishings of the auditorium are practically replicas of the Seattle Blue Mouse. The color scheme is blue and old rose. Old ivory woodwork sets off panels of rose brocade topped by medallions. All draperies are blue with gold trimmings. The proscenium arch is enriched by bas-relief decorations in burnished gold. The organ console is finished in burnished gold to match. Blue valance and drapes frame a gold silk curtain trimmed in black. This opens barn door effect to disclose a gold fibre screen framed in black velour.

The screen flies, so that, when the show is finished and the curtain drawn, the screen disappears; and when the curtain is again opened a beautiful garden scene is disclosed. In the background are mountains surrounding a lake and in the foreground a real fountain plays amid real flowers and shrubs. Baby spot lights throw different colors on this scene as the orchestra plays.

994 Seats in House

There are 757 Heywood-Wakefield chairs in French grey wood with full upholstery in blue. The upholstery is leather, except on the 237 loge chairs, which are placed at the back of the main floor and at the front of the balcony. These are upholstered in blue velour. The aisle carpets and that in the foyer is blue with a pin stripe of black. The entire floor under the seats is carpeted in grey.

The ladies' rest room is furnished in blue velour overstuffed chairs and davenports, with mahogany tables and desk. Full length mirrors add a touch of luxury dear to the feminine heart. The room containing lavatory and toilets is in white woodwork with marble walls. This is on the second floor, but the smoking room and check room are on the main floor.

Two Simplexes in Projection Room

The girl ushers are dressed in blue velour, the same shade as the hangings, with borders of little grey mice around the bottom of the skirt.

The projection room is on the balcony. The Western Theatre Equipment Company, of Seattel, furnished all the equipment for same; also the house seatings. The booth equipment consists of two type "S" Simplex machines, W. T. E. Company arc controls, stereopticons and a spotlight especially constructed for the Blue Mouse by the W. T. E. Company.

All lighting and curtain controls are located in the projection room. The curtain opens and closes at the pressure of a button, and the screen flies and lowers in the same manner. The lights are controlled on dimmer banks.

A record for the Pacific Coast was made in the installation of the equipment. William Hartford, installation engineer with the Western Theatre Equipment Company, started work in the theatre Saturday night and had completed the job of setting up the chairs and installing all projection, curtain and screen equipment by Sunday night.

The house opened on the evening of November 28 with "The Queen of Sheba." Harold Daigler, manager of the Seattle Blue Mouse, came down to get the house into smooth running order, and then he turned it over to Harry Sigmond, formerly counsel for the Northwest Film Board of Trade, as permanent manager.

Fumigation As a Method of Freeing the Theatre from Germs and Vermin

THE average moving picture theatre owner gives but little thought to the fumigation of his house, possibly because it is seldom the case that drastic measures must be resorted to to rid it of insects or germs. There are times, however, when spraying with insecticides fails to rid a theatre of pests and where more thorough treatment is necessary to make it safe. Health regulations are becoming more rigid, inspections by local and State authorities more frequent and the demands on the part of the public more exacting. A knowledge of fumigation may stand many exhibitors in good stead and save them the loss incident with closed houses during epidemics.

Not all of the troubles along this line are due to the presence of insects or to disease germs, as will be seen by the experience of an exhibitor in a small Western town. The building he took over and transformed into a moving picture house had been used as a bakery for many years. Its construction was well suited for theatre purposes and but little new material was added to adapt it to this use.

Complained of Mustiness

The house had not been in use very long before patrons began to complain that there was a musty smell about it and business commenced to fall off. The owner tried disinfectants, but without satisfactory results, and even resorted to the expedient of washing every foot of the woodwork with soap and water to which carbolic acid has been added. This freshened the atmosphere for a time and patrons returned, but gradually the old odor reappeared.

It was finally discovered that the woodwork of the old building contained myriads of yeast germs and that these were thriving in the moist air of the theatre. A chemist connected with a local drug store examined the place and declared that he could rid it of the germs overnight. The method he employed is given in detail and while it is best to secure the service of an expert, owing to its dangerous nature, any one can do the work successfully if extreme caution is observed. Like fire and water, hydrocyanic gas is a good servant, but a dangerous master. Insect pests and germs which hide in cracks and crevices are difficult to kill and cannot be exterminated by the usual disinfectants, but the fumes of a poisonous gas will penetrate into all openings, killing every living thing. Our opponents in the late war knew that and developed the idea to a high degree.

Deadly to Animal Life

Hydrocyanic gas is generated from the salt potassium cyanide, by treating it with sulphuric acid diluted with water. The chemical potassium cyanide is a most dangerous substance and the gas it forms is deadly to animal life. In fumigating a theatre great care must be taken to make sure that the fumes cannot escape into some other building which may be occupied, and it is also well to remove articles of brass and nickel, as these may become tarnished.

Experiments have shown that the potassium cyanide should be ninety-eight per cent. pure to give the best results and a chemical of this purity may be obtained provided the purchaser insists that no other will do. It should not cost more than forty cents a pound, except in isolated places. Sulphuric acid in the crude form may be used and this should not cost more than five cents a pound. If the auditorium of the theatre is tight, one ounce of cyanide for every one hundred cubic feet of space will be sufficient. It is combined with the acid and water in the following proportions: potassium cyanide, 1 ounce; commercial sulphuric acid, 1 fluid ounce, and water, 3 fluid ounces.

Made Room Air Tight

The theatre in question was eighty feet by thirty feet by twenty feet in size, including the stage, and therefore required 480 ounces of cyanide, 480 ounces of sulphuric acid and 1,440 ounces of water. The room was made as air tight as possible by closing all ventilation openings and sticking strips of wet paper over the cracks around the doors. The machines were removed from the projection room, although it was not believed that this would have been necessary. The water was measured and placed in four large stone jars, the sulphuric acid carefully measured and poured slowly into the water. This process must never be reversed, for danger would be at hand if the acid were poured into the jar first. The cyanide was weighed and placed into paper bags, one being deposited by the side of each jar. The operator then enlisted the aid of three helpers and at a given signal the bags were dropped into the jars and all hurried out of the theatre, closing the door as securely as possible. This was done late in the afternoon and the house was not opened for fifteen hours. Five or six hours will suffice for the operation, however. Care should be taken not to enter the building until the gas is dissipated, it being readily distinguished by its ordor which is like that of peach kernels.

Destroyed All Germs

In this instance, which is admittedly a very unusual one, the disagreeable features disappeared following the fumigation and have not occurred again, indicating that all the germs were destroyed.

Another instance where hydrocyanic gas was employed to good advantage was in a theatre which will not be named, for obvious reasons, but which is located in a city famed for its claim of chemical purity. Patrons of this house had long complained that it was infested with vermin and all the efforts of the different managements to rid the place of insects seemed unavailing, although various sprays were freely used. The matter reached a climax one night when the wife of a health official marched into the office and exhibited three bed bugs which she had killed.

Banished the Trouble

A careful search showed that the place was infested with these vermin, the decorations being of such type as to harbor them. In addition, there was a hotel overhead and this was also found to be infested. Hydrocyanic gas was suggested and it was employed to such good advantage that there has never been a recurrence of the trouble. In this instance the poison gas squad commenced work at the top floor and worked downward as the gas is lighter than air and tends to rise. Several hundred pounds were used and there was not the slightest accident, except in an instance where the stone jar was too small and the liquid boiled over, doing a little damage to a floor.

Experts in work of this kind recommend that the cyanide be broken into small pieces and this can be done without danger as gases do not arise until the chemical comes in contact with sulphuric acid.

Care should be taken to empty the contents of the jars into a sewer after the fumigation is over and to wash them thoroughly before they are used for other purposes.

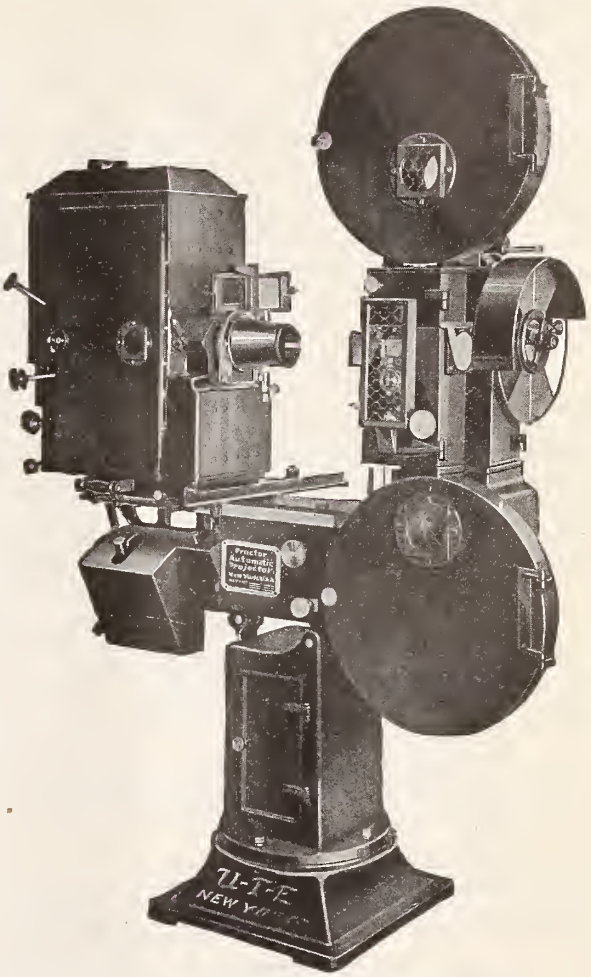
YOU CAN MEET COMPETITION

And You Can Meet It Effectively and Economically by establishing for your house a reputation for perfection in projection.

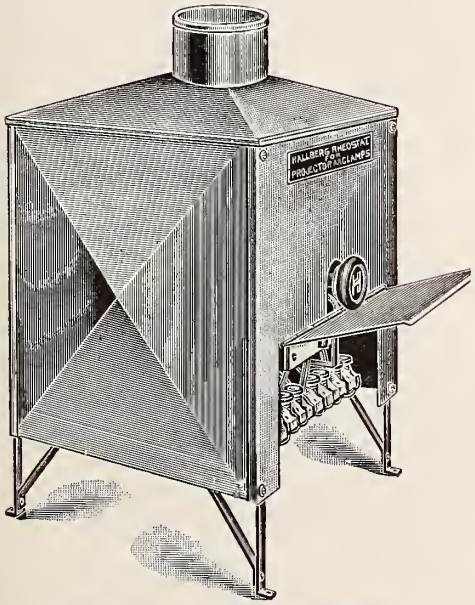


U. T. E.-PROCTOR AUTOMATIC PROJECTOR

Direct motor driven and equipped with an absolutely perfect speed control.

Your competitor may have a larger organ or a fuller orchestra. His rest rooms may be more luxuriously furnished or his floors more expensively covered.

BUT—he cannot beat your showing on the screen if YOU are U. T. E. equipped and he cannot equal you unless he also has U. T. E. apparatus.



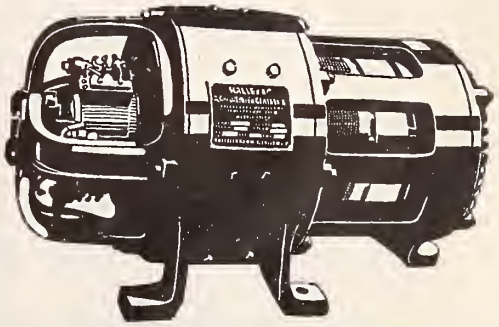
HALLBERG MULTIPLE-UNIT RHEOSTAT

Its units are separably fused and may be easily and economically replaced. Current control is positive and all safety requirements are met.

In all the world you will find no other line like that bearing the U-T-E trade mark — it does, and does better what other makes attempt to perform.

Abolish projection room troubles and poor screenings by installing the U-T-E projection improvers. Instead of costing you money, they earn it for you.

Bulletin P-W will tell you more about them. It's yours for the asking.



HALLBERG TWO-IN-ONE SERIES ARC MOTOR GENERATOR

Built in double 50, double 75 and double 120 amperes. Also for all circuits of single, double and three phase current. Quiet, short circuit-proof and will operate indefinitely at full open circuit voltage.

Simplex Distributors Are All Busy as Bees

The Dwyer Bros. and Company, of Cincinnati, reports the installation of a battery of Simplex projectors in the new 1,800 seat State Theatre which was recently opened in Columbus, Ohio. Word also comes from the Chicago office of the Exhibitors' Supply Company, Inc., of the installation of Simplex incandescent equipment, spotlights and a Minusa screen in the new Family Theatre, Frankfort Heights, Ill.

B. F. Porter, Simplex distributor for New York City and vicinity, announces the installation of two Type "S" Simplex projectors in the new 1,200 seat Ronson Theatre, Newark, N. J. The new Superba Theatre, of the same city, was also recently equipped, as well as the Globe and Victoria Theatres, by Mr. Porter.

The Western Theatre Equipment Company, of Seattle, Wash., advises that it has secured the order for the complete equipment, including Simplex projectors, which will be installed in the Rialto Theatre, Wenatchee, Wash., which is now being erected by the Pacific Coast Theatres, Inc.

The Sherman Theatre, St. Cloud, Minn., which is one of the finest picture theatres in Central Minnesota, was Simplex equipped by the Teco Products' Manufacturing Company, of Minneapolis.

New England Installation

From New England comes the news that the Boston Motion Pictures Supply Company, Southern New England distributors for Simplex, has made the following installations in and around Massachusetts:

Two Simplex, motor-driven Mazda equipments, in the Second Congregational Church, shows will be given two and three times each week.

Two machine installations in churches are yet in the unusual class, but through a coincidence the Trinity Church of Springfield, a neighboring city of Holyoke, also boasts of two Simplex Mazda equipments, while the high school at West Springfield has a similar equipment.

Two Type "S," motor-driven Simplexes, were installed in the 1,500 seat Jamaica Theatre. Hyde Square, Jamaica Plain, which theatre is operated by Allenburg and Green, who also operate the newly Simplexized Mystic Theatre at Malden, which has a capacity of 1,200 seats. Both these theatres have all the seats located on one floor. The Dudley Theatre, also operated by the same company, is Simplex equipped.

Another new theatre is the 1,250 seat Central Square Theatre in Somerville, operated by J. Locatelli. This house is equipped with two Type "S" Simplexes. The Teel Square Theatre, also in Somerville, is Simplexized. This is a 1,500 seat house, operated by the Biano family, and is equipped with two Mazda Simplexes.

This theatre also, has all of its seats on one floor. The Boston Motion Picture Supply Company, also reports that a Type "S" Simplex was recently installed on the U. S. S. "North Dakota," while this battleship was at the Charlestown navy yard.

Rothacker Is on United Studio Directory Board

Watterson R. Rothacker has been elected a member of the board of directors of the United Studios, of Hollywood, formerly the Brunton Studios.

Mr. Rothacker has been a figure in the motion picture world since the early days. Twelve years ago he was baptized a member of the official film family when he engaged in the practical picture industry, being one of the first to make an organized effort to adapt the silver sheet to the needs of business. He is at present a member of the faculty of the Page-Davis School of Advertising.

He was vice president of the Motion Picture Board of Trade and for a number of years was chairman of the membership committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. He has long been a stockholder in the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

During the war he originated the "Mile of Smiles" plan, whereby thousands of homesick doughboys "Over there" saw movies of the folks at home.

He is president of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, of Chicago; the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, of New York, and Rothacker-Aller Laboratories, of Los Angeles.

"A Many-Sided Triumph!"

THAT'S what the New York Mail calls "The Law and the Woman." Says this paper:—

"It has a compelling dramatic intensity that grows more gripping with each foot of film. The plot is splendidly developed. The direction is superfine. It carries all the dramatic force of the spoken drama, so that the spectator does not miss the words. Stanlaws establishes himself as one of the truly fine directors of the day."

All of which, together with the comments of the other critics, backs up what we have already said—

It's The Greatest Straight Dramatic Picture Ever Made!

"Your program's all right, but I missed the news reel."

"Your program's all right but—"

Watch out when that little insignificant word of three letters begins to find its way into the mouths of your people. It's the danger signal to lost patronage.

Do you know that all the Hearst newspapers are carrying a line daily on double page pictorial layouts, telling their readers that all the world's big events can be seen at the theatres showing the International News? The circulation of these papers is 5,543,784, a conservative estimate placing the actual readers at 25,000,000—one quarter of the population of the entire country. And every one of these people is talking!

"But you're not showing the news reel."

You can't omit the news reel much longer and escape this deathknell to good business. Popular demand is making International News just as much an essential, just as much a fixture of every theatre's program as the music has become. You couldn't keep your house open without music. Soon you won't be able to keep it open without International News.

Don't lull yourself into a false sense of security because only one or two people have demanded the news reel. Dissatisfaction is more contagious than the measles and not nearly so easily cured.

Remember! International News is the vaccine that will prevent this dissatisfaction disease. INJECT IT INTO YOUR PROGRAM TO-DAY.

Is There a Real Japanese Peril?

Does war threaten between United States and Japan?

Nearly everybody says: "Yes, some day." How right are they?

Nobody can give facts. Because Japan has always been a country of mystery—of closed doors.

FOX NEWS, in this amazing series of pictures, supplies these facts for the first time—throws open the doors of mystery, lifts the curtain of secrecy, revealing the secrets of Japan's Army and Navy for the first time!

William Fox felt that the true conditions of Japan should be revealed. On the 6,000-mile journey he sent Al Brick, the FOX NEWS cameraman, who braved death, prison and other perils to secure this colossal news beat —to present this most amazing series of informative motion pictures in history.

The Unfoldment

A GEORGE KERN PRODUCTION

A fine audience feature of genuine entertainment value, "The Unfoldment" is one of the out-standing pictures of the year for the biggest and smallest theatres.

Good acting, little touches of wistfulness and flashes of fine humor intensify the emotional appeal of its dramatic story, wherein a beautiful girl makes this old world a better place in which to live.

"The Unfoldment" is superb in its inspirational climax and has that quality which creates its own advertising by word of mouth.

Your second day will be even bigger than the first. A truly big picture in every respect.

The Good Things of—

A weekly, short feature novelty, illustrating in many ways the best jokes, stories and cartoons "hand-picked" from the world's most famous humorous weekly—"Life."

Briefly, this is the sum and substance of "The Good Things of Life"—the short reel subject of spice and action that will set millions of tongues a'tingling before many moons slip by.

Snappily illustrated jokes contributed by such eminent humorists as George Ade, Wallace Irwin, Walt Mason, Caroline Wells, Oliver Herford, Meredith Nicholson and Don Marquis. Animated cartoons and paintings by world-famous artists, including Charles Dana Gibson, Coles Phillips, F. X. Leyendecker, Maxfield Parrish, H. T. Webster and others of note.

"The Good Things of Life" is a big little feature in every sense of the word. The best brains in the field devoted to amusing and entertaining the public guarantee sure-fire humor and entertainment of a consistent high quality.

"Life," the magazine, is going to co-operate extensively in providing publicity for "The Good Things of Life," and its hundreds of thousands of readers throughout the country will have their attention constantly called to this weekly release. Arrangements are under way with the newspapers in every city for the same purpose.

No other short release on the market can compare with "The Good Things of Life." It's a real money maker—every week.

VANITY NUMBER

The Finishing Touch

"One of the 6 Best Pictures!"

Photoplay Magazine lists "Stardust" in its selection of the finest pictures of the mouth.

Here's their review word for word:

We didn't expect this to be a very good picture. For one thing, it wouldn't be Fannie Hurst's Cosmopolitan Magazine story; for another, we thought Hope Hampton, the star, dramatically inadequate for the exacting rôle of Lily Becker. We were wrong, and we are glad to admit it.

Hobart Henley and Hope Hampton have here a picture that is pretty nearly great. It has caught the spirit if not the form of the Hurst story of modern womanhood; it is excellently scenarioized, dramatically directed and amazingly acted.

This is, we think, due to the co-operation of director, star and cast.

Hope Hampton will give you the surprise of your life. She is Lily. She is perfect in the part. She does some real acting, she sacrifices her close-ups to the good of the narrative, and her beauty was never more pronounced. She is a star in reality now.

James Rennie's sense of humor saves a commonplace part; he is as handsome as a leading man is supposed to be, but he is more than that. He makes you want to see him in a stellar rôle.

The celebration of the Rivoli's fourth anniversary is made merry this week by the latest Buster Keaton comedy, "The Playhouse." This piece of romping absurdity is the brightest and most ingenious thing Mr. Keaton has done. For example, it uses multiple exposure to the limit to permit the solemn, but nevertheless subtle, comedian to be everybody in a show within the show, persons in the audience, players in the orchestra, performers, stage hands and theatre staff—until he wakes up and his troubles begin. Keaton is one of the few really accomplished clowns of the screen, constitutionally comic, it seems, and never more so than in "The Playhouse." And he is able to give his best because of the skillful direction of the picture.

Mr. Hays Accepts

THROUGH an announcement made by President Harding the country at large became aware that Will H. Hays, postmaster general of the United States, is to resign from the Cabinet and accept the leadership of the new producers' and distributors' organization.

We published several weeks ago our impression that Mr. Hays would take the job, because it has size to it rather than because the salary will be adequate. Then came President Harding's announcement in Washington, and this week the actual signing of the contract. It is definitely stated that Mr. Hays will begin his new duties on March 4.

Already there is evidence of the wisdom of the choice. Take the daily newspapers, for instance. They reported the story of the signing of the contract, and the taking of pictures and the informal feast that followed, with just as much care as if the Reformers and the Censors were having a party. The news columns actually were human to the screen.

This is a straw which may show the direction of the wind, but better and finer, bigger and more important, is the character, ability and standing of Will H. Hays. His first statement after acceptance contained these significant words: "The purposes of this association will be to attain and to maintain the highest possible standard of moving picture production and to develop to the highest degree the moral and educational value of the industry."

This is a statement that is as simple and direct as words can make it. It tells the story and gives the message, and it is without frill or fancy.

And then he adds: "I believe in the earnestness and integrity of their determination to carry out these purposes and am convinced of the possibilities of very large plan and successful consummation."

There is a definite purpose, a complete co-operation and a full understanding at the outset and the beginning is splendid. We have an earnest regard for the importance of the new condition. We believe the entire industry, as well as the producers and distributors, will profit by the situation. It seems to clear the air and give definite form to the purposes of the forward-looking men of our business.

We venture thus early to congratulate the industry on the Hays leadership. It's not a speculation. It's a proved thing of character. And we also congratulate Mr. Hays on having accepted a bigger job than that of Postmaster General of the United States.

High Spots in the Week's News

AS predicted months ago by Moving Picture World, the distributors' test of the anti-deposit bill in Nebraska will be made in the courts. Goldwyn brings the action against the state attorney general, and intervening petitions are filed by other large distributing concerns. The M. P. T. O. A. is preparing to wage a counter-offensive in favor of the present law, which stipulates that advance money on pictures be placed in a trust fund and not used by the distributor in an investment way. It promises to be a big battle that will require long legal action to settle. The plaintiff alleges that the law is unconstitutional.

The new Canadian Government promises to repeal the "Marking Act," which provided the stamping on goods of the name of the country in which they were made.

Harry Carey denies the rumor that he has arranged to distribute future pictures in the state right market, saying he has made no plans at all as yet.

The report of the New York Motion Picture Commission for the first five months of its existence reveals its desire to have for spending about $64,000 more than allotted it for the first year. While it admits the necessity for few eliminations, saying that films are generally very good, yet it explains this condition by claiming its efforts have caused the improvement. The report asks for an increase of the commission's powers by legislative action.

The M. P. T. O. A. disclaims any hand in the appointment of Will Hays as head of the motion picture industry at a supposed salary of $150,000. The meeting at which this announcement was made occurred in Washington, D. C., January 12. Plans were made for the annual convention in May.

The judiciary committee of the House of Representatives, Columbia, S. C., is considering a censorship bill that is designed primarily to be a revenue-raising measure. Representatives of the Southern Enterprises have been lobbying against it, and members of the M. P. T. O. A. will take a hand in the opposition.

Hays Will Head Picture Organization; Contract Signed Wednesday in New York

Harding Permits Resignation from Cabinet—Begins New Work After March 4

POSTMASTER-GENERAL WILL H. HAYS has formally announced acceptance of the position of president of an organization of producers and distributors. He signed the contract Wednesday evening, January 18, and will begin work after March 4, his resignation from President Harding's Cabinet having been approved, regretfully, by the chief executive. Mr. Hays wrote the following statement for the press:

"I have signed a contract to serve as the executive head of a national association of motion picture producers and distributors which will be formed.

"The purposes of this association will be to attain and to maintain the highest possible standard of motion picture production and to develop to the highest possible degree the moral and educational value of the industry.

"I believe in the earnestness and integrity of their determination to carry out those purposes and am convinced of the possibilities of very large plans and successful consummation.

"My service will begin immediately after March 4, next.

"WILL H. HAYS."

The decision was reached at a dinner of thirty covers given Mr. Hays at Delmonico's, New York City, Wednesday evening. Those present were William Fox and Adolph Zukor, who sat on either hand of the guest; Marcus Loew, R. G. Cole, Lewis J. Selznick, Percy L. Waters, Carl Laemmle, John D. Williams, Samuel Goldwyn, W. R. Sheehan, T. B. De Witt, Myron Selznick, R. H. Cochrane, A. Herman, Robert Leiber, Nathan Burkan, A. H. T. Banshaff, L. Lehar, Gabriel Hess, W. E. Atkinson, Arthur Brisbane, Francis A. Gugger, C. C. Pettijohn, J. Robert Rubin, J. M. Quinn, Courtland Smith and Hinckle Hays. Pathe, Associated First National, Vitagraph and the M. P. T. O. A. were not represented at the dinner.

The statement of the committee in charge of forming the new organization was given out with that of Mr. Hays, just before the dinner, and reads as follows:

"It is with the greatest satisfaction and pride that we, who have represented the motion picture industry in the negotiations with Postmaster-General Hays, announce that immediately after March 4, 1922, Mr. Hays will be the active and directing head of a national association of motion picture producers and distributors.

"We have secured the man we know to be the best fitted to direct the industry to its predestined place of importance in the civilization of today and tomorrow.

"The public will find we will follow the leadership of Mr. Hays with that faithfulness and enthusiasm which he has never failed to inspire.

"We are both proud and happy in our association with Mr. Hays and we look forward to the future with perfect confidence."

The statement was signed by Messrs. Zukor, Fox, Loew, Selznick, Cole, Goldwyn and Laemmle.

The purpose of the dinner was to afford Mr. Hays the opportunity to meet personally all the executives in the industry and discuss a general reorganization of policies, it was announced. Before going to Delmonico's, about a dozen film executives accompanied Mr. Hays from the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel to the Fox studio, where the new leader was photographed signing a dummy contract. Mr. Hays carefully tore up the paper bearing his signature after the picture has been taken.

President Harding and Mr. Hays conferred on January 14. Following the conference, the President made the following statement:

"The Postmaster General and I have been discussing at considerable length the proposal which has been made to him to become the head of a National Association of Motion Picture Producers and Distributors," said the President. "If the arrangement proves to be, when the details are worked out, what it seems to be, I cannot well interpose any objection to Mr. Hays retiring from the Cabinet to take up a work so important. It is too great an opportunity for a helpful public service for him to refuse. I shall be more than sorry to have him retire from the Cabinet, where he has already made so fine a record, but we have agreed to look upon the situation from the broadest viewpoint and seek the highest public good."

At that time Mr. Hays announced: "With the President's consent I have decided to undertake the work suggested by the motion picture producers and distributors. No contract has been executed as yet. I am assuming, of course, that a satisfactory contract will be possible and one which will make certain the carrying out of the high purposes contemplated for this great industry."

The purging of the screen of some of the evils of which not only the public but the industry itself has complained, and the uniting of all branches of the industry for the advancement of Americanization and educational work and other subjects in which there is no competition, are among the ideas which the Postmaster General said he desires to put into effect. There is no intention of forming any combination, it was explained, which would affect the present star system or in any way tend to restrict competition, nor is there any desire on the part of the producers and distributors to interfere in the least with the exhibitors.

Following this announcement of Mr. Hays, a statement was issued, signed by the chief executives of nine film companies. It follows:

"Mr. Will H. Hays, Postmaster-General, has definitely decided to associate himself with the nation's moving picture industry, on a basis suggested by the undersigned. In order to raise to the highest point the educational and moral value of our great industry, we desired to secure the co-operation of the man best adapted to inspire public confidence and interest, as a guiding and directing mind, in all questions effecting simultaneously the public welfare, and the interests and duties of our industry.

"We know that we have secured the right man and the best man in Mr. Hays, the man selected by President Harding for the place of greatest moral and business responsibility in his cabinet. As director and supervisor of the mails, as promoter of the national service that touches daily every citizen, Mr. Hays has shown himself a master in management and good judgment.

"We represent an industry that deals directly with the entire nation, an industry destined more and more to form and influence national taste and interests, and to promote national education. We consider ourselves and our industry most fortunate in securing one whom President Harding chose, for his cabinet, as of such high ability and integrity, as to be entrusted with the nation's most important service, its universal service to the citizens. The President, in releasing Mr. Hays that he might undertake his new, nation-wide task, has expressed his appreciation of that task's importance, and the responsibilities attached to it.

"We the undersigned, are also mindful of the responsibility that weighs upon us, and we welcome, gratefully, in our work, the co-operation, advice and association of Mr. Hays. His knowledge, ability and judgment will be devoted to making of the moving picture, carrying its message direct through the eye to the brain, the complete force in spiritual, educational and moral development that it was predestined to be."

Sweeping Reorganization of Paramount Sales Department Announced by Kent

IN the interest of efficiency and to bring himself into closer association with individual sales problems, S. R. Kent, General Manager of Distribution, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has announced the following re-organization of the executive staff of the sales department:

The position of General Sales Manager is abolished and hereafter there will be three General Division Sales Managers. H. G. Ballance will be General Division Sales Manager of Division No. 1, which will include the Boston, Maine, New Haven, New York, Albany, Philadelphia, Washington and Buffalo offices.

George W. Weeks, formerly general manager of Famous Lasky Film Service, Ltd., of Canada, becomes General Division Sales Manager of Division No. 2, which will include the offices in Canada and the Detroit, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Chicago, Milwaukee, Cincinnati and Indianapolis exchanges.

G. E. Akers, formerly Assistant General Sales Manager, is temporarily assigned as General Division Sales Manager of Division No. 3, which will include Minneapolis, Des Moines, Omaha, Kansas City, St. Louis, Salt Lake City, Denver, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle and Portland, Ore.

H. E. Elder, formerly Assistant General Sales Manager, is temporarily assigned as Special Representative in charge of the Indianapolis District, succeeding F. C. Creswell, who has been temporarily assigned to important duties connected with the new plans of organization.

In the absence of Mr. Kent, who will assume the responsibilities of General Sales Manager in addition to those of General Manager of Distribution and is frequently obliged to be out in the field, the home office sales organization will be operated by a Sales Cabinet consisting of H. G. Ballance, George W. Weeks, G. E. Akers, F. V. Chamberlain, Jerome Beatty and Claud Saunders.

Prizma Wins Patent Case

The patent office interference, obtained by A. Hernandez-Mejia in 1918, with the Kelley patent owned by Prizma, Inc., was on January 3 finally decided in favor of William V. D. Kelley, technical advisor of Prizma, by the unanimous decision of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia. The cause of the controversy relates to methods of making double-coated positive motion picture film in natural colors, and the product itself.

Ince Getting Replies

Editors everywhere are evincing a great interest in the world survey instituted by Thomas H. Ince as a means to ascertain just what the public really wants in the way of motion pictures. The questionnaires which recently left the Thomas H. Ince studios to editors in the United States, Europe, South America, Australia, Canada, Mexico and the American insular possessions, have already started on their return journey.

Nebraska Anti-Deposit Law Is Attacked by Distributors as Unconstitutional

Goldwyn Files Suit Against State Attorney General and Is Granted Temporary Injunction by Federal Court at Omaha—M. P. T. O. A. Active in Support of Law, Which Was at First Ignored

(Special to Moving Picture World)
Omaha, Jan. 17.

THE Goldwyn Distributing Corporation has brought suit in the federal court at Omaha, Nebr., against Clarence A. Davis, attorney general of the state, and Abel V. Shotwell, county attorney of Douglas County, in which Omaha is located, asking an injunction restraining them from enforcing the anti-deposit law passed by the Nebraska Legislature at its last session. Intervening petitions have been filed by the other large distributing concerns.

Indications are that the battle will hold a big place in motion picture history in the Middle West, if not in the entire nation, deciding whether or not the deposit plan practiced by distributors since the beginning of the industry can be prohibited by law.

Federal Judge Woodrough has granted a temporary injunction restraining the officials from enforcing the law. The date for the hearing on a permanent interlocutory injunction has not been set, but indications are it will be held in March, when next the federal court convenes.

The suit is set forth in an elaborate printed petition covering more than a dozen legal-cap pages. William Marston Seabury, 120 Broadway, New York, and Arthur Mullen, prominent attorney of Nebraska, are the lawyers for the distributors.

Many "Irresponsible" Exhibitors

The petition states that Goldwyn is acting in its own behalf and in behalf of all other distributors of motion pictures in Nebraska, adding that there are 15,000 picture theatres in the country and 665 in the territory for which Omaha is the distributing center.

Saying that the success of the distribution industry depends upon the exact and punctual performance of contracts by exhibitors, the petition declares that it would seriously injure and jeopardize the industry if the exhibitors are relieved from responsibility in the manner proscribed by the Nebraska law.

There are many exhibitors, recites the petition, particularly in the smaller towns who have little or no means and who are entirely irresponsible. They have inflicted upon the distributors a great number of petty abuses, it adds, mentioning in particular the practices of refusing to accept film for which they have contracted and which is sent to them cash on delivery, returning it marked "transportation collect" to the exchanges, surreptitiously "bicycling" film, and damaging film by inadequate projection equipment.

Points in Law Questioned

The Goldwyn exchange also has many contracts which were in force before the anti-deposit law was approved, says the petition, which then recites the parts of the law under discussion. These sections of the law read:

Section 1. Deposits held in trust.—Whatever money shall be deposited or advanced as security on a contract for the use or rental of motion picture films, reels or views, and to secure the performance of the contract or to be applied to payments upon such contract when due, such money, with interest accruing thereon, if any, until repaid or so applied, shall continue to be the money of the person, association, or corporation making such deposit or advance and shall be a trust fund in the possession of the person, association or corporation with whom such deposit or advance shall be made, and shall be deposited in a bank or trust company, within the State of Nebraska, and shall not be mingled with other funds or become an asset of such trustee.

Sec. 2. Contracts, when void.—Any provision of a contract whereby a person, association or corporation, who has deposited or advanced money on a contract for the use or rental of motion picture films, reels, or views as personal property waives any provision of Section 1 of this Act, is void.

Approved April 8, 1921.

Such an act, alleges the petition, attempts to create a constructive trust without complying with the usual requirements necessary for the creation of such a trust, or the imposition of such an involuntary trusteeship. The petition alleges that the state, by the approval of such a law, had adjudged that money which is the property of Goldwyn should become the property of another, and that an act is judicial and not legislative, and therefore without effect.

Impossible of Accomplishment

Further, the petition says it is impossible to invest funds so received so that they will earn interest. The requirement that such funds be deposited within Nebraska interferes with the national government, says the petition, because the deposits are sent regularly to the home office in New York City, and this is interstate commerce. The wording of the law requires a separate depository for each deposit, says the petition, and this is obviously impossible of accomplishment.

If the distributor failed to observe any one or more of these requirements, he would be subject to such punishment as not more than seven and not less than one year in the state prison if the deposit is $35 or more, and this is an injustice, according to the petition.

Say It Is Unconstitutional

The chief attack against the Nebraska law is on the ground that it is unconstitutional under the Constitution of the Plan Another Producer-Distributor Co-operative Releasing Organization

DAME RUMOR is again very active and one of her latest exploits has to do with a new producer-exhibitor combination, including first run exhibitors who will co-operate with prominent directors handling the product along lines similar to First National.

It appears to be the plan to make this organization nation-wide in scope and Richard A. Rowland is being referred to as the probable president. It is further rumored that a number of directors, some of whom are of especial prominence, will be affiliated with this organization, of which the executive body will consist of representatives from each state or section of the country.

Inquiry at Rowland's offices brought forth the information that Mr. Rowland is at present in Pittsburgh, and while it was said he had such a plan under consideration for some time no definite information regarding its present status could be furnished.

United States. Various parts of the national Constitution are quoted, and separate paragraphs point out the violations to be as follows:

1. That the law imposes a burden upon and interference with interstate commerce and that such action can be taken only by the national Congress.
2. That it deprives Goldwyn of liberty and property without due process of law.
3. That it denies the distributor equal protection of law and is an unjust discrimination against him.
4. That it impairs the obligation existing under contracts already existing when the law was passed and approved.
5. That the penalties are unreasonable and oppressive, in violation of the national Constitution.

Summarizing all of these alleged violations, the petition states that the distributors' rights under the Constitution are about to be violated and that the business will be irreparably injured.

Intervening Petitions

Concluding, the petition asks that the objectionable parts of the law as quoted in the foregoing be adjudged to be invalid and that the law enforcement officials be enjoined from taking any steps to enforce the law. It asks that the federal court convene three federal judges and require the governor, attorney general and county attorney to show cause why the distributors should not have an interlocutory injunction. It concludes with a demand for a temporary restraining order, which was promptly granted until such time as a permanent hearing can be held.

A petition in intervention, supporting the allegations of the Goldwyn petition, has been filed by Vitagraph, Metro, Select, Realart and Famous Players-Lasky. A second petition in intervention has been filed by the Omaha Film Board of Trade and signed by local exchange managers, including Thomas E. Delaney, Vitagraph; Charles R. Osborn, Metro; S. T. O'Brien, Realart; Herbert I. Krauss, Famous Players-Lasky; Sidney Meyer, Fox; Charles W. Taylor, Pathe, and Harry Lefholtz, Universal.

The petitioners filed an undertaking of $5,000 as evidence of good faith at the time the temporary injunction, now in force, was granted.

Great Interest Manifested

The law was approved April 8, 1921. There was no attempt made to comply with it on the part of the exchanges, and no effort was made by the attorney general's office to enforce it until in the fall of 1921. At that time he wrote to the exchanges telling them that violations of the law had been called to his attention and that it was his intention to enforce the law.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Nebraska are taking a great interest in the outcome of the suit filed by Goldwyn. Various exhibitors have been asked by the attorney general's office for information necessary in preparation of the suit, and such information has been readily furnished, with an offer to supply any other help that might be desired.

Attorney Mullen told a representative of this magazine the other day that the hearing on the permanent injunction will no doubt come in March.

Stuart Gould, executive secretary of the M. P. T. O. A. in Nebraska, says New York and Missouri have laws similar to the one in Nebraska, but that the middle western state has been selected as the battle field to decide once and for all whether such a regulation of the methods of distributors shall be legal. He says that there is great interest throughout the whole country in the Nebraska situation.

Wid Gunning Completes Reorganization and Turns His Attention to Production

WID GUNNING has once more turned his attention to production, leaving the running of his sales machine in the hands of the efficient organization he has built, and important production announcements will soon be forthcoming, says Robert E. Welsh, of that company.

All through the summer, continues the statement from Mr. Welsh, Mr. Gunning was devoting his entire attention to production, as that was his original intention in the organization of the company which he financed and to which he brought the two Lois Weber productions, "The Blot" and "What Do Men Want," and the production "Our Mutual Friend." Since arriving in New York he has devoted his time to the running of the sales machine and the working out of policies for which the organization was formed.

Now that the reorganization has been completed, Mr. Gunning has once more been able to turn his energies to the matter of selecting productions, and has spent all of his evenings for many weeks in the projection room viewing product submitted to his organization. Already several subjects have been selected for spring release.

Mr. Gunning has also been actively engaged in association with banking interests in New York and California in arranging for the financing of independent directors, announces Mr. Welsh, stating that "Under the arrangements being worked out these directors would be, in every way, their own bosses with the additional advantage of an association which would give them permission to call on Mr. Gunning, as advisory counsel, for judgment of story construction and general production detail.

Mr. Welsh further states that the financial interests which are now becoming particularly interested in financing independent production, have turned to Wid because of the efficient and fundamentally sound sales plan he has put into operation, because of the high character and ability of the personnel of the organization and because in financing the directors selected by Mr. Gunning they have the benefit of his years of experience and intimate contact with all of the directors of film production.

Three Reels Cut from "Foolish Wives" Which Will Be Released in Ten Reels

UNIVERSAL announces the "Foolish Wives" which was presented the first night of the showing at the Central Theatre, New York, in fifteen reels has been cut to twelve reels and it is planned to cut it to ten reels which will be the final form in which it will be released to exhibitors.

The statement adds that as originally shown the film contained much that was experimental, and it was too long, but that a definite date had been set and President Carl Laemmle insisted on the presentation on that date. After eliminating from the 360 reels shot, all retakes and duplicate scenes there remained 150 reels. Erich Von Stroheim during four months' work cut this down to 30 reels, then Arthur Ripley, and Edward A. Sowders who assisted Von Stroheim in the direction, tackled the job under the supervision of Julius Stern. It was a big job and Ripley broke down and was confined to his bed after the opening.

Mr. Stern announces that by alternately working with the cutters and observing the way they were received by the audiences already three reels have been eliminated; few changes have been made in the first part, but the second part has been undergoing a change, whole sequences have been tried out, incorporated or discarded, and before the end of the present week it is expected it will be cut to ten reels.

New Realart Exchange

Announcement is made from the home office of United Artists Corporation of the opening of a new exchange at Omaha, Neb., and the appointment of Samuel Vorzimer as manager of this branch.

Censorship Costs Producers $158,085 in Five Months, and Censors Want More

Report Admits Few Films Violate Statute, and Amendments Are Asked

IN five months, motion picture censorship in New York State has cost producers the sum of $158,085.97. This represents only one feature attendant upon censorship as it is revealed in the report just submitted by New York State Motion Picture Commission to Governor Miller. During the same five months, from August 1 to December 31, the commission spent $36,687.80, of which $16,535.26 went for personal service, while traveling expenses amounted to $4,012.29; rent, $2,291.65; projection, $1,818.75; permit leaders, $3,624.98, and license leaders the sum of $2,494,04.

The report closes with the following significant sentence:

"The appropriation made for the commission at the last session of the legislature, evidently without any precedent to guide it or understanding as to the magnitude of the work, will be insufficient for the activities of the year, and if the work is to be carried on in accordance with our understanding of its importance, a larger appropriation will be necessary for the ensuing year."

Five Recommendations

The report carries with it five recommendations in the way of amendments to the present law. These are:

The law to be amended so as to authorize the commission to furnish the film for the exhibition of the serial number as a part of the license or permit leader.

The law to be amended, giving the commission power to refuse the granting of a license or permit for films which contain unpatriotic or seditious features or matter.

The statute to be amended in such manner as to clearly define the educational, scientific, religious or charitable films, making clear what films are exempt from the payment of the required fee.

The law to be amended so as to make clear the right of the commission to charge producers of films which are exempt from payment of the fee, a price sufficient to reimburse the state for the permit or license leader.

The law to be amended so as to empower the commission to retain the fee paid for the original of a film condemned in its entirety, for the purpose of reimbursing the state, partially, for the expense it has incurred in reviewing the film.

A Voluminous Report

The report of the commission covers ten single-spaced typewritten pages. While it was the original intention of the commission to submit its report to the legislature, a closed persual of the law revealed that it should be submitted to the governor direct. While the report reached the hands of Governor Miller last Friday, it was not made public until late Monday afternoon, when copies were handed out from the Albany bureau of the commission.

And now as to what the commission has done during the five months to warrant expenses of a sixth of a million to producers, and of approximately $37,000 to the state.

During the five months, the commission has passed upon 3,630 reels. All told, it has granted without examination, a total of 6,194 permits. It has issued 1,330 licenses and approved 1,170 films without eliminations. There have been 160 films from which eliminations were made during the five months, and five features were condemned in their entirety, while scenes eliminated numbered 477 and titles eliminated numbered 268.

Eighty-five eliminations were made on the grounds of indecency, thirty-five because of inhuman scenes, while fifty-four, it is alleged, tended to incite crime and sixty-one were of the sort which, had they been shown, would have corrupted morals, with five claimed as sacrilegious.

Dramas suffered the most. From these the commission in five months has made eighty-one eliminations, while the shears of the censor have been felt on 43 comedies, twenty comedy-dramas, seven serials, four news reels, three educational and two cartoons. From the decisions of the commission sixteen appeals were taken by the applicants, asking for a review by the entire commission.

Much of the introductory matter to the report concerns its creation, including an argument for the location of the office in New York City and the events leading up to the opening of the office on August 1. There is a significant sentence in the introduction which reads as follows:

Censors Want $64,265 More

THE New York State Motion Picture Commission figures that its running expenses this year will mount to $134,265, or $64,265 more than was appropriated last year for the expenses of the commission from August 1, on. A good part of this increase, or at least approximately one-half of it, comes about through a request for $30,000 to meet the salaries of twelve inspectors and reviewers, entirely new positions, and which it is claimed are needed.

The commission has filed its request in connection with the annual state budget. With one or two minor exceptions, there are no requests for any increases in salaries. The commissioners themselves will continue to receive $7,500 each, but the budget contains a request for two deputy commissioners at $4,000 each, which means that in all probability another deputy will shortly be appointed for reviewing pictures, as one of these deputies was named last fall.

In the way of expenses incurred in the projecting of films, there is an item of $7,500. At the present time, the commission has an arrangement whereby it pays so much for each film run. When the commission was organized it was figured that such an arrangement would be preferable to the leasing of another room and the installation of the necessary equipment, together with the salary of a projectionist who might be busy for only a short time each day, and yet who would naturally enough demand the union wage scale.

That the commission intends to broaden its activities is very evident from the fact that in place of the fifteen employes, provision has been made in the budget for twenty-eight, including the twelve which is it proposed to add as inspectors and reviewers.

During the past five months the receipts of the commission have been as follows:

	License	Permit	Seal—No Fee	Receipts
August	$10,312.00	$49,734.00	———	$60,046.00
September	9,293.00	44,756.00	———	54,049.00
October	8,229.00	7,948.00	$58.00	16,235.00
November	12,948.00	1,563.00	62.00	14.573.00
December	11,220.00	1,620.00	74.50	12,914.50
	$52,002.00	$105,621.00	$194.50	$157,817.50
Interest				268.47
Total				$158,085.97

"Comparatively few of the films presented violate the standards fixed by the statute."

Describes Methods

Continuing, in a description as to the methods employed to identify licensed films, the report takes up the matter of projection, stating that 50 cents a reel is being paid to operators of projection rooms in the same building where the commission is located. This, it is claimed, is not only economical but also serves to relieve the state of the responsibility of having in its possession, and caring for, films which are in some instances of great value.

"We have found," say the commissioners in their report to the governor, "that the main violations during the first two or three months arose from an ignorance of the law and the requirements of the commission. The number of violations, we are satisfied, has materially decreased as the producers and exhibitors have become familiar with the statute and the commissions requirements. There has been a desire, we are satisfied, on the part of the producers as a class, and particularly the exhibitors, to co-operate with the commission in its work.

Allege Transferring of Seals

"There are, however, some wilful violations of the law and certain exchanges, undoubtedly in connivance with some of the producers, have undertaken to escape the payment of the fee which the law prescribes, by the transferring of seals and the interchanging of the serial numbers, and also by exhibiting pictures for which neither a license nor permit has been issued. We feel that the trade has now had sufficient time to comply with the statute and that the same should be vigorously enforced. It will, however, be necessary to provide adequate inspection in order to accomplish this result."

Continuing, the commissioners tell what a mammoth industry the motion picture has become; that it is the universal language; that there is no avenue known through which a message can be conveyed to so many people, and that as a moulder of public opinion it is without an equal; that the motion picture does more to influence the lives of the people than all the newspapers, books and magazines put together, etc., etc.

In explanation, the commission goes on to say that such observations on the part of its three members are made solely to show the necessity for clean and wholesome pictures on the screen.

See Material Improvement

Continuing, the report says:

"In this connection, it might be stated that since the organization of the commission, there has been a material improvement in the films presented for examination and license. The leaders in the industry are coming to recognize that merit in pictures brings its reward the same as in other fields of endeavor.

"It has been demonstrated to the satisfaction of the producer, that clean and wholesome pictures are the ones which bring the largest financial return, and while there are a few producers who evidently desire to cater to the lower instincts of the human race and present unclean, immoral and salacious films, yet we are glad to report that this number is in the great minority. The class of producers last referred to fail recognize the responsibility which they owe society and are only actuated by greed.

Would Repeal Censorship

A bill for the repeal of the Clayton-Lusk censorship act has been introduced in the New York Legislature by Assemblyman Lewis A. Cuvillier and has been referred to the ways and means committee. It is believed to be satisfactory to all branches of the industry; the N. A. M. P. I. and American Federation of Labor have already approved it, and the M. P. T. O. A. is expected to.

"We regret very much that many of the producers of films seem to deem it necessary or wise to incorporate in films in such a marked degree the vices of the human race, and also to depict violations of law in the commission of various crimes. The commission endeavors to enforce the law concerning films of this character and to discourage their exhibitions.

Has Regulated Advertising

"The commission is also given jurisdiction over the advertising matter used by producers and distributors of films, and the commission has not been unmindful of its duty in this respect and has in so far as it has been able, with its present force of employes, inspected and regulated the advertising matter sought to be used.

"While it will be some period of time before all of the unclean or questionable films can be removed from the screen, owing to the fact that many thousands of films were on the screen prior to August 1, and that it is a physical impossibility to examine them within a short period of time, yet the commission has undertaken to recall films for review which are objectionable and for which permits have been issued, in an attempt to purge the objectionable features or condemn such as violate the statutes."

An entire page is geven to discussing educational films. Concerning these, the commission says in part:

Educational Films

"We are happy to state that a decided impetus has been given to the production of classes of films which are purely educational. Among these films are those portraying the lives and works of the various authors. Patriotic films are being produced which can be used very effectively in Americanization work. The producers of films of this character should be encouraged in every possible way for they are undertaking a great work. They are, however, exhibited in theatres, and by the construction on the part of the Attorney general, it is questionable whether producers of films of this character should be required to pay the fee. The statute in this respect must be clarified."

In the way of inspection the commission admits that it has not been able to do much mainly by reason of the fact that it has not the force to do the work. The report states that a suggestion has been made that each theatre in New York state be required to make a daily report as to whether or not the films which it runs carry the license or permit numbers The commission is against this scheme on the grounds that the exhibitors would not care to become informers against the producer or an exchange.

Neither is the commission in favor of a system of voluntary inspection, such as has been talked. This system, according to the report, has proved unsatisfactory, because as a general run, such inspectors generally attend the best theatres and soon become weary of their task.

Continuing, the commission says:

"The commission is satisfied that some of the exchanges and exhibitors have adopted the practice of removing the license or permit leaders from the films, upon which they were intended to be used, and using them on other films, and we are also satisfied that numbers have been exhibited upon films other than those for which they were issued. These violations have led us to the conclusion that the serial number should be made a part of the identification matter furnished by the state."

In conclusion, the report goes on to say:

"The industry in general has, we think, intended to, and has co-operated with us in our work. This is particularly true of the exhibitors. We feel that great results have already been accomplished by the commission. It may be partially due to a determination on the part of the producers to eliminate abuses which have crept into the industry and also partially due to the fact that the commission had been created and has undertaken the important duties assigned to it. The mere fact of the existence of the commission has had a very salutary effect, and producers as fast as the standards required by the commission could be accurately gauged, have in many instances deleted their films. The determination of just what constitutes decency or indecency constitutes a large part of the difficult work which the commission has performed.

"The producers themselves recognize the fact that every substantial improvement in the character of the films presented is already apparent, but those opposed to censorship or regulation attribute

England Not Suitable for Production Purposes, Says Myron Selznick; English Would Like to See Sweden Succeed America as World's Film Centre

By T. S. da PONTE

MYRON SELZNICK, vice-president in charge of production of the Selznick Company, back from Europe, brings news of having arranged for the Selznick organization to distribute its pictures in the British Isles through Pathe Freres Cinema Co., Ltd., of England. He also brought back his impressions of England in general and as a place to produce pictures.

To sum up his ideas in regard to the latter, England is altogether "impossible." "I wouldn't try to make pictures in England under any circumstances," Mr. Selznick said. "In the first place the climate is all against it, and in the second place there are no locations or scenes which lend themselves particularly to the making of pictures. In some places there are beautiful views along the countryside, but they are no more lovely nor are there as many to be found as in places on the Continent or in this country.

"Most of the English picture organizations are transferring their producing centers to Italy and the Riviera. There they find the climate and other conditions conducive to the making of better pictures than they obtain in their own country.

"In England there is a very antagonistic feeling against everything in America and, particularly, on the part of the English producers, against American films. They are talking there of Sweden succeeding America as the world's film centre. Inasmuch as they themselves, can't out-do America they are anxious to see any other country prosper in America's stead.

"They are even welcoming German films with open arms and giving Germany every encouragement in an effort to down America—and this in spite of the fact the feeling against Germany and everything German was so intense following the war. But in spite of the antagonism to America the pictures made in this country are constantly gaining headway in England because they are the best shown there, and in fact have almost monopolized the market."

Mr. Selznick, while in England signed Evelyn Laye, a noted English beauty and actress, to a contract, and she will come to this country to take the leading part in the filmization of a story which Mr. Selznick bought while abroad. He is very enthusiastic regarding the possibilities which this story holds as a screen production, and, to use his own words: "Someone connected with another company is sure to get fired for not buying this story when he had the opportunity before I did. I can't understand how he passed it up." Miss Laye, who will play in the lead, is at present acting in "The Fun of the Fayre," in one of the biggest "hits" of the present day in England.

There is a possibility of the Selznick company making some pictures in California, Mr. Selznick said. The matter is under contemplation and will be decided in about a week. "The way I would like to run things would be to make one or two on the coast, and then one or two in the East," he stated.

Speaking of the money American pictures are able to make in Europe, Mr. Selznick stated that "in France they haven't the money to pay big prices for American productions and in England they won't in spite of the high prices the theatres charge for admissions. Why even in the second-rate theatres in England, seating only three or four hundred persons, the average admission fee is the equivalent of eighty cents in American money."

Mr. Selznick was on board ship on his was back to America when the Irish question was settled. "You see," he said laughingly, "I had no hand in settling that."

Asked as to what effect the settlement would have on the film industry he stated that he thought it would in a measure "open up" Ireland to pictures, but that he did not know how profitable the market would be.

Kunsky's Capitol Theatre in Detroit Opens, Country's Fifth Largest House

The crowning achievement in the career of John H. Kunsky, of Detroit, was reached January 12 when the Capitol Theatre was opened. A line of people, more than five blocks long, three abreast, waiting for the doors to open and at six o'clock the line was more than a block, despite the drop in the temperature to about 14 above zero, with a cold wind, and the line never broke until the cashier stopped selling tickets after ten o'clock.

Many notables of Detroit, and men prominent in the film industry, were present. A motion picture of the audience and crowd outside were taken and shown before the audience left the theatre.

Then came the show—without any hitch. The orchestra, 45 men, under the direction of Eduart Werner, gave a splendid rendition of Tschaikowsky's symphony "1812." The pictures shown were Pathe News, Pathe Review, Bruce Scenic, then the First National feature, "The Lotus Eater," ending up with a Snub Pollard comedy.

Estelle Carey, a soprano, who has been heard many times before at the Madison, rendered two songs. Another vocal number was rendered by Orville Griffith and Walter Smith, well known in Detroit musical circles.

The Capitol Theatre is located on Broadway and extends through to Madison avenue. It is just a stone's throw from Grand Circus Park and the Detroit Athletic Club. Its cost is over two million dollars, including the property. The main entrance is on Broadway. The decorations are in blue and gold with a dash of old Italian rose. Everywhere these colors predominate—in the vaulted ceiling, supported by massive columns and arches; in the broad panels above the doors that give entrance to the foyer; in the walls of the great staircase off to the right, and the single great chandelier. After you enter the foyer, your eye is attracted to a grand stairway starting to the right, half way across the promenade and giving access to a mezzanine floor. Above the mezzanine floor is the balcony. All seats in the mezzanine are boxed off and are reserved for all performances.

The promenade is 242 feet long and extends from the Broadway side through to the Madison avenue side. The Capitol is said to be the first theatre where the foyer ceiling is at the top of the house, which gives a spacious effect. The backwall of the foyer rises about 40 feet. At the first landing of the grand stairway, leading to the mezzanine, it is broken by an arch that rises nearly to the ceiling and on either side of the stairway, between it and the entrance are more arches. The wall is done in the same intermingling of blue and gold, while the arches are hung with beautiful long drapings of old Italian rose. At the base of each of the two side arches is a large, lounging davenport, also in old rose. In the panels between the arches are two attractive paintings. In fact, you'll find beautiful paintings all through the house. They represent a collection that has taken Mr. Kunsky some three years to secure. The auditorium has only large crystal chandeliers the balance of the theatre having concealed lighting. Although about 10,000 bulbs are used in lighting, about 9,900 of them are concealed. All the effects obtained are from reflected light, so that there is no glare in any part of the house.

The Capitol is said to be the fifth largest theatre in the United States and stands as a monument to John H. Kunsky, and George W. Trendle, his general manager.

William Brandt Sees a Necessity For Radical and Quick Action in Reducing Motion Picture Rentals

THE following statement was issued by William Brandt, president of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce of New York City:

"I am not an alarmist, but unless something radical is done and done real soon in reducing film prices to exhibitors, I predict that before the first day of summer arrives over 75 per cent of the theatres in this territory will be obliged to close their doors.

"The difference in the present exhibition values which the exhibitors are obliged to pay in their respective territories, and the receipts at the box office, are so far apart and their losses so heavy, that unless some change is made real soon they will not be able to continue to lose the huge amount of money which they are obliged to at present.

"The tremendous depression in this business started when the exhibitors of this territory had the poorest summer of their existence. The season opened in September with very slight gains over the summer business, but the film rentals, instead of decreasing in accordance with the decrease at the box office, in practically every instance were increased. Many exhibitors paid exorbitant prices for the best attractions they could obtain, hoping, thereby, to stimulate and improve business, and while in some instances business was stimulated, yet the general run was far below the average house expense.

"Many exhibitors held on desperately, hoping that Christmas week would cause a splurge the effects of which would carry good business on for the balance of the season, but here again they were sadly disappointed, for the result of the Christmas holidays were the worst in many years, due to unusually cold weather and other causes. The future holds no brighter prospects. The New York territory in its various component parts, represents practically every territory of the country.

"We have our manufacturing district, where the manufacturers have been closed by the score. We have in Brooklyn the navy yards, which have laid off 14,000 men. The sugar refineries have dispensed with the services of 4,000 men within the last two weeks. The ship repair yards of South Brooklyn have laid off 24,000 men. The cloak and suit industry is in the throes of a general strike, with 50,000 or more people out of employment.

These are only items at random which reflect the true economic conditions in this had its wages reduced, and because of this, it stands to reason, and we believe it to be so, that the theatres are doing the poorest business of their career, and nevertheless film rentals are just as high as during the peak days of the war, and as a matter of fact, considerably higher on special attractions.

"Bread is now being sold for 5c a loaf. Sugar is being sold for 4½c a pound. Clothing, furniture and other commodities have come down in proportion, but the film rentals are still in the same position where they originally were when they were the highest.

"I am serving notice upon the whole industry that a change must come at once. We are skating on very thin ice, and if we don't want to fall through we must readjust our conditions just the same as every other industry has been obliged to do. Time is of the essence and speed is earnestly required."

Fattening Hogs Means Money for Iowa and Nebraska Farmers and Film Business Should Pick Up

ELIMINATING any tendency to exaggerate, it can be said that the rock-bottom of business depression in the middle western states of Iowa and Nebraska has just about passed. At any rate, business can't be worse, and if the hogs keep getting fatter, there'll be some cash available soon and that'll mean the farmers will bring their families to the "movies."

Money, in the purely agricultural towns, has been about as scarce as hen's teeth—there hasn't been any. There has been plenty of corn, but it wouldn't sell at cost. The only way Mr. Farmer can make his corn pay is to put it into hogs, and then sell the hogs. The hogs will be ready to sell in a very few weeks. After that—well, the small town exhibitor who has survived has certainly earned the title of a permanent business man who deserves the patronage of the public.

"I found a large number of small town theatres in Nebraska were running only one night a week, and in many places the theatres have closed entirely," said Stuart Gould, executive secretary of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Nebraska, who has just returned from a tour of all parts of the state. "Business has been better since the first of the year than it was during December, but it will be impossible for the small town man to prosper until the farmers get some ready cash.

"We are urging the small town exhibitors to hold some open dates so they can step in, book some big paying stuff and get off to a flying start when business does pick up.

"Despite the quiet condition of business I never found a small town exhibitor in Nebraska who was charging less than a quarter for admission. Admission prices are up to stay; the day of the dime show is as much history as the day of the nickelodeon.

"Another favorable indication is the interest exhibitors are taking in civic and welfare affairs. The time is arriving when the picture theatre will vie with the bank, the grocery, the drug store and the barber shop for permanency. The exhibitors throughout Nebraska are offering their theatres to the schools, the women's clubs and the chambers of commerce for free educational shows for children on Sunday mornings. If the woman's club wants to book an educational picture, the exhibitor will furnish the light, heat, operator and music, and will clean up the theatre after the kids—all for nothing. I don't know how it is elsewhere, but in Nebraska the people are coming to think quite a lot of their exhibitors and their picture houses."

C. L. Peavey, manager of the Educational Film Exchange of Iowa, agrees with Mr. Gould that business is better since the first of the year in the small town theatres, as well as in the larger places. "Our salesmen are getting new contracts much easier than they have for months," he said.

Cost of Censorship

this change to their own efforts rather than to the creation and work of the commission.

"The motion picture is already recognized as furnishing a remarkable agency for teaching in our public schools. Within a few years the motion picture will be in every public school. The sciences, particularly botany, physiology and history, can be taught successfully and in a much shorter space of time through the picture than in any other manner. The commission has in every way sought to encourage rather than discourage the producers and men connected with the industry.

"We have endeavored to classify films suitable for exhibition to children, and while there are comparatively few which can be said to be manufactured expressly for children, yet there are a great many which are suitable for adults as well as children, and a list such has been prepared by the commission.

"The work of the commission is a delicate and difficult one, for the reason that people of good character often have different standards by which their lives are regulated, so that oftentimes the question of whether a picture violates the statute is a matter of honest dispute among our best citizens."

The report was written on January 11 and was signed by all three commissioners.

M. P. T. O. A. Disclaims Any Hand in Appointment of Will Hays as Head of Industry at Salary of $150,000

MEMBERS of the board of directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America met, Thurdsay, January 12, at the Hotel Washington, Washington, D. C., to complete arrangements for their national convention in May. This convention will bring to Washington thousands of theatre owners from all parts of the United States.

During the session attention was called to a copy of the Congressional Record of Saturday, January 7, containing a report of a speech by Senator Harrison of Mississippi, to the effect that arrangements were being made with Postmaster General Will H. Hays to "be at the head of the whole motion picture industry of the country, at a salary of $150,000 a year," and suggesting the possibility of the screen being used for political propaganda.

"The theatre owner realized," it was announced, "that the success of business enterprise and the progress of the industry is dependent upon the good-will and support of all the people, comprising those of every shade of political opinion, and we desire to assure the motion picture-going public that our theatres will never be used for the advancement of partisan politics.

"No political propaganda of any kind will be permitted on our screens, except where the welfare of the theatre-going public and the progress of our industry is threatened.

"For several weeks newspaper reports indicated that an arrangement was being effected between the producing or manufacturing branch of the industry and Postmaster General Hays, through which he was to succeed William A. Brady as president of their association. As theatre owners (organized nationally in the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and comprising a membership of 12,000, representing every state in the Union) we did not feel called upon to make any public comment upon this matter until the speech of Senator Harrison was brought to our attention.

"We have no connection as theatre owners with the manufacturers of the pictures, being separate and distinct from them and controlling in every way our own division of the industry, and therefore were not concerned with Mr. Hays' accession to the head of the producing or manufacturing branch. The president of our organization receives no salary.

"If the advent of Mr. Hays or any other capable man into the manufacturers' division will correct some of the unsatisfactory business relations now prevailing, it will meet the approval of every theatre owner and real friend of the industry.

"Our only purpose in presenting this statement now is to correct the erroneous impression that the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America is in any sense a party to any agreement now under way affecting Mr. Hays. This we state that it may serve to clear up any misunderstanding which may exist and make it perfectly plain to every official and individual in the country that the owners of the motion picture theatres are separate and distinct in their relation, have no affiliation with the manufacturer or producer of pictures and therefore have in no sense been parties to the move under discussion.

"The month of November is considered a banner month in the motion picture business. Consequent to the efforts of the theatre owners to bring this form of entertainment within the reach of all the people, box office receipts were approximately $12,000,000 less in November, 1921, than in the same month in 1920, while motion picture producers exacted from motion picture theatre owners nearly $4,000,000 more for their pictures in November, 1921, than in the same month of the previous year. This fact is clearly substantiated by government reports.

"As theatre owners we have direct contact with the public. We meet and serve the people of the United States daily and in this relation we established the Public Service Department of our organization under the direction of Dr. Francis Holley, of this city, whose efforts along these lines amply prove his efficiency in promoting and extending this highly commendable work. We feel responsible to the American public to maintain the freedom of the screen in every way. We realize that the motion picture is a medium for a high order of public service, and it is our determination to keep the theatre screens of this nation so free from partisan and kindred influences as to render this wonderful visualizing force, the Screen Press of America, of supreme value to all the people of the country.

"We also want to make the theatre owner the sole judge, guided by the people of his community, of what shall appear on the screen of his theatre and we hope to be able at all times to guarantee this kind of service to the public. We, therefore stand in an independent position and would be opposed to any moves, no matter how well intended, which militate against this generally accepted American attitude."

The executive officers present were:

National President Sydney S. Cohen, New York; W. D. Burford, Aurora, Ill.; W. A. True, Hartford, Conn.; E. M. Fay, Providence, R. I.; Charles L. O'Reilly, New York; John T. Collins, Rutherford, N. J.; John Manheimer, New York; W. A. Steffes, Minneapolis, Minn.; D. A. Harris, Pittsburgh, Pa.; H. H. Lustig, Cleveland, Ohio; Edward T. Peters, Dallas, Tex.; A. R. Pramer, Omaha, Nebr.; H. B. Varner, Lexington, N. C.; M. J. O'Toole, Scranton, Pa.; C. E. Whitehurst, Baltimore, Md.; G. G. Schmidt, Indianapolis, Ind.; A. Julian Brylawski, Washington, D. C.

Half of November's Raw Stock Exports Purchased by Japan

Exports of films during November reached a total of more than $500,000, according to figures compiled by the Department of Commerce, 4,365,128 feet of unexposed film, worth $106,764, and 9,421,585 feet of exposed film, valued at $459,727, being shipped abroad during the month.

More than half of the unexposed film was taken by Japan, whose imports totaled 2,472,499 feet, valued at $63,601, the only other big importers being England, with 773,122 feet, worth $20,979, and Australia, with 449,896 feet, valued at $13,158.

In exposed film two markets took over 1,000,000 feet each, Canada importing 1,699,178 feet, valued at $84,952, and Australia 1,523,716 feet, valued at $64,166. England imported 800,362 feet, valued at $79,804, being the only other country whose imports of exposed film totaled more than $50,000.

Universal Names New Cuban Head

Beverly Griffith, whose connection with the film industry antedates the formation of the Universal, has just been appointed general manager of the Universal's Cuban exchanges, and supervising director of the several theatres on the island which Universal has leased for first-run showings of its pictures there. Charles King has resigned to accept another connection.

Experience is a good qualification for an exchange manager and Mr. Griffith has had a variety of experiences. He was one of the first men engaged for the producing plant which Universal established in California and when Universal City was "located" he was the location manager of the company. He has held down every possible job on a lot which has to do in any way with the making of pictures.

Metro Company Enters Its Biggest Year Says Atkinson Naming Future Releases

THE Metro Pictures Corporation is entering upon the most successful year of its existence ,according to William E. Atkinson, vice-president and general manager. Reports upon actual business done by exhibitors with the big productions distributed by Metro, as well as with the Metro Classic series, are what he bases his statement upon. He said this week:

"Metro means merit to the exhibitor. Upon that I found my optimism for the coming year. The past twelve months have brought to me more spontaneous reports of approval of our pictures than at any time previous in the history of the company. And while, during that period, we did put forth some remarkable screen offerings, I know quite well the record for 1922 is going to surpass them by an appreciable margin.

"The pictures with which we begin the year are indicative of the whole. We are releasing a series of brilliant Mae Murray pictures, beginning with 'Peacock Alley,' whose bookings to date exceed those of all our productions except 'The Four Horsemen.' 'Turn to the Right,' Mr. Ingram's production of the John Golden plan, will be distributed the latter part of February. And almost coincidentally will come 'Missing Husbands,' the American title of the most signal picture ever made in France. As 'L'Atlantide' it has been the sensation of Paris for months.

"I am mentioning only the first few of our offerings, which include what we believe is the best Bert Lytell picture ever made, 'The Right That Failed,' and one of Viola Dana's brightest appearances, that in 'Glass Houses.'"

A. S. Kane, Returned from Trip, Says Star Appeal Is as Strong as Ever

AFTER three weeks of travel in the South during which he escorted Charles Ray to New Orleans on the final lap of the star's journey back to Los Angeles, Arthur S. Kane returned to New York this week. One of the outstanding convictions which Mr. Kane brought back with him is the belief that the star appeal is as powerful as ever among theatre men and fans and that the star will continue to draw crowds to the box office where other attractions fail. This opinion was forcefully demonstrated to Mr. Kane during his visits to many cities by the reception accorded the star everywhere and by discussions with leading exhibitors regarding the kind of picture that patrons want to see.

"Charles Ray has had one of the most amazing receptions ever accorded a member of the theatrical profession," said Mr. Kane in a statement issued upon his arrival in New York. "The star was essentially touring the East as part of his vacation plans, and by close observation of the attitude of exhibitors, newspapers, people and theatre audiences I am more than ever confirmed in my opinion that star appeal is still the most potent influence in the films, speaking from the point of view of the country at large."

Liberals Will Repeal Canadian "Marking Act"

One of the first moves of the new Liberal Government in Canada, which was elected by an overwhelming majority in December, was to rescind the "Marking Act," so-called. This legislation, which was scheduled to come into force in January, provided for the marking of the name of the country of origin on all goods imported into Canada. Special arrangements had been made by the old government for the stamping of all moving pictures with the country in which they were produced.

Announcement was made on January 12, however, that the new law had been suspended and would not be enforced. The act had aroused many protests on the part of manufacturers and producers outside of Canada and by business men in the Dominion. The act will be formally repealed at the session of Parliament which opens at Ottawa in March, it is promised.

Harry Carey in New York; Denies State Right Rumor

For the first time in seven years, Harry Carey, former western star of Jewel Productions with Universal, is in his home town, New York. Carey admits he has made no definite plans for picture affiliation since leaving Universal, but he has a lot of ideas about what he is going to do in the way of production as soon as he settles down to work.

"The first rumor I want to set at rest," says the star, "is that I am about to make my own productions for state right release. I have no intention of producing my own pictures because I think too many actors and actresses have tried to manage their companies and direct themselves—and failed. Because an actor is a success on the screen is no reason to believe that he is a good executive. I am still quite willing to entrust my fate to men who have proved they are good production managers and directors."

Movie Chats Delayed

Reel No. 1 of the Official Urban Movie Chats of the M.P.T.O.A. was not completed in time for release on January 15, as intended, but will be ready before February, it is promised. The executive committee of the exhibitor organization viewed it last week.

National Film Theft Bill Introduced Holds Buyer or Receiver Responsible

A NATIONAL film theft bill which seeks to protect the industry from film piracy both here and abroad has been introduced in the House of Representatives by Congressman Joseph Walsh of Massachusetts, on behalf of the N.A.M.P.I. It was drawn by Chairman H. Minor Pitman of the National Association's Film Theft Committee, after a conference in Washington with Department of Justice officials, members of Congress and Jack S. Connelly, the association's Washington representative.

The measure provides heavy penalties for persons convicted of trafficking any stolen or duped films either in interstate or foreign commerce, and holds responsible also the buyer or receiver of any such film, providing a fine of $5,000 or imprisonment for five years or both.

Chairman Pitman is authority for the statement that the industry suffers an annual loss of many hundreds of thousands of dollars from film theft, and the exhibition of stolen or duped films in foreign countries hurts the general film trade here, because foreigners do not generally understand the situation and feel that the industry is negligent in failing sometimes to protect legitimate buyers against prints that have been stolen, duped and sold for exhibition abroad.

State Laws Inadequate

While the state laws provide that larceny is a criminal offense, they have been found inadequate in the case of pirating films, owing to the fact that the degree of larceny is depended upon the value of the article stolen. The criminal courts take into consideration only the reproduction cost of a stolen film, but the actual loss to a company is many times greater than its replacement cost.

"In the proposed bill," says Mr. Pitman, "I have inserted a clause making a person guilty of a crime who deals in stolen film which constitutes interstate or foreign commerce without ascertaining that the person selling or delivering same has a legal right to do so. I consider this the most important section of the whole bill, as every film bears on its face evidence of the owner, and anyone dealing in films can easily ascertain by inquiry at the nearest branch office whether or not the person selling the film has a right to do so."

Text of Bill

The proposed bill is as follows

A BILL

To punish the transportation of stolen motion picture films in interstate or foreign commerce.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act shall be known and designated as the National Motion-Picture Film Theft Act.

Sec. 2. That when used in this Act the term "interstate commerce" shall include transportation from one state, Territory, or the District of Columbia to another State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or within the District of Columbia or any Territory, or through any State, from a point in one State, to another point in the same State, or to any foreign country, or from any foreign country to any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia. The term "motion-picture film," or films, shall include the original negative, or positive copy thereof, made by the owner of the original negative or his authorized representative or representatives, or lessee, or lessees, and any unauthorized copy in whole or in part of any motion-picture negative or any positive copy thereof.

Sec. 3. That whoever shall transport or cause to be transported in interstate commerce a motion picture film, knowing the same to have been stolen or to have been copied in whole or in part by any person not authorized by the owner, lessee or lessees, or representative or representatives of the owner of the original motion-picture film, or copies thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment of not more than five years, or both.

Sec. 4. That whoever shall buy, receive, conceal, store, barter, aid in such acts, or in any manner dispose of or retain in his possession or control for the purpose of such acts, any motion-picture film, or films, or unauthorized copy thereof in whole or in part, moving as, or which are a part of, or which constitutes interstate or foreign commerce, knowing the same to have been stolen or to have been copies in whole or in part without the authority of the owner of the motion-picture film or his authorized representative or representatives, or who being a dealer in motion-picture film or motion-picture film accessories, or the agent, employee or representative of such dealer, buys or receives any motion-picture film, or films, or unauthorized copy thereof in whole or in part, which are a part of, or which constitutes interstate or foreign commerce, or which such person without ascertaining by diligent inquiry that the person selling or delivering the same has a legal right to do so, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment of not more than five years, or both.

Sec. 5. That any person violating this Act may be punished in any district in or through which such motion-picture film or films have been transported or removed by such offender.

Halligan Follows Moran as F. I. L. M. Board Head

C. R. Halligan, manager of the Universal exchange in Albany, N. Y., has just been elected president of the Film Board of Trade of Albany, heretofore known as the F. I. L. M. club. He succeeds Bert Moran, transferred to Pittsburgh. Earl Kramer, of the Select exchange, has been elected vice-president, Marvin Kempner, of the Famous Players exchange, treasurer, and Miss Marie Wheeler, of the Merit exchange, as secretary.

The board will meet every Monday morning at the Pathe exchange at 11 o'clock, while the grievance committee will meet at 2 o'clock on the same day. This latter committee is made up of Mr. Kramer as chairman, Mr. Kempner, Bert Gibbons, J. M. Loughborough, with William Kupper as alternate.

A WARNING

The United States is using timber four times faster than it is growing it.

Three-fifths of this country's original timber supply is already gone.

Our supply of Southern yellow pine will be exhausted within twenty-five years at the present rate of consumption.

Furthermore, unless something is done and done quickly the total remaining stand of timber in this country will be exhausted within the next seventy-five years.

It isn't the cutting of the timber that is the trouble. It's the utter lack of practice of forestry principles and forestry conservation.

This country has never had an adequate national forestry policy!

The Snell-McCormick Bill now being heard in Washington provides for such a policy.

There isn't a business in this country that isn't going to be affected by a timber famine. That's why Moving Picture World puts these alarming facts before the motion picture industry with the earnest request that it join with the other leading industries of this country in sending an avalanche of wires and letters immediately to the House Agricultural Committee, demanding immediate action on the Snell McCormick Bill or any other bill which will best begin to cope with this serious situation and save one of the greatest assets which any country can have—timber.

Have a heart for the future generation. Wire your Congressman and your Senator today to support this bill!

Sanger and Jordan Ask Half of Empire Stock

Application to substitute the Bankers Trust Company, executors of the estate of the late Alf Hayman, as co-defendant instead of the deceased theatrical man, in a suit brought against him, the Charles Frohman, Inc., and the Empire All Star Film Corporation, made to Justice Leonard A. Geigerich in Special Term Part I, of the New York Supreme Court, disclosed the nature of a suit brought against these defendants by Sanger and Jordan.

The complaint alleges that an agreement was made between the plaintiffs and the late Alf Hayman and the Charles Frohman, Inc., by which Sanger and Jordan were to arrange for filming the plays owned or controlled by Hayman and Charles Frohman, Inc., the understanding it is alleged, being that all profits would be equally divided between the plaintiffs and Hayman and the Charles Frohman, Inc. It is said that as a result of this agreement the plaintiffs succeeded in forming the Empire All Star Film Corporation which is now made a party defendant to the suit.

It is alleged that after the launching of this company it proved most productive as a money maker, and that such profits went to Hayman, Charles Frohman, Inc., and the Empire All Star Film Corporation, to the exclusion of Sanger and Jordan, who say that the defendants refused to surrender 50 per cent of the stock despite repeated demands.

Emerson Tells A. M. P.A. Why He Wants a Tariff

John Emerson, who with his wife, Anita Loos, has just produced "Red Hot Romance" for Associated First National release, in addition to writing and titling numerous comedy dramas for Constance Talmadge, addressed the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at the Cafe Boulevard on January 12 on the Fordney tariff bill in its relation to the industry.

Mr. Emerson, who was one of those appearing before the Senate committee recently, is a strong advocate of a tariff. He declares that within the last eighteen months, since foreign pictures first commenced to be brought in here in bulk, production activities have been reduced 64 per cent. in the United States, and he predicts that if the tariff is not put on, it will not be long before the majority of American producers follow the lead of Fox and Famous Players-Lasky in sending stars and directors to Europe, where actors and studio labor can be employed for about one-tenth of what they cost here.

Eddie Polo Incorporates His Own Serial Company

Companies incorporated in New York State the past week with the intention of entering the motion picture business numbered seven, representing an aggregate capitalization of $91,000. The firms, with the capitalization of each, together with the directors, follow:

A and L Amusement Corporation, $5,000, L. D. and David Cohn, Alfred Schwartz, New York; Explorer-Research Corporation, $15,000, Michael Schliesser, Martin Green, Robert Kastl, New York; Great Lakes Film Corporation, $10,000, Sol. E. Rose, Herman Goodman, Albany; Emil A. Kuper, New York; Myriad Exchange, $500, Edwin Gower, A. H. Kestenbaum, Esther Friedman, New York; Park Amusement Corporation, $50,000, C. W. Lyon, S. M. Moisan, Douglass Morris, Buffalo; Arverne Theatre Corporation, $500, G. S. Wittson, Selma Johnson, Max Schellitzer, New York; Eddie Polo Serial Corporation, New York City, $10,000, Eddie Polo, Los Angeles; Ivy Ostrow and H. G. Kosch, New York City.

Supports Censors

Congratulating Governor Miller and the New York State Legislature on what it terms the success which has attended the operation of motion picture censorship, in New York, the Schenectady County Lord's Day Alliance has adopted a resolution calling on the representatives in the legislature from Schenectady County to oppose any bill that will in any way weaken present laws concerning the observance of Sunday.

Film Congestion in Exchanges Relieved

The congestion of worn-out films in exchanges throughout the United States will be relieved next month. On and after February 10 the railroads will accept as freight without mutilation any film no longer exhibitable. The amendment of the previous regulation, which required the mutilation of such film before its acceptance as freight, was decided upon several weeks ago, but the date of its effectance was not known until last week.

Owing to the great difference in cost between express and freight rates, many thousands of worn-out prints have accumulated in exchanges throughout the country. The new regulation, which allows for the shipments of these films, unmutilated, was brought about through a vigorous campaign inaugurated by the N. A. M. P. I. It will save distributing companies a large sum annually.

Decides on Sunday Shows

Mechanicsville, N. Y., is the latest place to fall in line for Sunday motion picture shows. The New York State Conference of Mayors, maintaining an office in Albany, N. Y., received word last week from Mechanicsville, that the place had decided on Sunday shows and enclosed a copy of the proposed ordinance which will regulate the theatres.

South Carolina Censorship Certain Unless Industry Takes Quick Action

THE judiciary committee of the House of Representatives, Columbia, S. C., is considering a censorship bill introduced by Edgar A. Brown. Contrary to the usual excuse of protecting the morals of a community, as projected by censorship proponents, those who are fostering the South Carolina bill claim that it is primarily a revenue-raising move.

The bill provides for the election of a commission and the imposing of a fee of $5 a reel for all original films shown in the state and $2.50 a reel on duplicate prints. The bill is expected either to receive a favorable report or to be reported out to be sent to the ways and means committee. The committee, however, is expected to make minor changes providing that the fees be collected by the state treasurer and not by the commissioner.

South Carolina has no definite organization of exhibitors, and since there is no exchange center within the state the fight against the bill has been only lukewarm, and it is feared the bill will have little real opposition. It is freely predicted that it will become a law.

Secretary Frederick Elliott of the N. A. M. P. I., when told of this dispatch from the Moving Picture World correspondent, said that representatives of the Southern Enterprises, notably Y. S. Freeman and H. T. Jones, have been in Columbia for over a week fighting the bill, and that while the result is in doubt, it is by no means a foregone conclusion that the bill will become a law. He paid high tribute to the work against adverse legislation carried on in the southern states by Freeman and Jones.

A. J. Moeller of the M. P. T. O. A. was notified by telephone of the danger of a South Carolina censorship, and the organization will immediately take steps to combat the measure.

Philadelphia Editor Says Producers Are Not Sending Out Right Kind of Press Material

By SIG SCHLAGER
Special to Moving Picture World

THE best position I can give the usual publicity material received from the motion picture company headquarters in New York is a waste-basket headline."

"When I want motion picture news I go to New York and dig it out."

"Motion picture publicity has become so stereotyped, so un-newspaperlike, that I have to turn reporter to fill my page."

These terse paragraphs express a warning from one of the most influential dramatic and screen commentators in the Eastern newspaper field — Henry M. Neely of the Curtis Publications in Philadelphia, editor of the Evening Ledger syndicated motion picture page and a thorough cinematic initiate.

Though I have not been active in publicity work for some months, while in Philadelphia for the W. W. Hodkinson Corp., I called on Mr. Neely to renew a friendship. In our conversation the work of Hugo Ballin, one of the principal Hodkinson contributors, was discussed.

I told Mr. Neely of "Jane Eyre," the latest Ballin release. And, the inescapable publicity germ at work again, I outlined an exploitation idea to him. He listened without comment, asked me to jot down a few notes and would I mind sending him over some pictorial matter on the subject.

Want Human Interest Stuff

The next day he phoned me, inviting me to lunch with him and his newspaper confreres in the magnificent Curtis Building.

"That story ought to be worth a page in the Sunday Ledger," he told me. "When will it do you the most good?"

I was surprised and frankly told him so.

He countered with a brief disseration on publicity that I considered of such great importance to the trade that I asked Mr. Neely to give me his views and relate certain experiences that I might pass them on to others.

"In the first place," he said, "a man who is running a movie department on a newspaper has got to give his readers what they want. The readers, being ordinary fans and not related to the industry, want only stuff with the genuine human-interest appeal.

"Now, what is human-interest appeal to them? They have only one point of contact with the movie industry. That point is the actor or actress they see upon the screen. To the fan, Wallie Reid or Harold Lloyd or Mabel Ballin is human-interest stuff to the fan.

"I get hundreds of fan letters every week, all seeking PERSONAL information about the stars. Are they married? Have they been divorced? What color hair—eyes—skin? But all intimate, personal stuff.

"I have never had a fan letter asking me about a producer, a director (except Griffith), a scenario writer or a brand name. These people have no direct personal contact point with the fan. They are only names, and names have no meanings for the fan unless the face goes with the name and the fan has lived through some tense scenes with the face and name combined.

"Producing companies and distributing companies have spent millions of dollars trying to sell a mere name to the fans. It hasn't been done. It never will be done. A brand name can never make the deep personal impression that Valentino makes when he takes Agnes Ayres in his arms and kisses her through 25 feet of close-up. (Twenty-five feet, that is, in all States excepting Pennsylvania.)

Won't Use Matter on Producers

"The New York publicity departments are trying to force me, and others in my position, to give publicity to their employers and their distributors. I won't do it. If I felt that my readers wanted it, I would print it, but I know they don't.

"Some time ago I started getting the movie views of everybody I met. I framed up a series of questions and, whenever I could switch the conversation to movies, I asked my questions. I made notes of the answers given by over two hundred persons and these answers are both surprising and instructive.

HENRY M. NEELY
Dramatic and Moving Picture Editor, Philadelphia Evening Ledger

"One of my questions was, 'Which do you prefer, Cosmopolitan productions or Paramount pictures?' Not one of the two hundred knew the difference, or if there was any difference. The last group that I asked included a city editor, a managing editor, two special writers and an advertising man from various papers in the city who met at lunch.

"I found that almost everyone identified David W. Griffith without trouble, but no other director was known to any of them except two who said they thought they had seen Cecil de Mille act, but couldn't recall the pictures.

"People who are in the business won't believe this. The trouble is, they are so close to the business and are so surrounded by a barage of names that they can't see beyond to the plain ordinary little stenographer or clerk or housekeeping wife who make up the great personal mass we know as 'The Fan.'

"All fans want to know HOW things are done in the movies. Figuratively speaking, they want to be taken into the studios and permitted to watch the scenes being shot and the people going through all the motions that result in the final film that is projected on their screen.

"So long as I print stuff about Richard Barthelmess or Marion Davies or Eugene O'Brien and arouse the fan's interest in the personal activities of these stars, I am giving good publicity to any picture in which Dick or Marion or 'Gene appears.

It Can't Be Done

"When any big gun in an office says I must talk about his next picture and not the one then in work in the studio, he is trying to run my business, and no one is going to do that for me so long as I have the key to my roll-top.

"I know many of the publicity men. Three of them are old buddies of mine in the newspaper game. They are good newspaper men and would give me first-rate stuff—but they aren't allowed to do it. They are kept tied down to trade-paper style and the style that is good for the trade-paper, with its circulation among people inside the business, but it won't do at all for the newspaper, with its circulation mostly outside the business.

"And that is the reason why I go to New York to get the kind of material that I want for my department.

"But why should I? What are publicity departments for?

"I'm done. Hereafter I go over to New York for pleasure, but if any film company wants space in my department, they'll send me the kind of stuff I want, or we'll drop the department entirely."

Albany Society Keenly Interested in Film Ball; Decorations to Cost $3,500

RIVALLING the Inaugural Ball in brilliancy, the Motion Picture Ball which will be held at the State Armory, Albany, N. Y., on February 15, in connection with the convention of New York State exhibitors, will be the social event of the season in the Capital District. Albany's society set is showing the keenest interest in arrangements as they are being completed day by day for the ball. On the committee of men which is co-operating with the Albany Chamber of Commerce, there are business and society leaders of the city. This committee will devote most of its time in working with Samuel Suckno and others toward completing the details of the ball.

Big Sum for Decorations

It has been decided to spend $3,500 in decorating the huge armory for the affair. Decorators will come from New York a week before in order that all decorations may be in place on the morning of the ball. As arrangements have been completed thus far, it is planned to begin the ball at 8 o'clock and to have the stars personally appear perhaps an hour or two later. Each star is to be announced, first by trumpeters, and then by a person with megaphone stationed in the balcony. Each star will be escorted across the floor in full view of the audience and to the boxes which are to be built for the stars and their friends. Already several of Albany's society set have made a bid for the entertaining as guests of certain of the stars.

In advertising the ball, picture houses over a wide area have already been asked to use slides the first week in February. There has been a very generous response to this request made by O. H. Stacy, as secretary of the Albany Theatrical Managers' Association.

The badges have already been completed and are of a type which will permit the insertion of the address in order that each person may become better acquainted with the other.

Some idea of the demand for hotel reservations can be gained from the fact that one concern has requested seven of the largest rooms at the Hotel Ten Eyck during Convention Week. Many are planning to reach Albany on February 13, the day before the convention is scheduled to open.

Sunburst Organizes

Sunburst Pictures Corporation, recently organized in Massachusetts, has opened main offices in Springfield at 360 Worthington street, under the management of Albert W. Plummer, director of productions and president Clarence Phinney formerly with Universal, is assistant director and M. B. Townsend, treasurer.

The first picture will be "Sands of Humanity," which deals with woman's demand for freedom in choosing her mate. The company plans a large studio in Springfield.

Finance Committee Finds Difficulty in Deciding How to Class Films for Duty

THE Senate Finance Committee will adopt the wholesale selling price in in the principal wholesale markets of the United States as a basis of levying ad valorem duties on imported merchandise of all kinds wherever possible. The senators and various tax experts, including Chairman Thomas O. Marvin, Vice Chairman William S. Culbertson and Commissioner William Burgess, of the United States Tariff Commission, and Presiding Judge Marion DeVries, of the United States Court of Customs Appeals, members of the New York Customs House force and tax experts from the Treasury Department, are seeking means of applying a similar system to commodities with respect to which there is no American wholesale value.

When it comes to the application of value to imported motion pictures for the purpose of levying import duties great difficulty will be experienced, experts declare, because "movies" are not common articles of commerce in the sense that steel rails, or sugar, or coffee, or other standard imports are. They have an individual value, represented largely by art, the value of which cannot be appraised.

It is altogether probable that the Committee will place motion picture films in the class of merchandise subject to duty on the basis of foreign production cost, plus a reasonable profit to the producers, cost of transportation (including all of the usual items) and plus a reasonable allowance as importing profit. Motion pictures represent one of the classes of merchandise with respect to which the application of a new tariff rule is giving the Finance Committee a great deal of concern.

Chairman Porter J. McCumber has declared that it is the intention to afford protection to all American industries where it is possible to do so. He has stated that what may be considered the raw products of the manufacturers are the finished product of their producers and as such just as much entitled to protection as any other commodity. In that category falls raw stock film, and it is generally predicted that when the bill now pending before the Finance Committee is completed it will contain a provision covering film, sensitized but unexposed, as well as negatives and positives.

Michigan Motion Picture Day a Great Success, Many Notables Were Present

Motion Picture Day on Tuesday, January 10, was a gala event in the history of the motion picture industry of Michigan. It brought to Detroit many state exhibitors, as well as a number of very prominent men in our industry. In the morning exhibitors inspected the new quarters of the Exhibitors' Association in the Wolverine Hotel, and in the afternoon held their first business metng of the New Year.

The greatest event was the banquet and dance in the evening at the Hotel Statler. Here the exhibitors and exchange men fraternized for what is believed to be the first time in the history of the industry, so far as Michigan is concerned. The various committees functioned 100 per cent, and there wasn't a dull moment.

The attendance at the dinner was close to 400. Henry Theis and his Ritz Detroit orchestra supplied the music, and there were a number of soloists from the theatres, supplied through the courtesy of John H. Kunsky and Phil Gleichman. At the speaker's table were: Claude Cady, H. R. Richey, J. E. Flynn, Mayor James Couzens, Eugene O'Brien, Jess Fishman, Joe Friedman, Marcus Loew, Police Commissioner James W. Inches, Phil Gleichman, Senator James Walker, Sam Berman, of New York City; W. E. Wilkinson,

Following the dinner, Claude E. Cady, of Lansing, president of the Michigan Theatre Owners' Association, introduced as toastmaster of the evening Senator James W. Walker, of New York, who, as toastmaster, held the interest of the gathering.

The first speaker introduced was Hon. James Couzens, Mayor of Detroit. Mayor Couzens is held in highest esteem by all exhibitors and exchange men in Detroit because he has always been fair, reasonable and broadminded in every matter concerning this industry. He is a great believer and follower of motion pictures, and he sees a great future for the screen in both the matter of entertainment and education. He urged the industry to aim for the highest and to keep the screen so that it would not become offensive in any way.

J. E. Flynn, Goldwyn manager in Detroit, and former president of the Detroit Board of Exchange Managers, was the next speaker.

Marcus Loew was given a great ovation when introduced. Mr. Loew said that the salacious picture would interest the morbid few only for a short time, but that it was the clean picture that the majority of people preferred to see. He touched upon state censorship, stating that in seven states where there are censor boards, "something different was cut from 'The Four Horsemen.' If the censors disagree on what is right and what is wrong the public is apt to disagree with the censors," said Mr. Loew. In referring to conditions the past year, he said things were not as bad as painted, and that one of the greatest evils in the industry today was the over-buying on the part of the exhibitor, because it gave the exchanges contracts, but held them up on dates. He felt sure that with the exhibitors and the exchangemen co-operating more closely that this evil could be eradicated and that by so doing the industry would be placed on a more substantial basis.

Senator Walker, at various times during the course of his remarks, took a "slam" at censorship, and complimented exhibitors for refusing to run pictures of persons who had been in sensational scandals. He said exhibitors all over the country were not waiting for censors to reject the films, but themselves were taking such a stand.

The last speaker of the evening was Police Commissioner Inches, of Detroit. He paid a high tribute to the power of the motion picture, and joined with Mayor Couzens and Senator Walker in panning censorship, saying in part:

"We pride ourselves on being the most progressive people in the world, but no other people abandon government to the officials as much as we do between elections. The film of the future will help to feel the pulse of the public at any time on any question. When you consider that censor's view about 30 miles of film a week and cut only a few here and there, perhaps only to keep their political jobs, you will be astonished at how clean the industry is becoming after all."

This concluded the speaking, then the tables were removed and dancing began.

Lambert Discusses Financing Pictures with the W. M. P. A.

"Dollars and the Movies" was the principal topic under discussion at a recent session of the Western Motion Picture Advertisers, at which cinema finances were discussed by Laurence A. Lambert, president of the recently organized National Motion Pictures Finance Corporation, a million dollar company formed to aid the independent star and producer in making pictures in Los Angeles.

Lambert said that capital could either be attracted or repelled to the industry according to the type of press matter sent out from the studios. He condemned stories of directorial extravagance and temperamental stars as frightening away possible investors, and prejudicing the conservative business man against the business.

Charles Ray, Associated First National star, told of his recent trip to New York, and Richard Willis, his general manager, formerly a publicity man, told of the strides made in exploitation within the last decade.

The report of the nominating committee offered as candidates for officers for the coming year Arch Reeve, of Lasky studios, for president; Peter Gridley Smith, Marshall Neilan studios, vice-president; Harry Hammond Beall, Benjamin B. Hampton productions, secretary; Malcolm Stuart Boylan, Universal City, treasurer. Ten other members were nominated for the board of directors, five of which will be elected.

$99,175.16 to Charity from Sunday Shows

Director Brennan of the Department of Public Safety of Newark, N. J., has distributed $99,175.16 among the local charities of that city, representing the sums collected as the result of Sunday benefit performances held in Newark theatres.

Church and fraternal organizations were the beneficiaries, and a large part of this amount was given during the Christmas season to defray the expenses of the distribution of holiday gifts and for parties for poor children.

Elect Directors

At the annual meeting the past week of the International Church Film Corporation of Eastern New York, the following directors were elected: William McDonald, Frank L. Howe, Jr., and Dr. Joseph A. Clark of Albany; Dr. Thurman C. Hull, Dr. Chester A. Hemstreet, William C. Feathers and Charles A. Aldrich, of Troy, the Rev. Foster W. Taylor, Mrs. Irene A. Taylor, Thomas C. Brown and Addison C. Keck of Schenectady.

Indict Assailants

Ten men, including Sheriff John W. Wilson and Constable Ben T. Battleson, were indicted by a Montgomery County, Ill., grand jury in the $24,600 robbery of the Panama, Ill., bank on December 12. Four also were indicted for assault to kill Jack Williams, owner of the Panama Opera House. He was shot by the bandits as they were escaping.

Kansas City Hold-up

Two bandits held up Emile Uman, assistant manager of Loew's Garden Theatre, Kansas City, the morning of January 14 and escaped with $2,200 of pay-roll cash. Uman was alone in his office at the theatre when the bandits, both white men, entered. One held a revolver on Uman, while the other robber took the money.

New Exchange Building

The new Great Lakes Film Company, which has just been incorporated in New York State, and opened offices in Albany, to deal in state rights pictures, plans to erect a large building in that city for use as a film exchange. The building will be equipped with fireproof vaults. First National is also about to open an exchange in Albany.

PRESENTING to D. W. Griffith the German version of "Two Orphans" does more than take the gift off the market, it establishes a precedent that is fine sportsmanship. Through Donald Campbell, of the brokerage firm of Nathan and Semerad, the proffer was made with the explanation that the donor believed Mr. Griffith's great expenditure of time, brains and money entitled him to the exclusive possession without rivalry by lesser productions.

It was not so very many years ago in the film business that rival producers took great satisfaction in duplicating a production and by all the arts known to advertising and salesmanship endeavor to beat the other fellow to the exhibitor with it.

We will not go so far as to say that the golden dawn of the perfect day has struck our business, or that from now forth all will be sportsmanlike and unselfish, but we will say that this unusual gift gives us a brand new sensation and a pleasant one.

The concluding paragraph of the note to Mr. Griffith is as follows: "We have every reason to believe that our negative is the only foreign made film of this name in this country and we ask you to accept the assurance that our action is not only prompted by a desire to disavow any connection with any advertisement of this film for sale, but it is intended as a small measure of tribute to your wonderful and successful efforts to raise the moving picture industry to the high level it occupies today."

Verily our industry is progressing.

The pun makers will have their fling. For instance we already hear the industry is to have a "hazing," and it will do everything but go to sleep on the job, as there's to be no "hitting of the Hays." We call on the pest killer to make short work of them.

Now then, who is to be credited with the securing of Mr. Hays? The line forms on the right and—don't crowd.

In view of the fact that the producers in the new association are of all the known political beliefs, creeds and affiliations, the new choice stands out as non-political and therefore most desirable.

In increasing the sales of his historical chapter-plays, Carl Laemmle of Universal has adopted the plan of sending a letter, a color map of Africa and a press book to 7,000 school superintendents in the country. The letter is a straight-forward message advising of the educational values of these pictures, dealing especially with a description of "With Stanley in Africa," and the press book ably backs it up with examples of advertisements, stories about the players and a synopsis.

Exceptional Pictures Corporation has just gotten out what is easily one of the most pretentious and attractive press books ever issued by a motion picture concern. The covers are of imitation morocco printed on heavy stock and the pages within are various combinations of three-color work and contain much "meat" in the way of exploitation helps. In fact, the cover calls the book "An endeavor to make exploitation an art."

Where there is smoke, there's fire. We have been hearing a lot about this three-day convention of New York State exhibitors at Albany beginning February 14, and everything points toward a realization of all the great things planned. The organization certainly owes a vote of thanks to its publicity committee for the "smoke."

The oldest member of the industry can stroke his beard in a vain effort to recall any similar Empire State convention planned along such elaborate lines. It will be mostly composed of business sessions, but the executive committee, as industrious as the proverbial ant, has not forgotten to provide entertainment, the chief feature of which will be the Motion Picture Ball. The inviting of exhibitors' wives and sisters also contributes toward a happy throng, and the committee has prepared plans for the amusement of the women visitors that are as comprehensive and carefully drawn as specifications for a Manhattan sky-scraper.

The exhibitor should tell his patrons that three-fifths of the United States timber supply is already exhausted; that we are cutting timber four times faster than we are growing it; that unless an adequate forestry conservation policy is adopted at once the remaining timber will be exhausted within the next 75 years. If he will urge his patrons to write their Representatives and Senators at Washington demanding immediate action on the forestry bill now before Congress he will be doing a maximum public service with a minimum of effort. It's more in detail on page 379.

Helen Ferguson, who plays the leading role in Goldwyn's soon-to-be-released feature, "Hungry Hearts," prizes autographed copies of famous authors' works. She has a large collection, including all of Guy Empey's books and many of Kathleen Norris'. She is now securing Mary Roberts Rinehart books, and desires many other famous writers' productions for her large library.

In the second Rex Beach photoplay, now being completed for United Artists' Corporation, appears the famous champion wolfhound "Champion Veronia," from the Watland Kennels, Ardsley, N. Y. This new Beach feature is as yet untitled. "Champion Veronia" will attract every dog-lover that learns of his appearance on the screen, because of his nation-wide fame as an unbeaten champion of his class. For the last four years "Champion Veronia" has defeated all comers of both sexes at every big dog show in the United States. In addition to numerous cups and medals he is the holder of more than 900 ribbons of the highest degree.

Mae Murray, whose "Peacock Alley" is putting standing room at the new Cameo Theatre in New York at a premium, and who recently returned to New York from Cuba, plans to sail soon for Spain, there to enact scenes for her forthcoming production, "Fascination."

"First National Week" Set for February 18 to 25 in Commemoration of Second Anniversary of Formation of Company; Big Pictures Scheduled

February 18 to 25 has been designated as First National Week in commemoration of the second anniversary of the formation of Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

First National Week will be celebrated in thousands of theatres throughout the country next month. Response from exhibitors has been spontaneous and enthusiastic, and five weeks before the opening of the period more than 2,100 theatres had booked First National productions solid for February 18 to 25. So eager are the showmen to participate in the celebration of First National Week that the slogan adopted for the campaign, "Every print in action during First National Week," bids fair to become true in fact, the company announces.

An exceptionally attractive array of First National features and comedies, recently released, are available in addition to the older releases. The following are the names of the sixteen latest releases.

"Smilin' Through" is one of Norma Talmadge's contributions and one which is destined to create as much laudatory comment as "The Sign on the Door." Its chief feature, aside from Norma's customary fine acting, is the pictorial beauty of the production. It is based on the stage play of the same name which ran for more than a year on Broadway, with Jane Cowl in the star role, and is still touring the country.

"The Wonderful Thing" is another Norma Talmadge production on the list. It was directed by Herbert Brenon and is one of the most appealing plays in which this star has appeared. She plays the part of Jacqueline Boggs, the daughter of an American pork packer. The story opens with her graduation from a French convent, and then moves to England, where she finds romance and sorrow. An Iowa farm is the locale of the climax. Harrison Ford is Miss Talmadge's leading man, and the cast includes Mrs. Lydig Hoyt, well known society leader.

"Penrod," a picturization of the famous Booth Tarkington story and starring "Freckles" Barry, is one of the two Marshall Neilan productions numbered in the sixteen. It is a delightful "Kid" story—one that will captivate both old and young.

Marshall Neilan also produced "The Lotus Eater," a John Barrymore production. This is the picture that was held over for two weeks at the Capitol Theatre in New York, where it broke the Sunday attendance records on its opening day, despite the worst weather of the year. It is from the novel by Albert Payson Terhune, and the cast includes Wesley Barry, Colleen Moore, Anna Q. Nilsson and Barney Sherry. The locales of the tale include the Mediterranean, New York, Palm Beach and an island in the South Seas. Opening with a tragic theme, the story becomes whimsical with some capital satirical thrusts.

"Tol'able David," Richard Barthelmess's first starring vehicle for First National, is his offering for First National Week. Based on the story by Joseph Hergesheimer and published in the Saturday Evening Post, the picture is a powerful, yet simple narrative of mountain life in West Virginia. Henry King directed it and Gladys Hulette plays opposite the popular star.

"My Boy" is the title of the picture in which celebrants of the week will see the youngest of stars—Jackie Coogan. The story is written especially for this little idol of millions of theatregoers. One moment Jackie convulses the spectator with laughter, the next the pathos he registers wrings the heart. Claude Gillingwater and Mathilde Brundage are in the supporting cast.

"Red Hot Romance," written and produced by John Emerson and Anita Loos, will delight every type of picture fan, but especially those who are fond of satire. The authors wrote it for the purpose of ridiculing the "romantic melodrama," in which an American youth, finding himself in a mythical kingdom, proceeds to upset the order of things, tells royalty where it gets off, and in general makes himself obnoxious. And they have succeeded. The drunken king, the inebriated courtiers and the opera-bouffe revolution are a few of the "high spots" in this picture of continuous laughter.

"Polly of the Follies," Constance Talmadge's newest production, is also the work of Mr. Emerson and Miss Loos, and they have injected into it almost as many laughs as "Red Hot Romance" contains. The supporting cast is a remarkably strong one, Kenneth Harlan plays opposite.

Katherine Macdonald will be seen in two of her latest productions, "The Beautiful Liar" and "The Woman's Side." The first may be considered a novelty in picture making—a production without a villain. In it Katherine Macdonald is prevailed upon to impersonate the actress in an exclusive society hotel, with disastrous results. Charles Meredith is her leading man, and others in the cast are Joseph J. Dowling, Kate Lester and Wilfred Lucas. Wallace Worsley directed it.

"The Woman's Side" has a political background, with the star, as Mary Gray, daughter of the candidate for governor, being drawn into the vortex of crooked politics. It inspires her to use her influence to get justice for the "woman's side" of the large problem of political and economical equality, but her activities are brought to a dramatic climax throughout, with Edward Burns as the successful suitor.

Raoul A. Walsh, the producer of "The Oath" and other successful pictures, contributes his latest, "Kindred of the Dust," one of the most promising of the current releases. It is from the novel by Peter B. Kyne, the well-known author, which appeared serially in the Saturday Evening Post. It is a tale of the Great Northwest, mingling romance, adventure and love. Miriam Cooper plays the leading part, supported by Ralph Graves, Eugenie Besserer, W. J. Ferguson, Pat Rooney, Lionel Belmore, Carolyn Rankin and others. One of the spectacular features of the production is a rescue from the midst of a log jam.

"The Song of Life" a "drama of dishes and discontent," is the offering of John M. Stahl. It is a story of pathos and tender appeal, with such actors as Gaston Glass, Georgeia Woodthorpe, Grace Darmond, Richard Headrick, Arthur Stuart Hull, Wedgewood Howell, Frank Kelsey, Claude Payton and Edward Pell.

Anita Stewart will be seen in "A Question of Honor," the scenes of which are laid in the West. Miss Stewart plays the part of a society girl who finds that there is a different brand of 'em in the open spaces than those she found in the drawing room, and in the end she capitulates to one of them. The story was adapted from the Ruth Cross novel of the same name. In the supporting cast are Edward Hearn, Arthur Stuart Hull, Walt Whitman, Bert Sprotts, Frank Beal, Adele Farrington, Mary Land, Ed Brady and Doc Bytell.

A reissue of "Cabiria" the great Italian masterpiece, which on its initial presentation in 1914 was declared the greatest film spectacle of all times and which has retained its popularity through the ensuing years, will feature First National Week. Since its reappearance, "Cabiria" has duplicated its success of seven years ago. It stands today as a massive production of gorgeous scenic effects—the one big spectacular production of the day.

"The Rosary," a Selig-Rork production, is a tender story with its main theme based on the never-failing appeal of heart interest and an all-star cast, containing the names of screendom's most competent delineators of subtle parts. The story is an original one by Bernard McConville, and the cast includes Lewis Stone, Robert Gordon, Dore D. Wilson, Wallace Beery, Jane Novak, Mildred June, Eugenie Besserer, Pomeroy Cannon, Bert Woodruff and Harold Goodwin.

"Shattered Idols," produced by J. L. Frothingham, is an intense spectacle of restless, discontented India in a story throbbing with human appeal, and was filmed under the working title of "A Bride of the Gods." It is founded on I. A. R. Wylie's novel, "A Daughter of Brahma," and is enacted by Marguerite De La Motte, Ethel Grey Terry, James Morrison, William V. Mong, Frankie Lee, Harvey Clark, Josephine Crowell, Claire Windsor, Robert Littlefield and George Periolat.

There are four Buster Keaton productions in the seven comedies slated for the week, "The Paleface," "The Boat," "The Playhouse" and "The Blacksmith," Mack Sennett contributes "Be Reasonable," "By Heck," and "Bright Eyes," the latter a Ben Turpin comedy.

Free advertising accesories will be supplied by First National to exhibitors who book its pictures for First National Week. These accessories will include First National star 24 sheets; special one sheet cuts of various sizes, slides and cloth banners.

Goldwyn Selects Big Cast for Kyne's New Story

Goldwyn has engaged an all-star cast for Peter B. Kyne's "Brothers Under Their Skins," a South Sea romance, scheduled for early production under the direction of E. Mason Hopper.

Helene Chadwick and Richard Dix will play opposite each other again. Claire Windsor has also been engaged for a leading role. Jacqueline Logan and Ray Atwell complete the quintette. The screen adaptation of the Kyne story was made by Grant Carpenter, recently added to Goldwyn's editorial and scenario department.

Harmon Weight Directed New Arliss Picture

Harmon Weight, director of the new George Arliss photoplay, "The Ruling Passion," which is being released by United Artists on February 19, is one of the youngest directors in the film industry, but possesses the authority of much experience in the directoral field.

Mr. Weight was born in Salt Lake City, and began a stage career when just a boy. Before he was twenty-two years old he had a stock company in the Utah city and soon extended his activities to Portland, Seattle and Tacoma. As an actor he essayed a variety of roles and as a producer he staged many big successes.

The war brought a slump in theatre attendance at first, and Mr. Weight went to Los Angeles to look into the motion picture situation. He was associated with various of the big producing companies as an assistant director, and finally worked for what is now the United Studios. There he become associated with Henry Kolker. Under Mr. Kolker he worked on "Disraeli," starring George Arliss, for United Artists. When Mr. Kolker went to Rome last fall, Mr. Weight was called on to direct Mr. Arliss in his new picture, "The Ruling Passion."

During the years that Mr. Weight was editing and cutting pictures he perfected a system of his own, and one that has operated to the benefit of the producer. Previous offers to direct pictures failed to find any response in Mr. Weight, as he preferred to retain his association with Mr. Kolker.

Sign Lucy Fox for Her Second Serial

Lucy Fox's personal charms and feats of physical agility and daring which lend so much to the sweeping success of "Hurricane Hutch," Pathe serial, starring Charles Hutchison with George B. Seitz, will put into production immediately following completeion of "Go-Get-'em Hutch."

Pathe announces Miss Fox's reengagement on her return from New Orleans and other southern cities where she made a series of personal appearances at "Hurricane Hutch" performances.

Complete Cast for Norma Talmadge's Next Production

Conway Tearle arrived in Los Angeles on January 5 to play a featured role in Norma Talmadge's next production, "The Duchess of Langeais," work upon which began on January 2 at the United Studios. Announcement also was made by Producer Joseph M. Schenck that Wedgewood Howell had been added to the cast of "The Duchess."

Norma Talmadge now has an all-star cast in her support. The complete roster of principals includes Conway Tearle, well known matinee idol and star in his own productions; Adolphe Jean Menyou, who won his spurs through his interpretation of the role of the King in "The Three Musketeers"; Rosemary Theby, Kate Lester, Irving Cummings, Otis Harlan, Thomas Ricketts and Wedgewood Howell.

Frank Lloyd, considered one of the screen's most capable directors, will handle the megaphone for the production, the script of which was prepared by Frances Marion. Harry Wile is Lloyd's assistant.

Erection of sets is going forward with great rapidity. No efforts will be spared to depict on the screen all the details of the masterly Balzac story. Fidelity to Balzac's classic will be maintained in every particular. It is reported that Mr. Schenck is putting several hundred thousand dollars into the making of "The Duchess of Langeais."

Prologue Is Combined with Moving Picture

Opening scenes of Richard Barthelmess' "Tol'able David" were made to "talk" at the Brooklyn Mark Strand when Managing Director Edward L. Hyman through the use of musical and electrical stage appliances fused an atmospheric prologue and the actual opening shots of the film so carefully that the change from one to the other was hardly noticeable, it is said. In fact stage stars in the prologue really started off the film story, allowing the screen to carry it out.

New Fox Comedian Breaks Old Record

When Lupino Lane, the pantomine comedian, broke the record for jumping "traps" in London at the great annual pantomime show in 1920, his feat became one of the few instances where a son breaks a world's record held by his father.

"Traps" denotes certain grotesque methods of exit and entrance used by a comedian to incite laughter. Traps are anything from a trap in the floor to a hole in the roof or a plunge through a side wall. Lupino Lane went through eighty-three traps in only three minutes. He will be starred in special comedies produced by William Fox and will take rank with two other famous Fox comedians, Clyde Cook and Al. St. John.

Coogan's Next

Scores of youngsters have roles in Jackie Coogan's latest production, "Lost and Found," which is now being made at the United Studios. Jackie calls them "My Gang." Jackie's latest photoplay, "My Boy" is enjoying tremendous popularity throughout the country wherever it has been released by First National.

Exhibitors Interested in "Pathe Playlets"

Many queries are being received from exhibitors by the Pathe offices in every section of the country regarding the coming "Pathe Playlets."

Exhibitors, recalling their success with these "Pathe Playlets," when in their original form they were released in five and six reels, anticipate even more marked approval of the features in their condensed form, it is said.

Pathe, in order to strengthen the series of fifteen reedited pictures, has made two changes in the subjects since its original announcement. Helene Chadwick, one of the screen's most popular heroines, will have another prominent part in the "Pathe Playlets" schedule, being starred in "The Angel Factory" which has been substituted for "The Closing Net" set for issuance on March 26. "The Mysterious Client," starring Irene Castle, will substitute for "The First Law," scheduled for release on April 23.

The first of the series, "The Midnight Stage," starring Frank Keenan, will be released January 29.

"Visual Symphonies" Find Recognition; New Short Subjects Replace Prologues

The enthusiastic reception awaiting an original motion picture idea which has economic as well as artistic value was never more fully demonstrated than by the interest aroused by the announcement last week of the series of "Visual Symphonies," shortly to be presented by Claude Macgowan, general manager of Visual Symphony Productions, Inc., of which Dudley Murphy, who is directing the series, is president.

Launched at a time when exhibitors everywhere are wearying of the expensive burden of prologues, presentations and psuedo vaudeville as program openers, the character of the forthcoming "Visual Symphonies" was quickly appreciated. An examination of their qualities proves them to be ideal attraction substitutes and as such are bound to save exhibitors large sums of money now spent on something which many believe has no place in a picture theatre.

Each "Visual Symphony" is a short subject of from 1,000 to 1,500 feet, featuring one or more of the great stars of the operatic and kindred fields of the drama, music and pantomime, and at the same time providing from the works of the world's greatest composers, an overture that can be adequately presented by any form of theatre music from player piano to symphony orchestra.

Practical Ideals

Eminent artists interpret the work of each composer represented by his masterpiece selected for the series, and these interpretations are visualized on the screen, the action and music being perfectly synchronized. Dudley Murphy is that type of director whose ideals, vision and trained and discriminating artistic sense are combined with a practical bent, which makes his artistic efforts of commercial value.

"The thing to show in a picture theatre is a picture," Mr. Murphy said, while enjoying a brief rest from the cutting of the first release which includes the celebrated Adolph Bolm, star of the Russian Ballet, Ruth Page, the dancing and pantomimic star, and Olin Howland, Broadway's featured eccentric dancer, in Saint-Saens' "Danse Macabre," which will be released as "The Dance of Death."

Combine Music With Film

"No picture manager can hope to compete in stage presentations with the regular vaudeville houses. The big first first-run houses on Broadway cannot hope to rival the high-salaried acts of the play-houses, and if they cannot, what can the manager do who is a thousand miles or more from the player's headquarters. Therefore, if there is a demand for good music, or for presentations that differ from the program feature, why not combine the greatest music in the world with its sister art, its twin art, the motion picture, and not only give the public what it wants, but help the exhibitor solve the serious problem I have just stated?

"I have realized from the start, as have my associates, that the series of 'Visual Symphonies' as I had conceived them, must be the last word in musical interpretation and in artistic presentation, and that the synchronization of music and picture must be made not only absolutely perfect, but as readily available for the theatre with a lone piano player, as for the house boasting a thirty-two piece of symphony orchestra.

Artists Willing

"The first was a matter of expense and selection, as it involved the securing of highly paid singing, dancing and pantomimic stars of the very first rank. This did not prove difficult when the nature of 'Visual Symphonies' was explained to them. Adolph Bolm, who interprets 'The Dance of Death,' has heretofore steadfastly refused to appear in pictures. In spite of the fact that he is one of the world's leading pantomimists, no fit vehicle had been presented, as he did not care to use his talents in straight dramatic parts which might be as well rendered by competent star of stage or screen.

"But an opportunity to do his own work, and this in connection with great music, which is part of his life, that, as he explained, was vastly different. He not only signed a contract, but entered into the production heart and soul. This is but the first instance of the opportunities afforded picture patrons by 'Visual Symphonies.'"

Many Experiments

"My 'Visual Symphonies' are not the result of a happy thought, a sudden inspiration, or a get-rich-quick idea," replied Mr. Murphy in answer to a question as to the origination of the screen novelty. "They are the development of an idea which came to me fragmentarily, and which was fully developed only after a great many experiments which would have been costly had they not proven so successful, notably 'The Soul of the Cypress,' which was shown at the Rivoli and held over a second week.

"It was enthusiastically praised by all the critics, without an exception, in itself a rare tribute. The New York Times reviewer included it in his limited selected list of the notable pictures of the year. But that was only a step on the way. I have gone far beyond that, which was really the crystallization of my original idea, and very satisfying to me as far as it went.

"I spent two years in the big West Coast studios as art director, and there I learned the value of two things and also their inter-relation. These were and are pictorjal beauty in each little ¾ by 1 inch film frame, and the importance to every picture, regardless of its character, of suitable interpretative musical accompaniment. I learned to appreciate the fact that music and the motion picture are twin arts, and that they are both fluid forms, blending more sympathetically than any other art forms known. That is the basic idea underlying the mechanics—the production—of 'Visual Symphonies.' Given the mechanical means for combining the two, and the rest is a purely artistic problem.

Don't Depend On Novelty

"I would like to say a word further which I am sure will prove of interest to your readers. I wish to be taken seriously when I say that it is my firm conviction that novel as they are, novelty is the least of the attraction value of 'Visual Symphonies.' I cannot make that too strong and I will present my reasons, leaving it for you and your readers to decide whether or not they are adequate. Whether a lyric should be written to fit a musical compositon, or whether the composer should endeavor to suit the mood of his music to the words, has long been a subject of controversy, but when they are happily wedded, as it were, the words always suggest the tune, and the tune always suggests the words, even to the ears of unmusical people.

"Can you imagine the people accepting any other words for the melody of 'Way Down the Suwanee River,' or any other music for the words of 'Home, Sweet Home'? Certainly not, you say. But in the case of a great instrumental composition like 'The Dance of Death,' for instance, or the 'Peer Gynt Suite,' familiar as the latter is, only the trained musician, or the true student of music, has sufficient knowledge of the intentions and ideas of the composer to enjoy more than the melodies, the combinations of pleasing sound, the harmonies of the composition.

Sees New Musical Era

"Yet the people, trained and untrained alike, love great music. The big sellers—phonograph records—include Caruso, Homer and other operatic stars whose marvelous voices are seldom heard in English, Kreisler and Elman, who give instrumental selections only, and it is safe to say that there are possibly only a few people who buy these who get from them any mental visions such as delight the soul of the true student of music. The ear is tickled but the intellect receives no impressions.

"When people learn that the great musical compositions of the world are to be interpreted by great stars who have given their lives to the study, and that in addition to hearing the music itself these interpretations are to be visualized on the familiar screen, there is going to be nothing short of another musical awakening, comparable only to that brought about by the universal acceptance and ownership of phonographs."

Press Reviews of "White Hands" Abound in Praise of Its Cast

When "White Hands," the Graf Production starring Hobart Bosworth, was given a pre-release showing at the new Granada Theatre, in San Francisco, it was given a glowing reception, according to local newspapers. Bosworth, the star, made a number of personal appearances during the run of the production at the Granada, telling interestingly how some of the "punch" scenes of "White Hands" were made. The star added to the effect of his "brute" portrayal in the picture, as he had a heavy beard, raised in preparation for his next Max Graf picture.

"There is no questioning Hobart Bosworth's ability as an actor," read the review in the San Francisco Call and Post. "He stands without equal in the particular field to which he has devoted his screen efforts.

"His supporting cast has been selected with rare judgment. It includes such players as Robert McKim, also cast in a villain role, at which he too is most adept; Elinor Fair as leading woman; Baby Muriel Frances Dana, the precocious child actress, whose little white hands it is that softens the heart of the brutal ship captain; Freeman Wood, who gives an excellent portrayal of the drink-sodden youth, and Al Kaufman, ex-heavyweight prize fighter. In the matter of direction, no one could find fault with the work of Lambert Hillyer. In fact, one seldom finds better continuity in a screen play nor action more convincingly carried out."

The San Francisco Examiner said, in part:

"'White Hands' is well made, with a strong, direct story conveying much dramatic power. In the strong, virile production there is little to merit adverse criticism. The Bosworth character is a big, rough one, played in a big way. Robert McKim's villainy, entirely out of the line of this polished film villain's accustomed work, shows superb acting. Baby Muriel's acting could hardly be surpassed, and the pretty heroine, Miss Fair, and the other principals, all do good work." "White Hands," according to the report from the Granada, packed the new 3,000-seat house every day during its run.

"Nero's" Magnitude

Something of the magnitude of "Nero," which J. Gordon Edwards has recently completed in Rome for William Fox, is indicated by word received that 125,000 feet of film was taken in making the massive scenes. Mr. Edwards is now busy cutting this mass of film before starting on another big special to be made abroad.

Showing of "Battle of Jutland" at Naval War College at Newport Asked for by Rear Admiral Sims

Following the showing of the three-reel special, "The Battle of Jutland," at the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis and at the Marine Barracks in Washington, Rear Admiral William S. Sims, hero of the World War and now president of the Naval War College at Newport, has requested a showing at the War College. "I have received reports from officers who have seen the film showing * * * that it would be highly desirable to arrange for an exhibition of it before the present class," said the Admiral.

Work on the prints of the picture is being rushed to completion. Much tedious work had to be done on the prints, such as the painting by hand 200 feet of the picture. All prints are expected to be shipped to the exchanges within a few days, however, so that one of the two English prints from which much of the work was done, will be available. One of these will be sent to the Naval War College so that the class, consisting of a large number of naval officers, can see the picture as it was originally made.

The picture has been retitled for distribution to American theatres.

This production is said to have attracted unusual attention from army and navy officers in Washington when it was shown at the Marine Barracks following the program at Annapolis. The audience at the Naval Academy was comprised largely of officers on duty there and the students. At the Washington showing many theatre owners and representatives of the press were present, and several correspondents of newspapers sent special dispatches to their papers about the showing.

"The Battle of Jutland" is the first special subject to be released by Educational Film Exchanges in 1922. It is recognized as a fine example of the work motion pictures can be made to do in the recording of history. It has been commented upon editorially by many newspapers throughout the country.

Paramount Starts Advertising Campaign for "Saturday Night"

The Paramount publicity and advertising department has launched a big advertising campaign for Cecil B. DeMille's newest super-special production, "Saturday Night," which is scheduled for general release February 5. The picture, incidentally, has been booked for simultaneous pre-release showing in New York at the Rialto and Rivoli theatres commencing Sunday, January 22.

Heralding the general release of the picture, the Saturday Evening Post in its issue of February 4, will carry a double-page advertisement announcing that it will be shown during the following week at more than 250 theatres throughout the country. In this day and date booking Paramount is followed the policy used so successfully with "The Affairs of Anatol," which production set up new attendance records in first-run houses in every section of the United States, it is said.

Exhibitors Praise H. Lloyd Comedy

"Harold Lloyd's newest triumph, 'A Sailor-Made Man,' continues to sweep on to unprecedented heights of success," declare Associated Exhibitors. A letter from Merle Davis, general manager of the Ansonia Amusement Co., which operates theatres in Butte and Helena, Mont., says:

"We have just finished playing Harold Lloyd in 'A Sailor-Made Man' at our Ansonia Theatre. Words fail me when I try to express to you how good I consider this master comedy."

This is quite in line with the tribute of praise accorded the production, as a record breaking attraction, by John Hamrick of the Blue Mouse Theatre, Portland, Ore., and several other prominent exhibitors in various sections of the United States. In Indianapolis, for example, Charles Olson of the Alhambra Theatre played 'A Sailor-Made Man" and "Tropical Love' as a companion, and did the biggest business in the history of the Alhambra Theatre. This also applies to the Murrette Theatre of Richmond. In Charleston, W. Va., the Strand stood them out for an entire week.

Capitol Books "Grim Comedian"

Rita Weiman's first original screen story, "The Grim Comedian," produced by Goldwyn, has been booked for showing at the Capitol Theatre, New York, the week begining Sunday, January 22.

"The Grim Comedian" is a dramatic story of life behind the scenes on the New York stage in which an actress-mother battles to keep her past life from her daughter and to keep her daughter from falling into the arms of her own lover from whom she had parted when her daughter was ready to leave the convent and return to her mother. Phoebe Hunt, who acted the lead in Miss Weiman's stage play, "The Acquittal," plays the role of the mother, while Jack Holt is the Martin in the cast. Gloria Hope appears as the daughter. Others in the cast are Bert Woodruff, Laura Lavarnie, Mae Hopkins, John Haron and Joseph J. Dowling. Frank Lloyd directed the picture.

Do you want to do your kid or somebody else's kid a genuine favor? There is a hint on Page 379.

"A Doll's House" for February Release

Nazimova's first film production for United Artists Corporation, Henrik Ibsen's "A Doll's House," will be released to exhibitors February 12.

Charles Bryant, who directed Nazimova in this famous Ibsen classic, speaks of it as the greatest picture this celebrated screen and stage star ever has made, and calls it a masterpiece from a masterpiece.

With Nazimova, who organized her own production company that her personal interpretation of the character might not be hampered, is a cast of unusual supporting strength, it is said. Alan Hale is the leading man.

Vignola's Next to Be Released Soon

Robert G. Vignola's latest Cosmopolitan production, "Beauty's Worth," has been completed and will soon be released through Paramount. This is Mr. Vignola's first production since "Enchantment," his current release which has been breaking records all over the country.

Marion Davies is starred and it is the consensus of opinion of those who have seen this production privately that it is a far better production in every respect than "Enchantment."

The production was written by Sophie Kerr and put into scenario form by Luther Reed.

Most of this production was made in California where the unusually beautiful scenery offered the proper background. The interiors were designed by and executed under the supervision of Joseph Urban.

"Molly O" and "Hail the Woman," First National Pictures, Are Held for Second Week in 'Frisco

There are not many precedents left in San Francisco motion picture theatre circles—thanks to "Molly O" and "Hail the Woman."

These two First National attractions opened simultaneously in the Golden Gate City on December 25, each for a scheduled one week run, "Molly O' at the California Theatre and "Hail the Woman" at the Tivoli.

As the week drew to a close the management hurriedly booked their respective attractions for another week. Thus was Precedent No. 1 left prone, for never before in the history of the city has such a situation existed—two attractions of one company receiving simultaneous extensions to two weeks.

The newspapers of San Francisco shattered the second precedent in publishing a second review in connection with the announcement of the holdovers, and reiterating their fulsome praise of both productions.

Excerpts from the second reviews of "Molly O' follow:

The Call says: "'Molly O' continues with undiminished popularity at the California, where yesterday it entered its second week. Mabel Normand, as the irrepressible Molly, has achieved a personal triumph in this picture, which eclipses anything she ever did before, and which rivals the best performances of many other screen stars."

The Bulletin: "'Molly O' opened its second week at the California Theatre yesterday with banner crowds still in attendance. There is no getting around the fact that no matter what critics may say of 'Molly O,' it is getting over 100 per cent. with the audiences, and that in the last analysis is probably the only real standard to judge a picture by."

The Chronicle: "'Mabel Normand's big comedy drama, 'Molly O,' produced by Mack Sennett, which entered upon the second and final week of its run at the California Theatre yesterday, has a modern Cinderella theme, a Tipperary lilt and an Eddie Rickenbacher finish. Miss Normand is adorable throughout the picture, with her beautiful face and tresses and her ready wit."

The Examiner: "Mabel Normand has always done her best work under the banner of Mack Sennett and in 'Molly O,' which opened its second week at the California yesterday, this truth is again demonstrated. Not since 'Mickey' has the vivacious Miss Normand been cast in a role which fitted her so well."

The "re-reviews "on "Hail the Woman" read in part: The Daily News: "Thomas H. Ince's great picture, 'Hail the oman,' which had its world premiere here at the Tivoli Theatre a week ago, remains for a second week at that house. The production has a verity that isn't often found in pictures and the cast is made up of players who have not only reputation but ability and skill."

The Call: "'Hail the Woman' proved a pronounced attraction at the Tivoli last week and the production opened its second week yesterday."

The Examiner: "Thomas H. Ince's superb production, 'Hail the Woman,' kept the Tivoli thronged all yesterday, when a second week of this unusual offering was begun."

The Chronicle: "With a cast of stars, chosen not only for their dramatic ability but for their special fitness for the roles, 'Hail the Woman' continues to prove a drawing card at the Tivoli."

The success of "Hail the Woman" is being duplicated in every city where it has been shown and the critics have been practically unanimous in their praise of it. At the Garden Theatre in Davenport, Iowa, many persons saw it two or three times, the manager reported, and it was proclaimed by many as a better picture than "The Miracle Man" and "Way Down East."

Cruze Film Coming

Following the completion of his Paramount picture, "Across the Continent," Wallace Reid will next make Richard Harding Davis's play, "The Dictator," under the direction of James Cruze.

Inquire About Metro Picture

The number of inquiries from exhibitors either by telegraph or by letter, which have come to the Metro exchanges and to the home offices of the company, regarding "Turn to the Right," promises to exceed even the multitude "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" called forth, it is reported. The production, directed by Rex Ingram, is to be released February 27.

New York Critics Unanimous in Praise of Goldwyn Film

Katharine Newlin Burt, author of "The Branding Iron" and "Snowblind," two of Goldwyn's most successful red-blooded western dramas, has added to her screen reputation with her new melodrama, "The Man From Lost River," which was screened this week at the Capitol Theatre, New York.

Mrs. Burt, Frank Lloyd, the director, and House Peters and Fritzi Brunette, the featured players, received much praise for their work in the film from the New York critics who reviewed the picture.

The Telegraph said "There is no mention of Frued or modern soul surgery from start to finish," while The Tribune contended that "the big outdoors is fascinating on the screen. House Peters has always been one of our favorite heroes." Journal of Commerce called it "a powerful photodrama of conflicting love interest," and the Herald agrees that Goldwyn always has exceptional success with its forest scenes."

World said: "Photographed in the usual fashion of the Goldwyn company. It is attractive entertainment of its kind," while The News raved that "it's ninety per cent," and the Sun critic said it "has outbursts of elemental passion. Gets much of its strength from the towering redwood trees." Globe backs the contention that it is "an interesting picture."

"The Masquerader" in Third Week

Richard Walton Tully's production, "The Masquerader," is now in its third week at the United Studios. The cast of the future First National attraction consists of Guy Bates Post, one of the most distinguished actors of the speaking stage; Edward W. Kimball, Ruth Sinclair (in private life Mrs. Irving Cummings), Herbert Standing, Lawson Butt, Barbara Tennant, Marcia Manon and Kenneth Gibson. James Young is directing. Wilfred Buckland has been engaged as art director and Georges Benoit is assisting in the production of "The Masquerader." Milano Tilden, formerly stage manager for Mr. Post, is acting in a similar capacity with "The Masquerader" company.

Pathe Has New Prize Contest Plan; Classification Period of Six Weeks

One of the severest tests to which the Pathe sales organization has ever been subjected, will be inaugurated on January 16, when a six weeks' qualifying competition prior to the annual "Brunet Anniversary Contest," which this year will run from February 27 to March 25, will be opened.

The preliminary contest will be staged to determine into which of five divisions the various branches will be classified when the final four weeks' drive of "Brunet Anniversary Contest" for the big prizes offered by Pathe, will be conducted. The prizes range from $2,500 down to $500 for the winning teams in each division.

Geographical lines will be wiped out in determining the classes into which each branch will be placed, inasmuch as increases in collections and new business, rated on a fifty-fifty basis, will be the deciding factor. Seven branches will make each of the first four divisions, and the remaining six exchanges will enter the fifth and last division. Branch quotas for the qualifying contest will be exactly one-half of the sales and collection figures at each branch for the three four-week periods ending December 17.

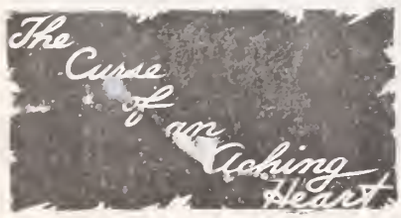
In division one, the capital prize for which is $2,500, will be placed the seven branches recording the biggest increase in collections and new business over the period specified. In the second division will be the next seven high branches, competing for a prize of $1,500. The seven succeeding branches will be in division three, wherein they will fight for a $1,000 prize, and in the fourth division come the next seven, contesting for a $750 award. The fifth and final class will be composed of only six branches, accounting for the entire thirty-four Pathe exchange offices, with the winner receiving $500.

In each instance the prize basis of 40 per cent. for the branch manager, and 60 per cent. to be shared equally among all the winning Pathe salesmen, booker, cashier, and the assistant branch manager. Provision has been made that in any instance of a tie, the full award will go to each branch thus tieing.

In several respects the present Pathe contest contains provisions novel to such competition, and by stretching over a period of ten weeks eliminates to a great entent the possibilities of luck figuring in the outcome. As Elmer Pearson, general manager of Pathe, expressed it when he announced the contest, "the winners figuratively will have to take off their coats, roll up their sleeves and work as they never worked before."

The quota for each branch during "Brunet Anniversary Contest" will be one-third of its total in collections and sales for the three four-week periods ending December 17.

Contracts recorded up to midnight at Saturday, February 25, will be credited in the qualifying test. "Brunet Anniversary Contest," opening Monday, February 27, will close at midnight, Saturday, March 25.



"Over the Hill" Maintains Pace

New glory is daily added to the record of "Over the Hill," the big Fox special which enjoyed a solid year's run on Broadway, New York. Its reception by exhibitors throughout the South, where it is now making its way, is most enthusiastic.

Record runs have been established, it is said, by every theatre in the key cities of Texas where the production has been shown.. Theatres which heretofore have considered a three-day engagement as unusual, have played "Over the Hill" for a week. Exhibitors who never held a picture more than a week, found that the Fox special continued to attract capacity houses after the second and third week.

Holubar Starts on "The Soul Seeker"

Allen Holubar has gone to San Francisco with his cameraman, Byron Haskins, to take atmosphere shots for Dorothy Phillip's next starring vehicle, "The Soul Seeker," the locale of which is laid in San Francisco. To have taken his large cast and many production aides to the Bay City would have been too expensive.

To Start New Film

George Melford at the Lasky is making preparations to start his next special production for Paramount about the 23d of January. The new picture will be "The Cat That Walked Alone." Dorothy Dalton will be starred.

Exhibitors Highly Interested in Fox's Anniversary Week

Exhibitors throughout the United States and Canada have responded whole-heartedly to the suggestions for the celebration of Fox Anniversary Week, January 29 to February 4 inclusive, according to an announcement from the offices of Fox Film Corporation. The week named will mark the 18th milestone in the progress of one of the oldest motion picture producers and distributors in the industry in point of service to the public. More than ninety-five per cent of the Fox exhibitors in the United States have booked Fox features, comedies, animated cartoons and specials for the anniversary week, according to statistics offered by the Fox contract department.

The new year sees for Fix Film Corporation the institution of educational and industrial divisions, headed by Herbert E. Hancock, with the title of Director of the Education and Industrial Divisions. This department will operate independently of the company's other enterprises and production of specified subjects will be on a decidedly extensive scale.

Don Hancock, director-in-chief of Fox News, recently departed for Europe, where he will institute a more complete service and correspondence.

Among the super-special productions scheduled for release in 1922 are "Nero," the J. Gordon Edwards picture made at the Rome, Italy, studios of Fox; "Monte Cristo," starring John Gilbert under the direction of Emmett J. Flynn and produced on the West Coast; a picture directed by Herbert Brenon, made in New York and starring William Farnum; and another Harry Millarde feature said to be on a par with "Over the Hill," his great success. Pictures are planned for Shirley Mason, Tom Mix, Charles Jones, William Russell, Pearl White, Eileen Percy, Barbara Bedford, Maurice Flynn, Johnnie Walker, Edna Murphy, Dustin Farnum, William Farnum, Clyde Cook, Al St. John and Lupino Lane. These in addition to the regular output of Sunshine Comedies and Mutt and Jeff Cartoons.

Civic and Literary Bodies Praise Hodkinson Films

Dr. Arthur A. Bostwick, secretary of the libraries of St. Louis, Mrs. John S. Payne, chairman of the Federation of Women's Clubs, and more than three hundred members of the representative civic and literary organizations of that city were guests at a private showing of the Hugo Ballin-Hodkinson production, "Jane Eyre," in the Delmar Theatre last Friday.

The showing of "Jane Eyre" at the Delmar preceded a date-and-date engagement of seven days at the Delmar and Criterion Theatres beginning January 14th.

The showing was arranged by Branch Sales Manager Bradford of the Hodkinson St. Louis office, and Hector M. E. Pasmezoglu, Greek Consul at St. Louis and proprietor of the Delmar, Criterion and Congress Theatres.

The audience was one of the most distinguished ever assembled for the purpose of reviewing a motion picture in St. Louis. Headed by Secretary Bostwick of the St. Louis Libraries, the assemblage was unanimous in its praise of the production and several leaders of the various organizations represented took occasion to speak publicly in praise of the story and the excellent work of the producer in adapting Charlotte Bronte's classic to the screen.

Three other Hodkinson-released productions have been booked for day-and-date engagements at the Delmar and Criterion begining the weke after the engagement of "Jane Eyre." These productions are "A Certain Rich Man," a Benj. B. Hampton production; "The Light in the Clearing," a Dial Film production, and "Fifty Candles," Irvin V. Willat's most recent contribution to the screen. Each of these productions will be shown a solid week at the Delmar and Criterion Theatres.

A McGowan Picture

The next J. P. McGowan feature to be released by Playgoers Pictures is "Reckless Chances," a railroad story.

"French Heels" Sheet Ready

The exhibitor's press book on "French Heels," the first of a series of four Hollywood-Hodkinson productions starring Irene Castle, was published this week. The book is in twelve pages and the color scheme is black, green and blue. The second page of the book is devoted to an editorial and sales talk on Mrs. Castle. The third page contains the cast with a brief biography of each player. The fourth and fifth pages contain the story and its highlights illustrated with eight important scenes in the story.

Pages five and six constitute the exploitation. Page eight contains lobby and prologue suggestions. Page nine contains reproductions of the lobby display stills. A mail campaign is arranged on page ten, program copy and catch-lines are provided on page eleven, and the posters and slide are reproduced on the back cover.

Alden and Landis in Leading Roles

Goldwyn will release within a short time its first Alice Duer Miller photoplay, an original screen story, "The Man With Two Mothers." Mary Alden is the featured player. Cullen Landis is cast as a young Irishman. Sylvia Breamer plays opposite Landis, while others in the cast are Hallam Cooley, Fred Huntly, Monti Collins and William Elner. Paul Bern, now head of Goldwyn's editorial and scenario department, directed "The Man With Two Mothers."

"The Hottentot" a T. H. Ince Comedy

"The Hottentot," a Thomas H. Ince comedy special, will be released by First National. It is now in process of production at the Ince studios in Culver City.

"Ruling Passion" Listed for February

"The Ruling Passion," second of the George Arliss photoplays to be released by United Artists Corporation, has been definitely fixed for general release on February 19, though this new feature will have a pre-release showing at the Strand Theatre, New York, the week beginning Sunday, January 22.

Much is expected of this Arliss production by the producers for the reason that it will present this screen and stage star in a role entirely different from anything he ever has attempted.

"The Ruling Passion" is a comedy drama based on the story "Idle Hands" by Earl Derr Biggers, and published last summer in a widely read magazine. It was adapted from the Earl Derr Biggers story by Forrest Halsey and directed by Harmon Weight.

Metro Chooses Title for Film

"Missing Husbands" is the title Metro has chosen for the French production of "L'Atlantide," bought recently in Paris by Richard A. Rowland for American and Canadian distribution.

Personal Stunts for "Musketeers"

Fred Gillen, general manager of the Strand Theatre, Binghamton, N. Y., used the telephone to splendid advantage recently when the Douglas Fairbanks feature, "The Three Musketeers," a United Artists release, was shown at the Strand.

All persons on the mailing list of the house were called on the telephone instead of being sent the usual mail notice. While this telephone exploitation was going on Mr. Gillen himself was making a personal call at all schools of the more advanced grade, where he had been given permission to talk briefly to the students outlining the story of the picture.

Ballin Film at 41 New York Houses

"Jane Eyre," the Hugo Ballin production, will have its New York opening January 22 at the Sheridan Theatre, and is booked immediately thereafter in 41 New York City houses.

Mr. and Mrs. Ballin, in response to urgent requests from many Chicago exhibitors, left Saturday night to be present at the first run openings of "Jane Eyre" in that city, returning in time for the New York opening in the Sheridan Theatre.

"Lady Godiva" a March Release

The screen version of Lord Alfred Tennyson's "Lady Godiva," a Wistaria Production special, is to be released by Associated Exhibitors in March. Its first presentation will be preceded by an extensive publicity campaign of nation-wide scope, which will include syndicated articles, rotogravure lay-outs and special feature stories, in many newspapers.

J. W. Horne Film a February Release

"Don't Doubt Your Wife," made by Leah Baird Productions, will be a February release of Associated Exhibitors. The production was directed by James W. Horne under the supervision of Arthur F. Beck.

"Silent Call" First National Film at Capitol

S. L. Rothafel has selected "The Silent Call," a Lawrence Trimble-Jane Murfin production released through First National, as the feature at the Capitol, New York, for week of January 22.

This is said to be one of the novelties of the season as the "star" is "Strongheart," a massive police dog. He was imported by Miss Murfin after he had made a record on the battlefield and in bench shows in Belgium and Germany. "The Silent Call" was adapted by Miss Murfin from a Saturday Evening Post story, "The Cross Pull," written by Hal G. Evarts. Mr. Trimble directed the production.

The picture is "99 per cent" outdoors stuff, with several big fights between the dog and the "heavy" of the story. John Bowers and Kathryn McGuire head the cast, which also includes William Dyer, James Mason, Nelson McDowell, E. J. Brady and Robert Bolder.

Vitagraph Film at Cameo Theatre

"Flower of the North," the Vitagraph special, adapted from the novel by James Oliver Curwood, will open at the new Cameo Theatre, 42nd street and Broadway, on Saturday, January 14.

Neva Gerber in New Film

Neva Gerber in the Arrow-Ben Wilson drama, "The Price of Youth," heads a cast which includes Spottiswood Aiken, Jack Pratt and many others prominent on the silver sheet.

The action of the play concerns itself with many phases of New York life and gives the star an opportunity of manifesting her wide range of acting ability. The little girl impersonated by Miss Gerber comes to New York to study music and she is instantly set upon by the prowling adventurers that infest Manhattan. But the girl doesn't come off second best in the contest. Far from it. She wins out by defying some of the toughest characters in New York.

Appropriate Stage Settings for Film

Photographs of stage settings and prologues sent in to Vitagraph's executive offices by branch managers and by exhibitors who have played Vitagraph's new production, "The Little Minister," indicate a surprising intimacy with the art of James M. Barrie, Vitagraph states. The public screenings of the past week have been coupled largely with elaborate stagings of scenes reflective of the Scotch atmosphere of the piece, it is said.

Educational Films at New Theatre

Educational Pictures occupy prominent places on the opening and early programs of two new Los Angeles suburban theatres, the Rivoli, which was opened December 15, and the Granada, which gave its first program December 22.

"The Vagrant," an Educational-Mermaid Comedy with Lloyd Hamilton in the featured role, was on the opening program of the Rivoli, while the Granada opened with "Fresh from the Farm," an Educational-Christie Comedy, featuring Bobby Vernon, who also appeared in person.

"The Kid" Pleases English Royalty

A command performance of "The Kid" was given at Sandringham Palace, in England. January 2, according to advice received by Associated First National Pictures, Inc. King George, Queen Mary, the Mother Queen Alexandra, the King and Queen of Norway and some five hundred guests packed the royal ball room, and are said to have been delighted by the work of Charlie Chaplin and Jackie Coogan. The cable adds that their Majesties personally complimented First National's London representative, expressing their pleasure over the entertainment the production had afforded them.

Anita Stewart at Work Again

Anita Stewart's new picture, "Rose o' the Sea," went into production this week at the Louis B. Mayer studio with Fred Niblo directing. The novel was written by Countess Baroynska.

Rudolph Cameron, the star's husband and manager, will be her leading man. Thomas Holding, Hal Cooley and Kate Lester have also been secured.

Due January 16

Now that the prints of the first two rounds of "The Leather Pushers" series are in the hands of the exchanges, Universal is receiving daily confirmation of its first estimate of the H. C. Witwer stories which appeared in Collier's. The idea of the stories themselves and the way in which they have been carried out is so unusual that Mr. Laemmle immediately put them on the exclusive Jewel basis and they will be released to exhibitors as the Universal - Jewel - Collier's Series. The first is due January 16.

Satirize Gotham

Music mad young girls from all over the country who want to go to New York for the purpose of embarking upon a musical career should certainly take the warning in the Arrow-Ben Wilson picture starring Neva Gerber which is shortly to be released. Miss Gerber has a wonderful part which gives her every opportunity for displaying her abilities as an actress and her charm as a beautiful star.

At Loew's Theatre

Loew's New York Theatres are playing Lee Moran's first Century Comedy release, "The Straphanger."

Criterion Books First National "Red Hot Romance"

"Red Hot Romance," a John Emerson-Anita Loos production released through Associated First National, has been booked to open at the Criterion Theatre, New York, for an indefinite run, starting January 22.

The story was written and directed by Mr. Emerson and Miss Loos and is typical of their humorous style. It deals with the trials of a rich man's heir who is ordered to make good in the life insurance game before he can inherit the old boy's fortune. As his sweetheart is in a hectic tropical republic, the boy decides that's a fine place to sell insurance.

Joseph M. Schenck is presenting the picture through First National and the company is going to give it an exceptional publicity and exploitation start. The cast includes Basil Sydney, Frank Lalor, former musical comedy star; Tom Wilson, who was the cop in Chaplin's "The Kid;" Snitz Edwards, another musical comedy comedian; May Collins, Carl Stockdale, Olive Valerie, Ray Atwell, Henry Warwick and Edward Connelly.

Engages Director

Julius Stern announces that he has engaged Tom Buckingham to direct Henry Sweet. He has also given little Jackie Morgan a contract to play with Brownie, the Century Wonder dog, in his next picture. Baby Peggy Brownie's usual starring partner, is engaged in making comedies at the head of her own company of grown ups.

"Little Lord Fauntleroy" Gets Praise from Cincinnati Critics

"Mary Pickford in 'Little Lord Fauntleroy' has her ideal role," in the opinion of the critic for the Cincinnati Post, who reviewed this United Artists release at Ascher's Capitol Theatre. "The part of the little Lord fits her like a glove, and as the mother, Dearest, she scarcely is less appealing. Her work in the dual role is the best of her screen career. The double exposure photography is better than any we have have seen."

"Mary Pickford's performance of 'Little Lord Fauntleroy'," says the critic for the Times-Star, "is intensely young, unbelievably childish in mood and motion. Her portrayal of Dearest, mother of the little earl, is a creation of daintiness and ruffles and old lace on shoulders young and gallant. The double role has been accomplished with genuine artistry."

"Thinking over Mary Pickford in 'Little Lord Fauntleroy'," said the reviewer for the Commercial Tribune, "we find it a picture to indisputably prove how grievously we are in need of more Marys and more little Lords, for not one of the thousands who saw it but left the theatre cleansed and refreshed, a better boy or girl, a better man or woman."

"Though it was a rare delight to read 'Little Lord Fauntleroy,' it is even a greater delight to see the film production of the beloved novel," said the critic for the Cincinnati Enquirer. "Mary Pickford, who plays both the mother and the affectionate little son, has in this feature attained the pinnacle of her splendid career."

Pathe Announces Acquisition of Noted European Production

Pathe announces this week the acquisition of one of the most celebrated of recent European motion picture productions, "Mathias Sandorf," from the Jules Verne romance bearing the same title. This is the Louis Nalpas production which enjoyed a first-run at 54 Paris theatres, with second, third and fourth-runs crowding more than double that number of houses, and which is now in the third month of a highly profitable engagement at Cirque D'Hiver, where it fills 2,000 seats at each performance.

Louis Nalpas has specialized in this class of production since his entrance into the cinema field in 1912. Among the outstanding productions supervised by himself are his "Monte Cristo" serial in seven episodes of five reels each. This was preceded by Dumas' "Three Musketeers." In 1918 he drew upon the Arabian Nights Entertainments for his big European feature success, entitled "The Sultana of Love," which was followed a year later by "Tristan and Isolde," for which he drew upon the original story source the English Round Table Legends of King Arthur and his Knights.

New Pictures for Douglas and Mary

Johnston McCulley, who wrote "The Mark of Zorro," is en route to California to confer with Douglas Fairbanks, Allan Dwan, Lotta Woods, chief of the scenario department, and Kenneth Davenport, who wrote "The Nut," with reference to a new story for Mr. Fairbanks, and it is considered likely that Mr. McCulley will evolve a sequel to "The Mark of Zorro."

Mary Pickford is preparing to start refilming "Tess of the Storm Country," but may be delayed due to legal matters which may cause her to return to New York. In the meantime, she will assist her brother, Jack Pickford, in preparing for his next feature, "The Tailor-made Man."

Florence Lawrence Comes Back in "The Unfoldment"

In the George Kearn production, "The Unfoldment," which is the current release of Associated Exhibitors, Florence Lawrence, at one time perhaps the most famous of all stars, achieves a most remarkable come-back, which has been commented upon by many exhibitors.

Assuming the role of an enterprising newspaper girl, and called upon to portray a part which demanded perfect sincerity and exceptional dramatic poise, Miss Lawrence is said to have done a remarkable piece of work.

"The Unfoldment" is a drama of intense devotion, of inspiring power and emotional appeal. It was released by Associated Exhibitors on January 1.

Paramounts Set for January 15

For January 15 Paramount has scheduled for release, Agnes Ayres in her first Paramount starring picture, "The Lane That Had No Turning," and Thomas Meighan in "A Prince There Was." The former is from a story of French-Canadian life, was adapted by Eugene Mullin and was directed by Victor Fleming. The work of Miss Ayres is said to fully justify her promotion to stardom. Chief in support are Mahlon Hamilton and Theodore Kosloff. Frank Campeau, Wilton Taylor, Lillian Leighton and Charles West are the others.

Meighan is an attractive hero in the Paramount version of George M. Cohan's romantic stage comedy, "A Prince There Was." Waldemar Young wrote the adaptation from the play which was originally adapted from the novel, "Enchanted Hearts," by Darragh Aldrich. Tom Forman directed. Mildred Harris plays the leading role opposite the star. Little Charlotte Jackson, Nigel Barrie, Guy Oliver, Sylvia Ashton, Fred Huntly and Arthur Hull are the others.

J. P. McGowan in Playgoers Film

The next Playgoers Pictures release is J. P. McGowan in "Reckless Chances," which is scheduled for January 15. This is a Herald production, directed by Mr. McGowan.

Christie Sets Up Ideal

Al Christie, who is producing the two-reel Christie Comedies for Educational's program of short pictures for the whole family, has set up an ideal for his comedy films which takes a lot of work to live up to.

"I want to preach to all our staff," says Christie, "the doctrine of do rather than listing a lot of disagreeable dont's. Don't rules are generally made to be broken, and I do not like rules around our studio anyway. I would rather set up a standard of things to try to do. Here is this standard for two-reel comedies:

"1. Get a plausible story which might happen to real people. It may be worked out farcically or in regular dramatic and logical sequence. But it must be entertaining.

"2. All the actors must look like human beings whom one might meet in every-day life.

"3. Take your time. It is not how many pictures you can make but how good you can make them. This advice is for directors particularly.

"4. If you are torn between sticking to the story or going afield for a laugh, stick to the story. If the story is amusing, the chuckles will take care of themselves.

"5. Make the backgrounds as beautiful as you can. Very few people will take particular notice of the expensive rug on the floor, but they certainly would take notice if the floor were bare.

"6. Try to act your part without trying to be funny.

"7. Try to seem to enjoy your work as much as possible. If you don't enjoy it, you should find some other work.

"8. Try to make your pictures for your own family. The majority of the people who see them in theatres are just like your own wife and kids.

"With these do's I reserve the right to add one don't. "It is—don't call me 'boss' or 'chief'."

As a matter of fact, Christie is just "Al" to most of his staff.

"The Prodigal Judge" Gets First Western Preview Showing at Hotel in California; Smith Present

Vitagraph's big special, "The Prodigal Judge," had its first Western preview showing last week at the Beverly Hills Hotel, one of the most fashionable hotels in Southern California.

Jean Paige is featured in this unusual super-feature, which was directed by Edward Jose. Both the star and the director were in the audience, as well as Albert E. Smith, Vitagraph's president, who, incidentally, accompanied the members of cast to various parts of the country when exterior scenes were being filmed for it.

The event was in the nature of a gala social occasion, and many notables of Southern California were present. Mr. Smith was the recipient of many sincere congratulations in causing Vaughan Kester's novel to be brought to the screen, as were its star and its director.

A few minutes after the final fade-out on the Beverly Hills screen, the film was on its way back East, and after a few suggestions of Mr. Smith's are carried out, the prints will be shipped to Vitagraph's various branch offices for release. Exhibitors all over the United States and Canada have evinced unusual interest in this picture, and the film will have its premiere at a well known New York City theatre in the near future.

"That 'The Prodigal Judge' will prove one of the very great motion pictures of 1922, seems certain," said Mr. Smith, "and those who have seen it express the opinion that, as in the case of "Black Beauty"—in which incidentally Jean Paige is also the star—its success and vogue will not be limited to any passing year. It is the consensus that, like certain books which grow upon the reading public with the passage of time, this picture will gather momentum as it is shown from time to time, by sincere word-of-mouth advertising born of the film's sheer excellence.

"We have a picture," continued Mr. Smith, "which is everything that we could hope for. This was the target aimed at, but we had no means of knowing whether or not we had made a bull's eye until the picture was actually projected. In writing the book, which was a best-seller the year that it was published but which, unlike many best-sellers, enjoyed a wide sale for years and is doing so today, Vaughan Kester seemed to catch a note of whimsicality which the cast of the picture, under Mr. Jose's direction, was able to transplant to the screen. Maclyn Arbuckle's delineation of the judge is masterful. On the screen, as in the book, the judge is a living, breathing, vibrant personality, never acting as a character in a book or a play acts. He proves himself a real human being. Sometimes it is with a friend's obstinacy that he proves his unaffected friendship, when a lack of obstinacy might prove only hypocrisy. If 'The Prodigal Judge' is not called one of the very best pictures of 1922, I will not only be disappointed but I will be very much surprised. One thing it is sure to be called, and everyone who has seen it agrees on this one point—it is certainly a highly unusual picture."

Trailers on "The Prodigal Judge" were recently shipped from Vitagraph's Brooklyn laboratory to its branch offices, and Vitagraph's managers report that exhibitors have seldom failed to be impressed with these. "The Prodigal Judge" will be a February release.

Seitz and "Hutch" Off for Saranac

Skis and the deep snows of the Saranac Lake region of the Adirondacks, with their serial "stunt" attractions for "Go-Get-'em Hutch," lured Producer George B. Seitz, Charles Hutchison and other members of the company away from Atlantic Coast locations January 9.

The continuity calls for some thrilling experiences on skis. With the snow "stunts" completed, the company will plunge directly into another extreme change of temperature, going direct to Florida. The new Pathe serial will be ready for early spring release.

"The Rosary" at Imperial Theatre

The world premiere showing of "The Rosary" was held in San Francisco. It began a two-weeks' run in the Golden Gate city on January 15 at the Imperial Theatre.

"The Rosary" is a Selig-Rork production released by First National.

First Pathe Playlet January 29; Also Serial and Lloyd Re-issue

The first of the Pathe Playlets, "The Midnight Stage," starring Frank Keenan, will head the strong schedule of Pathe releases for the week of January 29, which also includes a number of short subjects and a serial episode. In its re-edited three-reel form the film marks an innovation in motion picture presentation and one which Pathe believes will be eminently successful.

In its original form "The Midnight Stage" enjoyed success at the Rialto Theatre in New York, where it had its premiere. In its new form, with all "padding" eliminated, every element essential to dramatic appeal is increased. It combines fast action, dramatic tensity and a delightful love story. Frank Keenan is seen in a dual role, supported by Joseph Dowling, Charles Gunn, Mignon Anderson, Thomas Guise, Maude George, Wadsworth Harris and Ernest C. Warde, the latter also directing.

"She Loves Me Not" is the title of the latest re-issued one-reel comedy starring Harold Lloyd. He is assisted by Bebe Daniels, who is the object of his affections, and "Snub" Pollard, who appears as his friend and rival.

"The Miller and the Donkey" is the current animated cartoon of the series of "Aesop's Film Fables," produced by Fables Pictures, Inc., created for the screen by Cartoonist Paul Terry. "Years to Come" is the title of the current Hal Roach comedy featuring "Snub" Pollard. Marie Mosquini and Noah Young are in the cast.

"The Clash of the Clans" is the fifth episode of "White Eagle," the new Pathe serial starring Ruth Roland. Pathe Review No. 140 represents a series of entertaining subjects with two exquisite Pathecolor offerings dominating.

"Anatol" Given Big Reception

A cable received by E. E. Shauer, director of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, tells of the big reception given Cecil B. DeMille's "The Affairs of Anatol" on its premier at Sydney, Australia. Managing Director John W. Hicks, Jr., of Feature Films, Ltd., reports that the Paramount all-star special received the most enthusiastic welcome ever given a motion picture.

SCENES FROM "R. S. V. P.," STARRING CH ARLES RAY. A FIRST NATIONAL RELEASE

Keeping in Personal Touch

By FRITZ TIDDEN

JOHN McCORMICK, western representative for First National, staged an "all star" program of entertainment and education at the last meeting of the Western Motion Picture Advertisers in Hollywood.

The initial speaker of the evening was Laurence A. Lambert, president of the National Motion Picture Finance Corporation, who spoke on "Dollars and the Movies." Among other things Mr. Lambert repeated the request of other speakers before this organization, that publicity men should omit in their copy all reference to lavish expenditures and salaries expended in connection with picture making. Mr. Lambert is a well-known banking expert on the Pacific Coast and his talk gave the "Wampas" various new angles on film financing.

Charles Ray, popular First National star, was the next speaker. Mr. Ray told the publicity men of his experiences on his recent personal appearance tour. Richard Willis, of Willis and Inglis, and general manager of the Ray Studio, spoke on publicity in the old days and compared the old methods with modern exploitation ideas.

Harry Hammond Beall, chairman of the nominating committee, offered the following names for the consideration of the members to occupy the offices of the organization during the coming year: Arch Reeve, for president; Pete Smith, vice president; Michael Boylan, treasurer, and H. H. Beall, secretary. The board of directors was also submitted, five of which are to be elected. They are Barrett Kiesling, Harry D. Wilson, Pat Dowling, J. A. Jackson, Harry Brand, Roy Miller, John Rankin, Robert Doman, Ted LeBerthon and Scoop Conlon. Suggested auditing committee consists of Adam Hull Shirk, Robert Allen and Ted Taylor.

The annual election will take place on February 7 when the above slate and any other submitted for nomination will be voted upon. Plans for a monster entertainment were submitted by John McCormick. Ray Leek was appointed to get figures on such an affair and at the next meeting the matter will be gone into more fully.

The London Biograph republishes an item that it printed twelve years ago, which seems to have the same fascination for us that it has for Biograph.

"There is a tendency to multiply the number of long films. A plot has to be exceptionally good to sustain interest throughout 1,000 feet."

An idea in insurance that would have made the famous Lloyds' of London call for time was successfully carried out by Joe Lee, manager of "Sir Arnes' Treasure," the Swedish Biograph feature being shown at the Metropolitan Theatre, Minneapolis, this week. Lee has taken out insurance guaranteeing that the picture will not be shown at a lower price in that city later. If the picture plays there again, and plays to a lower price, patrons of the Metropolitan can get their money back. A bond to this effect has been filed by the Behrendt Levy Company, Los Angeles, the largest insurance brokers on the West Coast.

Minneapolis is the first city in the United States where this novel idea is to be in operation and the outcome is being watched with interest by the public and theatrical managers all over the country.

"The plan will undoubtedly be used in the future in every city of any size in the United States during the playing of special film productions," said Lee, who is American representative for the Swedish Biograph Company.

Metropolitan patrons need only to keep their ticket stubs. These will entitle them to a return of the admission price if, in the future, the picture returns here to the Metropolitan or some other house, and shows at a lower price, Lee announced.

Alice Brady, who has been playing in "Drifting" with Robert Warwick, was taken ill with appendicitis January 7, ten minutes before the curtain was to go up for the matinee at the Playhouse. She was taken to her home at 123 East Fifty-fifth street, and Saturday's performances were not given. It was said that probably there would not be an operation.

Helen Menken is now playing in "Drifting." After Miss Brady has recovered she will return to pictures and not the stage.

The January issue of Photoplay contains an editorial that should be read by everyone. In the event of your not seeting it in that magazine we publish it here:

"Yesterday we sent our office boy, on an errand of no particular importance, to the sanctum of a certain prominent censor. In due time he came back, the errand having been accomplished, with incredulity in his eyes and frank astonishment sounding from his voice.

"'Say,' he told us, 'that bird ain't so bad. He's almost a regular feller!'

"Our office boy was right. The censor, as an individual, wasn't so bad. But—

"Take posion ivy, for instance. If you leave the question of infection out of it (as you can't), it's as pretty a vine as the Virginia creeper or the trailing woodbine.

"And the bee—so long as it doesn't sting you—is as colorful and vivid as a butterfly.

"And many snakes, that carry swift death in their fangs, are marked with splashes of gold and emerald. And they blend, very nicely, with the foliage of a sunny forest place.

"And some oysters carry pearls under their grey shells—and some carry ptomaine poisoning. And, from the outside, they all look alike.

"Censors, when you leave their profession out of the argument, are apt to be not very different from other men. They are doubtless good husbands and fathers. They are sometimes successful in business and social life.

"But—like snakes and poison ivy and bees and even occasional oysters—you can't leave their profession out of the argument!"

Great Scott, and do I read the news aright—
Einstein the latest film-producing groove is?
Was it for this I made them my delight,
And forswore even music-halls for movies?
Is this the cloud, no bigger than a hand?
Is this the flash that shows me where I stand?
I fear this new and most unwelcome dish
Prepared by the abstruse and learned Teutons;
Instead of Fairbanks, Nazimova, Gish,
Will films now "feature" names like Kant's or Newton's?
Must algebra and Euclid take the place
Of Chaplin's antics and of Pickford's grace?

Is this the fate prepared for me, the lamb
Who would not hear his doom resounding louder:
Were Gish and Pickford just the dose of jam
Designed to introduce this final powder?
Was even Chaplin but the lure that led
To Einstein and these other names of dread?
Back, back and let me rescue from collapse
The stage that never harbored such intentions,
Which gave me highbrow problem plays, perhaps,
But never stunts involving four dimensions!
Back to the boards that Irving trod with zest—
Too long I've nursed a viper at my breast!

The new Orpheum Circuit Theatre, now in course of construction at Eighth and Hill streets, will be ready for its formal opening to the public early in March, according to announcement made this week.

The new house will bear the name of "The Hillstreet," and will be one of the largest amusement houses in Los Angeles, seating 3,000 persons. The theatre will have every modern convenience for its patrons. A large pipe organ will be installed, and an orchestra will be maintained to furnish music to accompany the feature pictures and vaudeville acts of a show that will be continuous from 11 a. m. to 11 p. m. Fifty cents will be the maximum price of admission.

Martin Beck, president of the Orpheum Circuit; Mort H. Singer, vice-president, and Floyd B. Scott, general press representative, arrived in Los Angeles this week to inspect the new house and to perfect plans for its future operation.

First of "Leather Pushers" Series Released on January 16; Prints in Universal Exchanges

Now that the prints of the first two rounds of "The Leather Pushers" series are in the hands of the exchanges, Universal is receiving daily confirmation of its first estimate of the H. C. Witwer stories which appeared in Collier's. The idea of the stories themselves and the way in which they have been carried out is so unusual and novel that Mr. Laemmle immediately put them on the exclusive Jewel basis and they will be released to exhibitors as the Universal-Jewel-Collier's Series.

"We have had a great variety of series of pictures," said H. M. Berman in discussing the releasing arrangements for "The Leather Pushers." "Many of the subjects are still popular; some are worn out. 'The Leather Pushers,' however, strikes an entirely new note in subject matter for moving pictures. If anyone had told me even a year ago that it was possible to maintain a continued interest in a series of pictures dealing with boxing and the prize fight ring, I would have laughed at them. In fact, if I had not seen several episodes of 'The Leather Pushers' series with my own eyes I would undoubtedly be laughing now.

"H. G. Witwer, the author, and Harry Pollard, the director, have evolved a combination of the prize fight ring, society and romance which not only are unique but which are little giants of story values and whirlwinds of action.

"Everyone in the New York office is absolutely convinced that the angle from which the 'Leather Pushers' attacks the spectator's interest is so sure-fire that we have had no hesitation whatever in our plan of campaign and it is very simple. In addition to an extremely full line of advertising, posters and the usual lobbies, we have ordered all of the exchange centers to introduce the first two episodes in a novel manner to the newspaper readers of these several cities.

"Inasmuch as these stories are about prize fighting, primarily, each exchange will invite the head of the Boxing Commission of his locality to witness the first showing of the pictures. To this showing will also be invited all of the sporting editors and prize fight writers of the city. This will be done before any of the exhibitors even see the pictures. After that, the individual showings to exhibitors are to take place.

"In our advertising and publicity we have taken every precaution, however, not to convey the impression that these pictures are exclusively prize fight pictures. As a matter of fact there are one or two fights in every one of the two-reel episodes, but they are so combined with love interest and the peculiar situation of the hero as a member of a socially prominent family as well as a boxer, that each story provides an entirely diversified interest."

Second Week for Curwood Feature

"Flower of the North," the Vitagraph super-production adapted from the novel by James Oliver Curwood, will continue at the Cameo Theatre, West 42nd Street, for another week. This gives the Vitagraph picture the distinction of being the first to play a two weeks' engagement at this theatre. The success of "Flower of the North" at the Cameo is only a repetition of the hearty approval the production has had where it already has been shown, and the great mass of bookings pouring into the Vitagraph offices indicates that this is one of the most pleasing visualizations of any of the Curwood stories.

"Flower of the North" differs from nearly all of the Curwood stories in that it relies on human actors alone, wild animals and sled-dogs being missing. Although laid in the Canadian Northwest the action takes places entirely in the summer with luxurious verdure for backgrounds and without the snow and ice and great waste places so familiar in most stories of the Northwest.

The picture was directed by David Smith, who had previously directed "The Courage of Marge O'Doone" and "Black Beauty." The leading roles are played by Henry B. Walthall and Pauline Starke.

In the Independent Field

By ROGER FERRI

The Passing Week in Review

AN exchange man from Salt Lake City sent a letter to this department this week. He is a successful business man—and an alert showman. He has bought box office pictures and has made money for himself and his exhibitor patrons. He is now seeking more such pictures and realizes that never before in the history of the State Rights market has there been such a large number of seemingly big box office bets. He sought quotations on several pictures for his territory. The figures submitted to him, however, literally "scared him stiff," as he put it. He came to New York a few days later, looked at the pictures in question and admitted that they were "big ones." But; there is a big but. He wanted the pictures, but if he paid the prices asked he would tie up all his money in a single picture—and he can not successfully operate an exchange on one picture. He must have quantity as well as quality.

IN his letter to this department this week this gentleman makes no protest—he is too good a business man to do that. He merely directed our attention to a state of affairs that has existed for the past few months. He does not deny that the pictures he saw were worth every penny that the distributors asked. He felt, too, that if he bought he could get his money back with a substantial profit on his investment. But he couldn't afford to buy what he admitted was what he wanted without jeopardizing his future. The point is well taken and readily understood by the trade in general.

THE trouble lies not in the value placed on meritorious productions of admittedly high class box office attraction power, but on the fact that there are some distributors, who, for no reason, are setting prohibitive prices on pictures that are not worth half what is asked for them. Pictures like "School Days," "Ten Nights In A Barroom," "Where Is My Wandering Boy," and the like are worth every penny of the value placed on them. Such productions will secure for the exchangeman a substantial profit on his investment. And he is entitled to a good profit. The man who has the confidence and grit to invest $10,000, and more, in a single picture in his territory is entitled to a greater return on his investment than the exchangeman who buys a picture for $1,000 and gives only $250 in cash and the rest in notes in payment for rights to that particular subject.

BUT the true facts concerning the status of the trade today seem to have been distorted in some way or other. In the first place, the market is not in the lucrative condition that many would want us to believe. It is improving gradually and there is every good reason for believing that 1922 will bring about many changes that will further stabilize the trade. Prospects for the future are exceedingly bright, but no one is making so much money that he can spend carelessly or foolishly. Every dollar must be weighed. There is very little blind buying. And yet there are some distributors who have accepted reports on splendid business on a limited number of big pictures as indicative of a most prosperous era. They have heard in the hotel lobbies and in the film buildings of the high prices paid for certain pictures. And this they have accepted as ample reason for shooting their prices skyward. They seem to cling to the suicidal belief that "high prices make good pictures." Nothing could be further from the truth.

FOR instance, there is one distributor who some three months ago bought a discarded negative of three thousand feet. He inserted two thousand feet of clever titles and has actually "sold" himself on the idea that he has a picture worth $100,000 to the exchangemen of the country. And he is trying to sell the picture on that basis. We use the word "trying" advisedly, for he has thus far not sold a single territory, and it is our belief that he will never sell any territory so long as he insists on the prohibitively absurd and unreasonable price he has set on his picture. This gentleman actually believes he is making a success of his "bluff." Interviewed by a representative of The Moving Picture World State Rights Department, he made the statement that others were "getting $100,000 and why can't I on a picture with a group of stars."

FOR two hours we tried in vain to point out the error of his way to this distributor. His only excuse for setting the high price on his picture was "because others were getting it." We asked him to name the distributors who were getting $100,000 for films not worth more than one-tenth that amount. He hesitated and evaded the question with assertion that he couldn't mention them "off hand." But even more amazing is the fact that this gentleman paid only $2,000 for the negative. Grant three thousand dollars more for the titles, etc., and the net cost of the five-reeler is $5,000. By what right does he demand a 2,000 per cent. profit on his possible $5,000 investment? He couldn't explain it other than to offer the excuse mentioned above. He said he had "stars." The "stars" he mentioned have little or no box office value today. The picture is not a reissue, true, but it most assuredly is not worth $100,000. At one-tenth the price it's more than the film is worth at the box office.

THIS is only one case. We cited it merely to emphasize our point that there are a certain number of distributors, who are setting prohibitive prices on pictures that ordinarily would sell for one-tenth the amounts asked for them. To be sure this class of distributors is very small and include virtually only those who bob up with a picture once every 12 or 18 months—and seek to make enough on that one production to enable them to live a life of ease until another "easy one" comes their way.

THESE "get-rich-quicks" should be eliminated without delay. They are a menace to the many reputable distributors in the market who are really turning out pictures that make money for exchanges and exhibitors. Distributors should unite and demand the withdrawal of these operatives from the field. The columns of the State Rights Department of The Moving Picture World are dedicated to the best interests and welfare of this market and the co-operation of this department in ridding the field of this and other evils is at the command of every legitimate distributor, producer, exchangeman and exhibitor.

SETTING prohibitive prices on worthless films is suicide. It's rotten business. One look at most of these pictures is enough to convince even the rank outsider that they are worthless. Yet there are a very few who would want the trade to believe that they are justified in asking enormous prices. However, there is one particularly encouraging phase to this situation and that is that virtually none of these worthless films are being sold. Which is conclusive proof that the era of prosperity for the "get-rich-quick" is no more. But let us play it safe. Let us make the "going" so "hot" they will have no course, other than legitimizing their methods or getting out.

I. P. D. A. Members Pool Claims Against Delinquent Exchanges

That the patience of independent producers and distributors in dealing with dishonest "exchangemen" has been exhausted was apparent this week when official information was given out that the State-right members of the Independent Producers and Distributors Association had pooled their interests and prepared to take drastic action against certain exchanges that have submitted delinquent and worthless checks in return for pictures. It was learned from a reliable source that one distributor alone submitted worthless checks given by these dishonest buyers that aggregated $55,000.

Members of the I. P. D. A. have delegated its counsel, Harry Kosch, to take legal action against these delinquents. It was explained that there are a few operatives who have made it a regular practice of buying rights to pictures, acquiring prints, that cost the distributors hundreds of dollars, and in return given checks not worth the paper on which they were written. Up to the present these persons have carried on their illegitimate practice unmolested and have forced the loss of hundreds of thousands of dollars on the distributors.

However, the distributors have finally solidly united their forces and have determined to stop this practice. Criminal action will be taken against those who have victimized or conspired to victimize either distributors or exhibitors. In this way, it is expected that the field will be rid of dishonest and crooked operatives for all time.

Equity's "Where Is My Wandering Boy" a Tribute to Independents

Equity Film Corporation officially confirmed this week the exclusive report published in this department that it had closed what is characterized as one of season's biggest deals when it acquired the B. F. Zeidman production, "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" Six national distributing organizations submitted bids for the super-feature, which is said to be one of the four big outstanding pictures produced last year. Its magnetic title, backed by an entertainingly human-interest story, promises a most lucrative future for exchanges and exhibitors who will clamor for the picture.

The deal was consummated by Messrs. B. F. Zeidman and Bernie Fineman for the producers and J. I. Schnitzer for Equity. Negotiations covered a period of three weeks. With publication in the Moving Picture World of the exclusive announcement of the acquisition came a deluge of inquiries from exchanges and exhibitors seeking further details concerning the picture, which Mr. Schnitzer announced will be distributed in the independent market.

An elaborate advertising and exploitation campaign already has been outlined by Equity on "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" Plans are underway for a trade paper campaign that will mark a new high mark for pictures released in the independent market, it is said. A questionnaire has been sent by Equity to representative exchangemen and theatres throughout the country, seeking opinions on the value of title. In every instance, the writer pleaded for popular titles—titles with which the public is acquainted.

Harry Warner Discusses Box Office Value of New Serial

Harry Warner of Warner Brothers in a statement this week claimed that his new animal serial, "Shadows of the Jungle," is a "monumental thriller containing as it does 15 episodes of breath-taking adventures with every known species of wild animal playing prominent parts in the production."

"Many of the first run houses throughout the country," said Mr. Warner, "the majority of which heve never before offered a serial as an attraction, will book this animal serial. It is the kind of an attraction that motion picture patrons most desire, the kind that will bring them back week after week to see what happens in each episode.
